AGENTS.

Rev. M. McG. Brown, acting to the Synod of North Carolina, is the authorized Agent for this paper.

An Agent wanted in every congregation. If it is inconvenient for the Minister to act, some other person will be appointed.

For every club of 50 cents will be paid for each NEW subscriber at $2 65.

In all communications, money should be sent through Post Office Orders, or in Registered Letters, in Checks, or by Express. Post Office Orders preferred, when they can be procured without too great inconvenience. Money may be sent by any of these methods, and if it our expense,—but when sent by any other way, it must be at the risk of the person sending it.

REFLECTIONS ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE YEAR.

The beginning of a new year has always been regarded as an appropriate season for reflection. The occasion requires us to look back upon the way in which we have been led, and we may rejoice in the goodness and faithfulness of God, while we cheerfully submit to the needed corrections of his hands. It is well to look into the secrets of our hearts, to mourn our opportunities neglected, evil affections indulged, sins committed, and see how our account stands with God, and what is our preparation for the judgment bar. It prompts us also to look forward into the untried future; and while blighted hopes and withered expectations may teach us how little we can depend upon the world, we should resolve to stand in our lot, whatever it may be; seize opportunities of usefulness as they are presented; and work while we might what our hands find to do. The night cometh when no man can work." We shall rest from our labors—when we arrive in heaven and not before.

The departure of days and years, and the consequent approach of death, are to most full of painful reflection. They feel the current of time rolling on with a power and force which nothing can resist and they see themselves borne forwards in the midst of the mighty stream downwards that ocean of eternity into which all rivers are ever pouring; and the thought terrifies them. They shudder and look back. But why should the flight of time or the approach of death be unwelcome to the christian, who is diligently engaged in his appointed work, and awaiting the expected hour of release? What has such a one to fear from death or from anything which lies beyond it? True he is going to the judgment; but the Judge is his adored Redeemer and his best friend. True, he is going into the eternal world; but in that world are treasured up all his hopes. There is heaven—the end of his pilgrimage, and the home of his heart. There is the eternal resting place, where Jesus has gone to prepare for his people. There are the "innumerable company of angels, and the general assembly and church of the first born, and God the judge of all, and the spirits of just men made perfect."

"There his best friends and kindred dwell;
There God his Saviour reigns."

What then does the Christian mourn over the departing years, and the consequent approach of eternal realities? How much we have to become him—as he looks backward upon scenes which never can return, and forward to those towards which he is hastening—to say and to sing, "welcome fleeting time! welcome departing hours and years! Heaven now ready to be offered up! The time of our departure is at hand! I desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better!" How inestimable is that religion which inspires hope and presents prospects such as these, which gives its possessor the victory over the world and time and death, and prompts him to "sing himself away to everlasting bliss!"

Reader, is this religion, with all its hopes and its consolations, yours? Are you an enrolled soldier and follower of the Lord Jesus, an enrolled member of his holy family and kingdom? Do not forget then your "high calling and your high obligations. Do not forget your solemn responsibilities to God and your brother man. The work before you is indeed great; but the cause in which you labor is glorious. Our divine Master expects every son and servant to do his duty; and for our encouragement he is addressing us individually from the skies: "Be thou faithful unto death." "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in His throne." Who would not be a member of this holy kingdom? Who would not flee from the ranks of the wicked, and take his lot and portion with the people of God!

There may be another reader of this column, whose eye when it falls upon it may gleam with no such heavenly light! Does the conscience of this reader admonish him that terms too significant to be mistaken, that he has neither part nor lot in the matter, because he is not right in the sight of God? Let him resolve then, in the strength of Heaven, before he lays down this paper, or rises from the seat on which he is sitting, that this year shall not be spent as the last—that this shall be a new year to his soul. Make this resolution now. Don't be afraid—and having made it, fear to trifle with it. It cannot be trifled with. Trifle with your father, trifle with your mother, but take care how you trifle with God and your soul. Then begin this new year with God, and spend it in his service. Spend it in such a manner, that should you be summoned away before its close, your end may be happy, and your immortality glorious. God bless you dear reader, and give you a Happy New Year. D. L.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR:—I wish to set forth the claims of Davidson College upon the good people of our State.

The point I propose to make is—that Davidson College as a school for thorough education, for first-class drill-work, is superior to any college which we have, or perhaps to any south of the University of Virginia.

The University of Virginia is by common consent of all who know anything about it, regarded as the first institution for thorough scholarship in the Southern States.

Now, of the six Professors at Davidson College, four are University of Virginia men, and one a Washington-Lee man, a college founded on the same plan, pursuing the same methods of instruction, and I think officered to a considerable extent by graduates of the University of Virginia. The whole plan and method of teaching at Davidson College its that of the confessedly best institution at the South, while the demands and requirements for passing examination are based on the strict examination required there. Men trained at the University of Virginia, do not allow low standards of scholarship, and the Professors at Davidson have made it their aim to require as strict scholarship so far as they carry their students, as is required at the University of Virgina. They do not pretend to rival that University or any other real University in the extent and variety of studies required for degrees—for Davidson is simply a college, doing college work, preparing youths by thorough teaching to appropriate the advantages of Universities. Such as Johns' Hopkins and the University of Virginia.

Davidson College does not and will not lower her scholarship simply to get numbers, thanks to her still large endowment. She is "not on the parish," and the College is able to support itself even with a limited number of pupils.

The President and Professors of languages at Davidson are not only University of Virginia men, but have all studied at the most famous Universities of Germany, they know what is considered learning there, and what scholarship means there; they are students and readers of German and French, and are keeping themselves in contact with the best learning and best books of those countries.

The languages are taught at Davidson in the only way a language can be thoroughly taught, viz: by writing it. The Professor of Greek at Davidson a most enthusiastic teacher and a capital scholar, informed me last June that he gave his last class the very same Greek exercises that Professor Gildersleeve gave him when he took his degree on Greek at University of Virginia. I do not mean of course, that he put up for examination all the Greek required of him, for that embraces the reading of many authors not read in a college, and Greek history, &c., but he gave his class the very same English to be put into Greek which was given him—the only real test of one's knowledge of a language.

Some of these papers were sent to a distinguished professor of Greek at one of the oldest colleges in Virginia, himself a University of Virginia man—and he said "he would not have thought such Greek could have been written in any college if he had not seen it."

In Latin, I hear that Prof. Sampson has done the same thing, giving the exercises that Prof. Peter's gives at Univeraity of Va.

In the Scientific department the same high standard is enforced as in languages. Prof. Carson's course is pure mathematics is about that given at Washington-Lee.

In Chemistry, besides the general chemistry, there is a full year of practical laboratory work for those who desire it. In Natural Philosophy there is a very full course. Experimental Physics a whole year; Mechanics a whole year; Astronomy a whole year.

I have had in the last few days a fresh instance of the strictness of the examination in this department. I was inquiring of Prof. Martin concerning the present Chemistry class. He told me he gave one student 98 on examination, and then added, that is a very high mark, for not more than one in five hundred ever get that from me. I have been here for ten years, and do not think I ever gave 98 to more than three or four students.

As to the President of Davidson College, I know no college which has his equal in talents, scholarship and capacity for teaching in his department.

He was educated under Dr. McGuffey at the University of Virginia, held the chair of Mental Philosophy at University of North Carolina in its palmiest days—was President of Miami University—Professor of Latin at Davidson, and then President of the college.

He has attended lectures in Berlin, is a German and French scholar, and is more thoroughly master of Philosophy and the kindred branches than any man I know. He is especially apt as a teacher, calling out all the enthusiasm of his pupils, and stimulating them to work. Few men possess his stores of learning, and long practice as a teacher has taught him what is adapted to the student's mind. He is emphatically an educator. If I had no other reason for sending a son to Davidson, I would send him there to enjoy the benefits of Dr. Hepburn's chair.

Dr. Hepburn's teaching is not only theoretical, it is practical—has reference to the living issues of the day. He is not like so many mere professors and theologians—a sixteenth century man living in the nineteenth century. He [illegible] the lessons of the past to illustrate and explain the present.

Dr. Hepburn's department is especially rich in Political Economy and Sociology, questions of government, finance, &c. These are subjects of prime importance, and are upon just such topics our young men need instruction.

And now, Mr. Editor, I think I have given a reason for the faith that is in me in regard to Davidson. I do not wish to be thought as setting Davidson above what it deserves. I do not say this or that chair in some other colleges may not be as well filled as in Davidson. I do not assert that the whole body of professors there are superior in talents to the whole body in some other colleges.

But I do assert and believe that [illegible] into consideration the talents of the professors, the Universities in this country and abroad upon which they have attended, the thoroughness and exactness of their learning, the north half mode of teaching, the exactness of their scholarship, and the high standard required for degrees, that Davidson College is the equal, shoulders above any similar college south of the Universities of Virginia.

I am profoundly grateful that in North Carolina we have such a college. I believe its influence in the State in promoting the higher education will be incalculable. This thorough education is just what we need in our State, and it is just that thing in which Virginia excels in and which is due in a great degree to her University, whose exactness and thoroughness of teaching, Davidson College is [illegible] to.

Let no one think I am attempting to "write up" Davidson. She is already making her mark. Her students are already making her known by their scholarship and power of thought, as teachers and pupils at the higher Universities, and her reputation is every year extending itself. The graduates of Davidson take a high rank in the professional and scientific schools which they enter. They are sought as teachers in North Carolina, South Carolina and the Gulf States, and no one that has been recommended as a teacher by the Faculty, has so far as is known, disappointed those who have employed him.

A Professor at Johns' Hopkins in reply to inquiries, said Davidson boys were prepared to attend his lectures or those anywhere else. I may add a Professor recently elected was complimented on his being called to a college of so high a character by the superintendent of education in one of our largest cities. These facts speak for themselves.

WORDS IN THE BIBLE, AND NOT IN IT.

Though our translation of the Bible was made so long after the conquest, and the fusion of the Norman-French with the Anglo-Saxon part of the language, yet, from following previous translations so much, and from the fact that so many words of every day life have come into use since, if any one who has not had his attention drawn to it will notice, he will find the vocabulary of the Sacred Word very limited.

We have corn, for grain in general—wheat, barley, beans, lentiles, millet, litches, now obsolete (but vetch) pulse, gourds, melons, cucumbers, onions, figs, apples, grapes, olives, berries, &c.; but no rye, spelt, Indian corn, oats, peas, beets, carrots, parsnips, potatoes, cabbages, pears, peaches, cherries, currants, oranges, lemons. No farm, nor farmer, or agriculture, but field, ground, garden, vineyard. We have box, bag, basket, chest, table, bench, seat, bed, bedstead, sheet, couch; no bureau, sideboard, chair, sofa, divan, blanket, curtain, carpet. We meet with ox, cow, sheep, bullock, horse, ass, mule, camel dromedary, ram, boar, flock, herd, drove, lamb, goat, kid, swine, dog, calf, colt, fox, fish, but no species of fish, mouse; but no beef, mutton, pork, pig, bacon, cat, veal, lard, hound, mastiff, rat, wether, steer, steed. We have lion, leopard—but no tiger—elephants' teeth.

1 Kings: x; 22. There are knife, basin, bowl, pitcher, pot, cup, bottle, vial, barrel, shovel, tongs, vessel, lamp, candlestick and forks once—1 Sam.: xiii; 21; but no eating forks, no goblet, decanter, jug, can, cork, keg, saucer, &c. There are dinner, supper, feast, bread, meat, meal, flour, feed, honey, oil, cake, cracknel—1 Kings: xiv; 3—like our crackers, ointment; but no breakfast, repast, entertainment, collation, sugar, molasses, tea, biscuits, coffee, &c. We have wool, flax, linen, silk, web, weave, warp, spin, yarn, thread, wash, shuttle, once in Job: vii; 6; but no loom, thrum, cotton, hemp, reel, spinning-wheel, mantle, breeches, hat. But we have bonnet, hozen, once in Dan.: iii; 21; shoe, raiment, veil, coat, cloak, vesture, robe, clothes, leather, once in II. Kings: i; 8; adjective leathern, Mat.: iii; 4. No shawl, trowsers, pantaloons, shirt, vest, jacket, boots, sock, frock. gown, tunic; no broom, but besom, in Isa.: xiv; 23; no industry, but adjective industrious—1 Kings: xi; 28; pottage and sop, but no soup, nor tart, nor pie; conduct, in the ordinary sense, not in Bible, but conversation in place of it. Persons have name, fame, renown, reputation, glory, honor, &c.; but no character, eclat, or applause. No steam, but mist; no atmosphere, but air; road, ouce—1 Sam.: xxvii; 10—generally, way.

There are spices, mint, anise, coriander, cassia, balm, cinnamon, mirrh, aloes, spikenard, physician, medicine, remedy, poison, but no mace, nutmeg, clove, pepper, allspice, pimento, opium, but gall, which some take for the juice of the poppy. There is no tobacco, alcohol, brandy, gin, whisky, beer, though this, from barley, was in use in the earliest ages, both in Europe and Asia; there is no physic, doctor, or antidote, but remedy.

There are some kinds of tools, axe, the mattock, plane, ploughshare, cart, wagon, maul, sickle, hook; no hoe, screw, chisel, vise. There are hammer and harrow, but no spade or shovel, except the fire shovel and the winnowing shovel. Drag, in Heb. [illegible] seems to be for a seine or net for fish.

Terms of office and rank are abundant—king, governor, president, lord, master, ruler, magistrate, officer, lawyer, lawgiver, senator, minister, priest, sheriff, jailor, judge, layman, prince, duke, captain, executioner, prophet; no congress, parliament, legislature, monarch, tyrant, arbitrator, alderman, statesman, &c.

General is found once in I Chr. xxvii; 31, captain, sergeant, tax gatherer, trumpeter, herald, once in Dan. iii; 4, leader, piper musician, once in Rev. xviii; 22; no colonel, major, corporal, lieutenant, quartermaster, engineer, drummer, cannonier, harbinger, pioneer; there is no economy, nor eclipse; the Bible idea of an eclipse is as if the heavenly body had the power to draw in its light, or like a man closing his eyelids at the command of a master. Joel ii; 10; Isa. xiii; 10—the sun, moon and stars go out and become black; but our word eclipse is from the Greek word, to fail, to leave off.

We have in the Bible frost, frozen, hail, sleet, but we do not find [illegible] Ex. xv; 8. "The depths were congealed in the heart of the sea." Job. xxxviii; 30. "The waters are hid, as with a stone, and the face of the deep is frozen;" in the margin, taken. Here is a philosophical explanation of the process of freezing water. The participle taken is in the Hithpahel, or reciprocal conjugation. The water takes hold of itself, and becomes solid, and forms a covering to the river, or flood, like a flat rock laid over it. The poets seem to have caught the idea, from the divine idea in this passage; and [illegible] Young's Paraphrase, has—

"Whose powerful breath, from northern regions blown,
"Touches the sea and turns it into stone."

Thompson, in his Winter, says

"With the fierce rage of winter deep suffused,
"An icy gale, oft shifting o'er the pool,
"Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career,
"Arrests the bickering stream. The loosened ice
"Let down the flood, and half dissolved* by day,
"Rustles no more, but to the sedgy bank
"Fast grows, or gathers round the pointed stone
"A crystal pavement, by the breath of heaven
"Cemented strong, till seized from shore to shore,
"The whole imprisoned rivet growls below.

Again—

"Ocean itself, no longer can resist
"The binding fury, but in all its rage
"Of tempest taken by the boundless frost,
"Is many a fathom to the bottom chained,
"And bid to roar no more."

How much better is this in the Book of Job, to account for the solidity of water by frost, than the idea of the ancients that there were little spicula of some kind that entered among the particles of water and wedged them up—

"Myriads of little salts, or hooked, or shaped
"Like double-wedges, and diffused immense
"Through water, earth and ether."

*If the etymology of soice, dissolve, be, as some suppose, from Latin, ino, to loose, combined with the pronoun, se, himself, itself, "loosen itself," it would be exactly the opposite of the idea in the Hebrew for making water solid. This is more strange when the word for water is from its mobility, as wind is from the Latin, venio ventus. E. F. R.

SCIENCE AND MYSTERY.

Much of the prevailing doubt arises from a secret tendency to disbelief of the full divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ. "Great is the mystery of godliness. God was manifest in the flesh." It is a mystery not for us to explain. It lies far beyond the range of the human understanding. If there were no mysteries man would be God, for he would know all things. One of the wisest philosophers has spoken of even the greatest scientific explorers being as little children picking up pebbles on the sea-shore. Would that many far inferior men had the same humility. Science has done great things in its own sphere. Let us rejoice in its results, especially in its bringing more to light the greatness of the divine wisdom and the beauty and grandeur and vastness of God's universe. Let us welcome all its true discoveries. But still, let us remember that it explains only the surface of things, and that there are mysteries which it does not even approach. The grand results of science which must be true, are always to be dissociated from the mere theories of even eminent scientific men, which may have no value when they venture into the regions beyond the range of possible observation. It is so with the mysteries of life. All sorts of explanations have been attempted, but we are just as far off as ever from any really satisfactory explanation of it. It is so with the origin of the material universe, which no human power can explain. It is so with the nature of the mind, so complicated and wonderful in its processes, which no searching of man can understand. If men would be satisfied with dealing with that which they really can explore, there would be much less bold and idle assertion than there unfortunately is. But they attempt to go far beyond, into regions in which they can no more move than the eagle can fly to the moon through space without an atmosphere to bear it up, and they fall back in helpless ignorance to their mother earth. It is really melancholy to see some scientific men, like Huxley—admirable in their own departments of knowledge, which they can test by observation—engaging at times in aerial flights into vast mysteries for which all human faculties are incompetent, and speaking with a dogmatism equal to that of the most bigoted schoolmen on such mysteries. Others, like Sir Isaac Newton, Faraday, Sir David Brewster, have, with larger grasp of intellect, seen clearly where the boundary lay, and have acknowledged a region of mystery, to be brought to light only by the revelation of God, far beyond any possible capacity of the human intellect to explore for itself. There is a region of knowledge in which reason is designed and fitted to explore. To contradict or ignore reason in this department is superstition, as when the Church of Rome says that bread is not bread, but flesh, and wine not wine, but blood. But there is a vast region which reason cannot explore, and which, if made known to us at all, can be so only by revelation, and received by faith. This doctrine of God, manifest in the flesh, belongs to this region of mystery. We would need to be God to explain it. Even angels and archangels look at it with adoring wonder. Jesus shared the powers of God. He read the secret thoughts of men. He cured diseases with: word, of all kinds, even such as are utterly incurable by any possibility of skill—as of those born with contracted limbs, those whose eyeballs had rolled on in darkness from birth, those who were in the last stage of decay, and whose physical recuperative powers were all gone, those from whom even life had departed. By a word He accomplished these wonders, by His own unlimited power. He claimed to be God "Before Abraham was, I am." No Jew could mistake the use of this solemn name—I am. Therefore, they took up stones to cast at Him. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together." Here He distinctly identifies Himself with the God of the Old Testament, who spake by the prophets. He, the Son, is the revelation of God, the known God in all ages.—Rev. Gavin Carlyle.

THE TEST OF SUCCESS.

The success of man is to be estimated—not in the hoarded millions of glittering gold, of no value whatever in that permanent home in which he spends his eternity—not in the miles of railway, or in the farms, or bonds, or stocks which he calls his own—not in the armies which he has conquered, or the cities which he has taken—not in the estimate which the world makes of his greatness, or the praises which they lavish upon his name; but in living a life of devotion to God; in being instrumental, directly or indirectly, in turning many to righteousness, who shall live as imperishable memorials of his fidelity and wisdom when earthly monuments shall have crumbled into dust, and when the earth itself and all its works shall have been consumed.—Anonymous.

MONUMENT TO COLIGNY.

One of the most significant indications of the great change which has occurred in the opinions of the French people to be found in a proposition now before them, received with a great deal of favor, to erect a statute of Admiral Coligny in the quadrangle of the Tuileries, near the spot where he was killed. The Admiral was the commander of the army of the Huguenots, and a devoted Protestant. He was considered not only a man of great ability, but a Christian of exalted character. That France, which has honored Romanists and infidels, should now be reviving the memory of the Huguenots and proposing a monument to one of their most famous leaders, is a very interesting fact and a very encouraging one. Coligny was one of the victims of the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, and a statue to his memory, on the spot once stained with his blood, would be a rebuke to Romanism. A great many of the French today, indeed, do not hesitate to express their contempt for and opposition to the Papacy and its adherents. It is not at all unusual to hear a Frenchman declare with emphasis that he is a Protestant. He has usually a limited and inaccurate knowledge of the faith of Protestants, but he is very willing to enlarge and correct his information. A very brief observation serves to show that France is opening to the Gospel and the Church of Christ. The French, while they have lost nothing of the delicate taste and versatility which have so long been among their chief characteristics, have become much more sober and thoughtful and self-restrained during the past ten years. The change is full of promise. France is by no means an uninfluential member of the family of nations. French opinions are received with respect and French ways are imitated by a great many people.—Christian Intelligencer.

POSSESSING CHRIST.

A chief reason why so many believers fail to attain an exalted type of Christian character is because they do not receive Christ as a living, indwelling, personal Saviour. Religion is, to them, an abstraction, rather than a reality. They have faith, but it is a dead, intellectual exercise, rather than a life-giving power begotten in the soul by the Holy Ghost, through the Word of God, "which liveth and abideth forever." We may, we must possess Christ if we would be his. In the Bible, a crucified Christ; in the heart, a living Christ; in heaven, a glorified Christ; in the future, a coming Christ—Christ in life, Christ in death, Christ in a coming judgment—"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever."

OLD FOLKS.

Do the young people ever think that they will be old; that they will soon feel that the grasshopper is a burden and fear is in the way? Only a few short years ago that aged man and feeble woman were young, strong and full of life; their hearts were gushing with tenderness and care for the little ones, who now stand in their places. Do not jostle that aged couple out of your pathway, but rather lift them with tender care over the rough, declining road. You may have forgotten how carefully they kept your tender feet from stumbling, and with what care they watched your advancing steps. But they have not forgotten, and the time will come when you will be forcibly reminded of it, by the love you have for your own little ones. Will they ever hand you the same bitter cup to drink that you pour out for that aged father and stricken mother? Verily, "with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Think of the anxious days and nights mother has watched by your sickbed; remember her loving care; her patience and long suffering with your fretfulness, and then let the blush of shame dye your brow, that you should be impatient or unkind to her, now that she is old. Old folks are such a trial! Yes, they know it; they feel it; and so will you be such a trial to your children in the days that will surely come; aye, and you will remember, too!—Ed.

A LAND OF WONDERS.

California is a land of wonders. There are fresh flowers every month in the year, and winter wears the bloom of spring. There are waterfalls three and four times as high as Niagara; natural bridges of white marble; some thousand of gold-bearing veins; inexhaustible quantities of iron and chrome, creslead, bismuth and quick-silver; most beautiful porcelain clay; and in short everything that can bless an industrious and enterprising people. In one valley were found more than forty springs over one hundred degrees Fahrenheit. In another valley sixteen geysers, like the famous one in Iceland. In this famous abode of Vulcan the rocks are so hot that you can stand upon them but a short time, even with thick boots on. The roar of geysers at times may be heard a mile or more, and the moment is one of the most intense interest as you approach them.

GOD'S REST.

It is the evening hour.
And thankfully,
Father, Thy weary child
Has come to thee.
I lean my aching head
Upon Thy breast,
And there and only there
I am at rest
Thou knowest all my life,
Each petty sin;
Nothing is hid from Thee.
Without, within:
All that I have or am
Is wholly Thine:
So is my soul at peace,
For Thou art mine.
To-morrow's dawn may find
Me here, or there;
It matters little, since Thy love
Is everywhere!

Evening Post.

GOLD DUST.

Pascal, has said, "In order to love human objects we must know them; in order to know divine things we must love them."

The tale of the Divine pity was never yet believed from lips that were not felt to be moved by human pity.—George Elliott.

There is in man a higher than love of happiness. He can do without happiness and instead thereof find blessedness.—Carlyle.

Whate'er my God ordains is right;
Here will I take my stand;
Though sorrow, need or death make earth
For me a desert land,
My Father's care
Is around me there;
He holds me that I shall not fall,
And so to Him I leave it all.

—Samuel Rodigast, 1675.

Says the great Jeremy Taylor—"The way to judge of religion, is by doing our duty. Theology is rather a divine life than a divine knowledge. In heaven we shall first see, and then love, but here we must first love, and then love will open our eyes as well as our hearts, and we shall then understand."

Faith builds a bridge across the gulf of death,
To break the shock blind nature cannot shun
And lands thought smoothly on the farther shore.

—Young.

It is an easier matter to begin to do good than to continue therein; and the reason is, there is not so much of a Christian's cross in the beginning of a work as there is in a continual, hearty, conscientious practice thereof. Apples and flowers are not made by the gardener, but are an effect of the planting and the watering. A life full of good works is the only way on thy part to answer the mercy of God extended to thee. God hath had mercy on thee and hath saved thee from all thy distresses. The heart that is fullest of good works hath in it least room for Satan's temptation. Every promise in the Bible is thine to strengthen, quicken, and encourage thy heart.—Bunyan.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Items from Presbyterian:

The Pope has sent ten Jesuits to Central Africa to evangelize the countries traversed by Stanley and Livingstone. The mission will cost $40,000, and the missionaries will take with them 500 porters, servants, &c., who will be unarmed.

There are now 22 mission stations in the city of Paris, with accommodations for 5,000 persons. The weekly attendance is about 8,000. From 2,000 to 3,000 attend weekly the reunions for young people. There are connected with the work Bible classes for adults, weekly prayer-meetings, industrial schools for the young, &c. M. Saillens has just begun similar work in Marseilles, and steps are being taken to found a branch mission in Lyons.

The Bishop of Bombay, writing of the effort of the Roman Catholics to win over to that church 500 converts who had been left for some months without a pastor, says that the Rev. J. Taylor, of Kolhapur, was sent to the district, and his labors not only resulted in frustrating the designs of the Catholic priests, but have led to a great revival—a revival unprecedented in Western India. Since he went into the Nagar district, in March last, he has baptized 1,300 persons, the list of members connected with the mission, which is among the Mahars, an outcast class, containing now 1,851. Besides these, there are 800 persons under instruction preliminary to baptism.

As Afghanistan has come prominently on the scene at the present time, it may be of interest to recall the fact that the first missionary to the Afghans was the noted Dr. Joseph Wolff, a converted Jew, who, in 1831, travelled from Armenia to Hindoostan, through Central Asia, everywhere preaching Christ.

Items from Weekly Review, London:

A useful work has just been issued by the Wesleyan Conference Office, which presents in a condensed form, the growth and development of Methodism in its several branches. At the death of John Wesley, in 1791, there were in connection with Methodism 312 ministers, 115 circuits, 16 mission stations, and 79,000 members. Now, including the Methodism of Great Britain, that of the United States of America, Colonial Methodism, and branch churches, it is estimated that there are not less than 30,000 itinerant preachers, 60,000 local preachers, and 19,000,000 of adherents.

A correspondent of the Leeds Mercury states, and not as a mere rumor, that a syndicate is actually in course of consolidation, which has for its sole object the purchase of Palestine from the Turkish Government, and its restoration to the Jews in some form. I know, but am not at liberty to mention, the name of the secretary of the body, which already numbers some very influential members, and I can vouch for the confidence with which the secretary, who is not a member of the Jewish race or religion, but a well known man, regards the future success of the scheme; and his experience of the world and knowledge of men are too important to be ignored.

The Baptists in Sweden new report 13,773 members in 253 churches. Twelve new churches were formed last year; the increase of communicants was 2,479. Sunday-schools have been organized with 17,769 children. This is astonishing progress.

The Free Church of Scotland has lately come into the possession of a bequest of $135,000 for missionary purposes. Some persons have agitated the establishment of a mission in Asia Minor, under English protection; but the general thought is that it should go to India.

The great revival in India among the Telooguos still continues. Thus far over 10,000 have been baptized by the Baptist missionaries since the middle of June, and it is believed that the number of converts will reach 20,000 by Christmas. In view of the unprecedented increase, the Baptist Missionary Union asks for $25,000 to reinforce the mission.

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson writes respecting the success of modern missions, in the "Foreign Missionary," as follows: "Remember that modern missions are scarce a half century old. Fifty years ago the first banners were floating from Christian standards before the strongholds of paganism. There was scarce a single fortress of heathenism taken for Christ, and the advance toward the great centers of Mohammedan, papal, and pagan superstition was scarce projected. And where to day can you find any enterprise so young with results so abundant? History may be safely challenged to unroll her shining scroll and point to any record so brilliant. The men and women who from the whole Christian world have, during these fifty years, gathered against the armies of the pagan world, have been a mere handful, like Gideon's picked three hundred men. And yet all Christendom together can, with all the ten thousand appliances of gospel ordinances and organizations, show no such comparative results at home. Within less than three-quarters of a century the Bible has been furnished to every considerable nation and people on the globe, in the native tongue. The Word of God can be obtained to-day in about two hundred and fifty languages and dialects—the result of modern missions.

MISCELLANY.

Reports come that already real estate has risen in price in Palestine, growing out of the persuasion that the ascendency of Great Britain in the East will ensure a more stable government, and thus secure to industry the rewards of its labors.

The gallant General Browne who distinguished himself in the advance through the Khyber Pass, has only one arm. Despite this, he is one of the best leaders of an expedition to be found in India; and, in addition to this quality, he has a most intimate knowledge of the natives. No man can tell better than he, how far a native may be trusted, and by the natives General Sir Samuel Brown is feared and respected.—Christian Signal.

Dr. Shaw, of Rochester, says that a Congregationalist is simply "a Presbyterian who has left his Catechism at home and forgotten where he laid it down."

It was announced by submarine telegraph messages from special correspondents at Berlin, on Monday last, that, in consequence of the apparent universal plot against thrones, an exchange of ideas on the advisability of adopting common measures against a common enemy is being resorted to, and diplomacy is at present endeavoring to ascertain the opinions of the different cabinets of Europe on the subject, and the lead is being taken by the Berlin cabinet. Great distress and suffering will result, in some cases, from the expulsion of the Socialists, as they were denied any extension of time for the arrangement of their affairs. Most have already left Berlin. A large number of Socialists have been arrested in Italy as a consequence of the recent outrages, and the police profess to have in their possession a number of documents giving them much information as to the organization of the Internationalists in the country. The statement that remonstrances had been addressed by the powers to the Federal Council at Berne, in respect to the proposed presence of Socialists in Switzerland, has been already contradicted. It is now stated that since the attempted assassination most cordial messages have passed between the Swiss Government and King Humbert, his majesty expressing the most hearty sympathy towards Switzerland and her institutions. The German Government has resolved to allow the exiled Socialists to take up their quarters pro. tem. in Leipsic. An emigration committee has been formed, under the presidency of the Socialist leader, Herr Most. A plan is being considered for emigration to Cyprus, or Asia Minor. Many thousand letters from different parts of Germany have reached the committee, offering to co-operate in the emigration movement.

"Begin low, proceed slow,
Rise higher, take fire;
When most impressed, be self-possessed."

JOHN McLAURIN. - - - Editor.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1879.

We acknowledge indebtedness to a number of friends for favors in the editorial department and other departments of our paper. The modesty of some of our assistants prevents the publication of a list of contributors.

THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

For the last time has our journal borne the date, 1878. With its record of duties and trials, sorrows and disappointments, trinmphs and rewards, it has slipped into the abyss of the all-engulfing past, and ere long the grave of the old year will be grass-grown. The mound is garish and new, but the winter's mantle of snow, and the spring's garb of flowers will hide it from our view and drape the bare outline.

How thoughttul we should be that we can forget! Trite is the saying, "time is a great healer," yet what a blessing that it is so! The mistakes and follies, the griefs and cares, the anguish and pain that have been our's during the past year, will soon be soothed, as we glide further from the moment and the scene, and we shall find that "distance lends" if net "enchantment," at least equanimity and patience. Were the wounds with which our poor hearts are riven, ever to be gaping and raw, if never the new skin covered the sore, oh what a wretched thing life would be! What a mockery to wish one's day's to be prolonged, were the anguish, the accumulated agony of each successive pang to continne unabated! with unspeakable horror we revolt from such thought. Yes, let us be thankful we can forget.

Nor let us with useless grief lament our misfortunes, or bewail our lost time. Nor let us recall with regret the pleasures gone, the moments of delight. Let them rather be to us a refreshing memory. There is something else to do.

"There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend
A new face at the door."

How shall we greet the new year?

With thankfulness, that we are spared to enter upon it; that for neglected opportunities and wasted time we have not been cut off, but renewed opportunity and time are granted to retrieve over past unfaithfulness. Let us be thankful that we live in stirring times, with so many avenues of usefulness open to us—open to the poorest and humblest as well as the most cultured and fortunate. True is the saying of the Farringford seer, "Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay." For the privilege of doing good still granted to us, let us be profoundly thankful. If indeed we lament lost opportunities, if the dear child to whom we should have spoken a word of council and hope is forever hidden beneath the frozen turf,—let us smitten and repentant, be yet thankful that we are permitted to speak to the living.

"The Saviour looks for perfect fruit,
We stand before Him, humbled, mute."

So then we should greet the New Year with contrition, and with the earnest purpose to live to His glory who hath spared us.

Resolutions are at a discount. The soul cheats itself with resolves. We must "act, act in the living present." Bnt the siren whisper of the tempter is to delay. The aching heart is bound with a stout plaster of resolutions, and softened and soothed, sinks too surely into silken slumber. Oh, the sleep of the soul, thus aroused, and thus hushed—how dangerous, how deadly! Life is too short for inaction. We live in too fast an age to be content with calm repose and peaceful inertness. There is too much to do.

These long deferred letters, answer to-day. How sorely is friendship tried by procrastination in so small a thing. That matter of disagreement between you and your neighbor, that rankles like a splinter beneath the finger-nail, compose at once. He might be called to his reward in a week, and how bitterly you would bewail the neglect. The minor duties of life, the courtesies to the household, the small debts to servants and tradespeople, the things that are overlooked, these are the things that make life happy or miserable, according as they are performed or neglected. Oil the whole machinery, the small screws as well as pistons and drivers, and see that no grit is in the waste or the oil. One gravel may thus cause a hot box and stop the train. One grit may cut the spindle, and mar the work.

These words may meet some eyes wet with tears and dim with longing. They may say—"your words of earnest encouragement may suit the bustling, active world; the young, the strong, the hopeful. But I am hidden in the depth of the forest, far from the busy throng, far from opportunities of good. And more,—days of pain and nights of weariness are appointed to me. What can I do, and how greet with cheerful welcome the New Year, that brings to me but suffering, trial and disappointment?"

Kind reader, in God's great temple there are no useless parts. Mighty stones, stately columns, and delicate traceries are there. But there is use for each pebble, each pin, each grain of sand, that goes to make up the majestic building. Whether obscure, unseen, unknown, or not, the Lord hath need of you. The violet chained to the earth, hidden by its sheltering leaves, trodden on by every careless passer-by, though neither stalwart oak, nor splendid planet,—hath yet its purpose, and is not beneath the notice of Him who made it, and clothed it in inimitable fragrance. Remember,

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

We are not only to do but to suffer the will of God. Our great example, no less by His sufferings, than by His immaculate obedience honored the law.

Humble, earnest, content, thankful, let us enter with holy purpose and glad hearts upon the NEW YEAR.

A. D. 1878.

The year that has just closed must occupy a prominent place in the world's great history. Whether that patient and impartial muse record notable events, the march of opinion, mighty changes, or conspicuous scenes and personages, the scroll for 1878 will be full. Never before, perhaps, did the world seem so much a unit, so much a one thing about which all are equally and generally interested, as at this time. The annihilation of time and space by the telegraph, the phonograph and the telephone—mails and steam having been long ago outstripped,—makes all one whole; and the wild dream of Tennyson, about seems more nearly fulfilled than could have been possible to him who mused at Locksley Hall.

The most memorable political event that doubtless occurs to every one's mind, that marks the year, is the Berlin Congress. A more distinguished array of illustrious personages has not been assembled, perhaps, in our generation. And no scene is more conspicuous for the momentous issues discussed and weighty principles involved, and for the great events that led to and followed the kingly convocation.

The Russo-Turkish war, the Afghan war, the progress of geographical research and discovery in Africa, the cession of Cyprus, the purchase of other islands, all these have changed the familiar faces of the maps, and our whole civil and political geographies will have to be reconstructed.

There have been no less notable events in social progress. The great Exposition in Paris, revealing the wonderful recuperative power of one of the foremost nations of the world, the aggressive advance of international communism, the attempt at assassination of five of the crowned heads of Europe, the progress of Nihilism in Germany and Russia, and of republican principles in the realms of France and Spain, the present and increasing financial and social distress in the British Empire, the famine in India, China and Turkey, the yellow fever in our Southern States, and many other such records of suffering, opinion and progress, mark the year and make it memorable.

Nor is it unworthy of note to recall the many changes wrought by Death, the mighty King of change. He has come, indeed, as the Latin poet has beautifully phrased it, to the palaces of kings and the homes of the poor. The year has a memorable necrology. The immense loss of life by famine in the populous nations of Asia, the sad havoc wrought in our fair land by the desolating scourge, alike throng the memory. Our own Church has deeply suffered in the death of many useful, earnest and godly ministers, and many unnumbered yet cherished ones in the humble walks of life.

Homes have been invaded by this sovereign of kings, and two European monarchs have died—the Pope of Rome, Pope Pius IX, and King Victor Emanuel. Other royal households have suffered likewise; the accomplished wife of the Duke of Hesse Darmstadt, one of the loveliest of the daughters of good Queen Victoria, followed her little children to their rest, smitten with the same fell disease, diphtheria. The beautiful and lovely young Queen of Spain, Mercedes, herself a princess of royal blood and an heir to the throne, also was called from life.

And in the realm of science and literature three notable kings have been called to lay aside the sceptre, which they so long and so wisely wielded. We refer to the venerable theologian, Dr. Charles Hodge, the distinguished poet, William Cullen Bryant, and the no less distinguished physicist, Professor Joseph Henry—humble and devout Christians all. May there be many to receive their descending mantles.

Who knows what the present year shall bring of wo, of sad loss and dread disaster? Yet, let us remember, as the fathers pass away the sons are raised up to take their places. The vacant places are filled, and the world moves on, despite death's inroads and great changes. There is a Mighty Hand behind that moves all wisely and unerringly, supplying each lack as it appears, and bringing forth one harmonious and glorious design. With patience let us abide His will.

A WELCOME SURPRISE.

On the night of Christmas-eve Rev. B. F. Marable, pastor of the church at Goldsboro, had an unexpected visit from his congregation, resulting in so many gifts that he had not where to bestow his goods. Such remembrances are refreshing to a Pastor at any time, and especially so in times like these.

COMPLAINTS BEFORE THE NEXT ASSEMBLY.

The Venerable, the Moderator of the next General Assembly, or rather the body he represents, will not find time lying idly on their hands. The Judicial Committee will have use for all their knowledge of Church laws and regulations, and it seems almost a pity that the committee cannot now be organized with full power to send for persons and papers, that they may be ready to facilitate business in the Assembly.

Complaint is to be made against the late Synod of Georgia, that it overstepped the limits of its prerogatives and powers in the late Block case, and that the action, as a whole, was unjust and unprecedented; whereby, while no question is made of the justice of the issue for practical purposes, the dignity of the courts of the Church is impaired and disrespect generated. Rev. J. W. Kerr will complain to the General Assembly for redress of injustice from defamatory utterances by Rev. J. T. Leftwich, D. D., (at the time of utterance of the Presbytery of Atlanta), which defamation, it is alleged, was uttered before the Synod of Georgia, and is contained in a pamphlet on "The Duty and Discipline of Dancing."

Should our General Assembly, for any lawful reason, decline to hear and issue the complaint, Mr. Kerr will ask that it and the pamphlet be transmitted to the Northern General Assembly.

Rev. J. W. Kerr will also prefer before the Presbytery of Atlanta, charges against Dr. Leftwich for his action as Moderator and member of the Session of the Central Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, during the original trial of the Block case.

It will require a great deal of wisdom and grace to cope with and properly issue the various judicial questions which must be considered by the next Assembly, and it behooves our Presbyteries, recognizing this fact, to send such commissioners as stand approved before the whole Church for the possession of these qualifications.

AFGHANISTAN.

God will surely cause the wrath of man to praise Him. It is with this in mind that many of our readers feel a deep interest in the warlike complications and transactions of Europe and Asia. For their benefit we condense from an article of Dr. S. Wells Williams, in the N. Y. Evangelist, a description of the topography of Afghanistan and the characteristics of its inhabitants, with some points in its history necessary to an appreciation of the present state of affairs.

Let us premise by saying that Dr. Williams, from a residence of over forty years in the East, in positions unexceptionably favorable for observation, is, of all men, familiar with the subject he treats, and his eminence as a scholar entitles his writings to special respect:

"Afghanistan lies on the western slope of the vast elevated basin of Thibet, in the rectangle formed by the Indus and Oxus rivers. The Indus comes down on the eastern side of Afghanistan. From Peshawur to the ocean, the English control its valley, but the Suleiman mountains define it on the west, and form the natural barrier for Afghanistan on the east, and make one side of the rectangle. In the far northeast, the Hindu-kush mountains constitute the water-shed between the two rivers; north of that range, in latitude 36 degrees north, begins the basin of the Oxus. There are three divergent ranges of mountains running across the north side of the kingdom, separating Balkh and Kundnz from Afghanistan as at present defined.

"On the south, where the Suleiman mountains end, a succession of short ranges, and desert plateaus occupy the border land between Afghanistan and Biluchistan as far west as Lake Seistan; in the Amran mountains, one of these ranges, are the Bolan and Khojuck passes, leading up to Candahar. On the west the frontier is ill-defined, but even better defended by the arid wastes west of the river Haroot, in Khorassan, than it is by the high mountains in other quarters."

The mountains are, many of them, higher than Mont Blanc, in Switzerland, which country it greatly resembles. Many of the valleys are very fertile, but large tracts are arid wastes. The kingdom contains 278,000 square miles, being larger than the State of Texas and five times as large as North Carolina. In latitude it corresponds very nearly to Texas, but its climate embraces the extremes of the habitable globe. The Emperor Baber aptly describes its climate, in saying that within a journey of twenty-four hours from Cabul, one could reach a place where snow never melts, or one where snow never falls.

"The Afghans and Pathans, including 400,000 independent Yusufzais, are estimated to number 2,359,000, most of them living in the eastern half of the kingdom, and forming the dominant race. They sometimes call themselves Beni Israel, and travelers generally mention the peculiar Jewish type of features observable among their clans; but they offer no historical evidence to strengthen their legendary statements, and present no analogies in language or customs to induce one to accept their claims. The rest of the five millions, at which the population is estimated, consist of Tajiks, or Arabs, mostly the descendants of the Moslem conquerors in the seventh century; and the Hazara and Aimak tribes in the northwest and western regions about Herat—each reckoned at half a million. About 800,000 dwell in the northeastern valleys, in Chitral, Kundnz and Kafiristan, independent mountaineers, whose lawlessness and feuds are the greatest obstacles to their prosperity. The remainder of the races inhabiting this rough region—Persians, Hindkees, Jats, Jews, Sikhs, Kuzzilbashes, Kohistanis, Bilnchis, &c.—are scattered in groups, and nearly all of them are Moslems, and the Afghans most bigoted sonnites. Persian is the lingua franca.

"It has had four different capitals, Cabul, Ghazni, Candahar and Herat; each of them having its own history of grandeur and decay, splendid tyranny and dire destruction. Herat was the capital of the ruthless Tamerlane; Ghazni of the victorious Mahmoud; Candahar of Shah Ahmed, the Afghan Cyrus; Cabul of his son, and then of Dost Mohammed's race down to the present time.

"Cabul is situated on the river Cabul, the largest affluent of the Indus on the west; it lies in a fertile valley, about 6,400 feet high, and is protected and defended by walls, forts and bastions as strongly as most Asiatic cities. The population is reckoned to be 60,000. It formerly possessed many fine buildings, but the Bala Hissar, or palace, beautified by Aurungzebe, and the spacious bazaar, were barbarously blown up by the British in 1842, when they abandoned the town.

"Ghazni lies eighty miles south of Cabul, on a plateau about 7,700 feet high. It first became famous when the Moslem conqueror, Mahmond, made it the seat of his empire, A. D. 1020, and lavished there the plunder and riches from his conquests in India and Persia, when his sway was undisputed from the Ganges to the Tigris. His ancient and now ruined capital has since been superseded by the present walled town of 2,000 inhabitants, about three miles distant, and much better located for defence. Its importance has lessened since the British left the hill fort a dismantled ruin in 1839; but it is, in most respects, a more successful entrepot for trade than Cabul.

"Candahar is the only city of much size in the south of Afghanistan, situated 200 miles southwest of Cabul. Its walls are three and a half miles in circuit; two wide avenues cross each other in the center, where is a domed market-place, frequented by traders and shopmen from many regions. The population is probably 30,000. Fruits, grain, tobacco and silk are produced in large quantities, and the fertility of this part of the basin of the Helmnnd river is celebrated.

"Herat is more naturally a part of Persia than Afghanistan, and has often come under the Shah's rule; for its possession involves the revenues from the large trade between Central Asia and Teheran, which passes through this city, Meshed and Merv. It lies on the Hury river, at the base of the Ghor mountains, in a most salubrious, fertile region, about 360 miles west of Cabul. The city wall is about three miles in circuit, and the citadel on the north adds to the protection of its inhabitants, who may number perhaps 30,000 at present—Persians, Toorks, Tajiks and Aimaks, as well as Afghans.

"Alexander's army probably passed from Herat along the south side of the mountains by Cabul to the Indus at Attock; and the colony of those brave troops left to settle these valleys imparted something of the Greek energy to their inhabitants. Then followed the Bactrian, Parthian and Persian rule and misrule, till the intense fanaticism of Arab conquerors in the seventh and eighth centuries inoculated them with the vigor of a new faith, and has given a common bond of union stronger than any nationality. Mountain tribes are proverbially intrepid and predatory, and India or Persia have alternately suffered from these highland clans, which, under leaders like Mahmond, Baber, Ahmed and Nadir, have swooped down upon the plains. The last wave was in 1756 to 1761, when Ahmed took Delhi and shattered the Mahratta power at Panniput, four years after the battle of Plassy under Clive laid the foundations of a new sway in the Peninsula."

The first British dealings with the Afghans were in 1808; when a treaty of mutual aid and good will was concluded. In 1839, propositions of alliance tendered by the British having been rejected, Afghanistan was invaded and the Emperor, Dost Mohammed, dethroned and carried to Calcutta. The people revolted against Shah Shuja, who had been enthroned by the conquerors, and destroyed the entire British army, including camp followers, about 16,500 men. After revisiting and dismantling Cabul, the British army, under Gen. Pollock, left the Afghans to manage their own affairs, and let Dost Mohammed return to his own capital, where he died in 1863.

A desire to counteract any designs that France might have on England's East India possessions was the design of the treaty of 1808. Jealousy of Russia, as at the present, prompted the measures of 1839.

We have applications for the PRESBYTERIAN from persons who love the paper but cannot pay us, and who so state frankly. Will kind hearted friends assist us that none such may be turned away?

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The "Women of Hendersonville Church" have issued an appeal by circular to the pastors and people of the Presbyterian Church to aid them in building a manse. Some weeks ago we called attention to this subject. One thousand dollars is the sum they wish to raise and they ask "Can ten men be found who will help us to the extent of $100, or can twenty who will us $50?" Hendersonville is an important section, and it is most desirable that the Presbyterian church there should be sustained. A manse secured will go a great way towards enabling them to support a pastor.

"For behold, he prayeth," were words addressed to Ananias by our Lord, when he sent that disciple to seek Saul, the persecutor, that he might "receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost;" and so may any who pour out their hearts to God in prayer, look for His messenger of grace and peace.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart proposed to hand over several thousand dollars to Hebrew societies in New York, to be distributed in charity. The societies declined to receive the donations, as coming through the hands of Judge Hilton, who had so deeply affronted them. As Mrs. Stewart merely sent these benefactions to these societies along with others, thereby avoiding discrimination, the refusal to receive appears to be more nice than wise.

The late elections in Geneva are said to have put a finishing stroke to the old Catholic movement. It seems to have been upheld from the first by the resources of the State, and has been, for the past few years, living at a very dying rate. A correspondent of the Christian Union says of it: "The church consists simply of a clergy, salaried by the State, without congregations. When the salaries stop it is easy to infer where the church will be." If it had gone farther in the work of reform, it could not have fared worse, and would probably have materially aided in the work of redeeming France from popish misrule.

The subject of Communism is becoming of importance in this country. Two Socialist leaders, banished from Germany, have arrived in New York, three are now on the way, and several more are expected. In no light, we should say, can they be considered a desirable accession to our population; but some of our exchanges look on the bright side. The Christian Union says:

"Socialist leaders are not wanted in this country; but a revival of industry will leave them without any fulcrum for their lever. Resumption is the best cure for Socialists."

The Christian Intelligencer adopts a loftier tone, though we fear the logic is faulty:

"If the heathen, or men holding pantheistic theories, come to us, so much the better for us. We have the immense advantage of dealing with them upon our own ground, with the example of Christian churches before their eyes and in our favor. If, in such circumstances, the Christianity of this country cannot overcome and transmute the evil which is brought to it, there is some defect, perhaps a vital one, in the Christian people of the land, and the sooner that is exposed, the sooner it can be corrected. We are sure that ultimately both the immigrants and the churches will be benefited by their coming together on this soil."

A chance for gold-seekers is opened up in the Land of Midian. The eminent traveler, Captain Burton, says, that Midian offers to the world a mining region 300 miles long, with an inner depth unknown, in which he found, on a recent visit, all the metals mentioned in the Book of Numbers.

A minister asked his hearers: "What is the greatest material gift God ever gave to man?" Then answered it himself—"Not gold, or land, or aught else but Time—so precious that God deals it out to us in moments. The past was ours, but is not; the future may not be; the present—the present moment only—is. Improve, then, the present moment; it alone is yours. Now is the accepted time; NOW is the day of salvation.

French capitalists, it is reported, intend to construct a railway line from Jaffa to the interior of Palestine, which will open up the valley of the Jordan and turn the Dead Sea to commercial account. By reason of lack of combustible material coal is now imported to that region of country and brings from $10 to $24 a ton. The Scientific American says on this subject:

The masses of asphalt continually thrown up by the Dead Sea attest the presence of vast subterranean layers of fossil vegetable matter, and these signs were not long overlooked by the enterprising men attracted to Suez by the opening of the canal and the movement of commerce in that direction. Recently numerous soundings have been made between Jaffa and the Dead Sea, which, so far, have not disclosed any deposits of coal proper, but, on the other hand, have laid bare inexhaustible beds of lignite.

Of itself this store of lignite is likely to prove an inestimable gain to the industries and commerce of the Levant; but we should add that the juxtaposition of asphalt in great quantities furnishes the elements of a mixture of lignite and asphaltum in the form of bricks, which is equal in heating capacity to the richest bituminous coal, while its cost on the ground is only $2 50 a ton. It is known that similar bricks, made up of coal dust and bituminous debris from gas works, are much sought after by French railways, since, besides their heating power, they greatly facilitate stowage, owing to their regular shape. Of course the bitumen of lower Palestine has been known from immemorial times, and was used to impart solidity to the structures of unbaked clay in Assyria and Egypt; but it may be said that the discovery of the subterranean combustible has lifted once for all the curse for which has so long rested upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and will transform the wasted sheres of the Dead Sea into a focus of industry and a magazine of wealth.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

Presbytery of Memphis met in Memphis December 10th. Eleven ministers and nine elders were present. The reports from the churches were very sad. Of ministers, Rev. Drs. Gray and Rice and Rev. F. M. Howell have died of yellow fever, besides ten elders, several deacons and a large number of members. A solemn memorial meeting was held, on which occasion, obituary memorials were presented of the above named ministers, and also Rev. S. W. Young and Rev. L. B. Gaston, who died early in the year.

Presbytery of Western District met at Union church, Haywood county, Tenn., on the 13th inst. Tuskaloosa Institute was commended to the liberality of the churches. Rev. R. L. Neely was chosen Sabbath School Superintendent. The following resolution was adopted with regard to publication:

WHEREAS, The past management of the publication interest has been such that we have lost confidence in the efficiency of the executive committee; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we cannot, conscientiously, commend this cause to the liberality of our churches, so long as the present executive committee is retained.

Pastors and churches are urged to raise at least fifty cents per member, to be divided between the causes of Foreign Missions and Sustentation.

The pastoral relation between Rev. G. A. Russell and Brownsville church was dissolved.

BETHEL AND BUFFALO.

Rev. J. C. Alexander, Dec. 25th, furnishes us with the following gratifying intelligence:

Two weeks since we received eight additions to Bethel church, seven by examination and one by certificate; also, about the same time, we received six additions to Buffalo church. These churches are in Orange Presbytery.

PLEASANT FAMILY MEETING.

In compliance with a kind invitation, it was my pleasure to attend recently a family meeting at the house of Mr. J. M. Hanna, near Gastonia, Gaston county. Mr. and Mrs. Hanna are both aged and have eight children living and four dead. Their children and grand-children (except six grand-children in Arkansas,) assembled at their father's and grand-father's house on Christmas day. There were present on this occasion, all the children living and forty-four grand-children. Those parents not only brought their children to grand-pa's, but they also brought boxes of eatables. After a few hours of social interconrse, we were invited ont to dinner, and found a long table in the yard abundantly furnished with the substantials and luxuries of life. Everything about the table was nice and good enough for any one's wedding table. The provisions on this table were a sufficient demonstration of the fact, that father Hanna's own daughters, daughters-in-law and grand-daughters know how to prepare food to please the eye and taste. After dinner in compliance with the wishes of the grand-parents and children, the writer conducted religions service. In the introductory part of this service, the aged grand-father led in thanksgiving and prayer, and the writer then delivered a short address and closed with singing and prayer. We then separated, feeling that such a meeting would very much strengthen parental and filial affection and gratitude to their Heavenly Parent. J. J. K.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.

It is with great pleasure and thankfulness we make public acknowledgement of the reception of 320 volumes of valuable books, presented by generous friends in New York, ministers and others, to the Assembly's Institute for the Training of Colored ministers at Tuskaloosa Ala. They were procured through the Agency of Dr. Lacy of our church and Dr. Talbot W. Chambers of the Reformed church. They are mostly new, well adapted to the uses of the Institute and form a most excellent Library.

Many thanks to the donors.

DEEDS OF LOVE.

MY DEAR SIR: The holidays are upon us again, accompanied by deeds, as well as words, expressive of benevolence. It is always pleasant to be "remembered," though only by one's own; but when the tide of love rises until it flows over denominational bounds and into the manse, it reminds us more forcibly of that greater love which embraces all. Now, be it known that in this experience there is nothing new, for the writer has been preaching in Morganton, his home, and in Newton more than seven years; and when, at times, accounts have appeared of "poundings" and of "storms," he was fain to smile through tears at those surprises, sudden and confessed, with which their "victims" were invariably seized.

Mr. Editor, these Christmas days seem to come more quickly now than once they did; may not the next be here all too soon for some poor, forgetful, sinful soul?

Christmas, '78.

THE ANNUAL COLLECTION FOR SUSTENTATION.

OFFICE OF SUSTENTATION,
BALTIMORE, Dec. 26, 1868.

Dear Christian Friends:

We beg to remind you of this collection to be taken up in January, and to ask your generous gifts thereto. It is needful that every friend of the Church shall do what he can for its support. This cause lieth at the foundation of the Church's prosperity. If it flourishes, every other interest will prosper, whereas, if it be depressed, every other work must participate in its weakness. The nurture and strengthening of our young and feeble churches, by aid judiciously administered, is essential to the growth and increase of the whole body. It cannot, therefore, be neglected without detriment to every department of Christian effort. At no time has there been greater need of the liberal support of God's people than at present. Not only are there one hundred and fifty ministers serving four hundred churches, whose support is partly derived from this fund; but there are nearly four hundred vacant churches which must be assisted, if they are to secure the ministrations of the gospel. There are also in the neighborhood of one hundred congregations which need help in the erection of church buildings at important points, and a number of the Presbyteries are looking to this fund for aid in carrying on Christian work among our colored population. In view of these facts, the last General Assembly directed that a special effort should be made to interest every member of the Church in the support of this work, and thus largely to increase the fund. This special effort is rendered the more necessary by the prevalence of yellow fever in so large a portion of our territory in the Southwest, by which many liberal churches have been temporarily disabled, and some have been so weakened that they must be helped. You will see, then, the demand there is, not only that every one shall do something, but that all shall do as liberally as possible for the support of the work. We commend it to your liberality, first, because the gospel must be strengthened where it is now preached, in order that it may be spread into regions where it is not known; second, because it is our duty to aid our needy brethren, in spiritual as well as temporal things; third, because it is a service required of us by, and acceptable to, our Lord and Savior, "who, though He was rich, yet, for your sakes, became poor," and who has made it incumbent on His people to minister to Him in His needy servants.

Committing this important work to your benevolent consideration, and praying God to give you both the ability and willingness to support it liberally, we remain your benevolent fellow-servants in the gospel,

RICHARD MCILWAINE,
J. LEIGHTON WILSON,
Secretaries

STOCKHOLDERS, PLEASE NOTICE.

In purchasing the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN from the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN COMPANY I agreed to furnish the paper during the years 1877 and 1878, to such of the stockholders in that Company as were receiving the paper on stock, and who should remit the postage for those years.

Due notice of this arrangement was given at the time. On the 1st of January, 1879, the contract will have been fulfilled.

I trust that all who have been thus receiving the paper will enter as regular subscribers and remit promptly the amount of subscription.

JOHN MCLAURIN.

STRANGE READERS.

Some readers, strangely enough, persist in turning at once to articles in a paper that they do not enjoy, and hardly take comfort, from the presence of these, in the many others that are in accordance with their taste. One excellent, devout brother, loses his peace over Zion's Herald on account of its weekly half-column of facetiæ. Don't look at it, good brother, we pray you! There is a whole volume, besides, that you can enjoy. But there are hundreds of families where the bright-eyed little men and women open to that page at once, and are won by its lively humor to the reading of the other and unquestionably useful articles on the same page. One reader cannot endure the obituaries, but we have letters from scores of persons who prize these columns, dedicated to Christian biography, above all others in our paper. Dear friend, if our cemetery is not to your taste, don't intrude upon it with unsanctified steps. Walk along the other paths. There is abundant space for your enjoyment in other fragrant lanes. Ours is a religious paper, denominational, and yet catholic in spirit. It is largely to be read on Sunday; and it is one of the established means of the Church for the world's evangelization. We must not forget this; but nothing that is really friendly to man is foreign to its objects. We beg our readers to remember how wide and varied a patronage we have; how many tastes to meet: how many prejudices to overcome; how many somewhat reluctant eyes to catch, and how many objects to gain. Please take your own share of the paper, and enjoy it to your heart's content, and simply pity, in silence, the strange perversion of appetite that enables your neighbor to relish, a thousand times better than anything besides, what your eye glances upon only with disgust.—Zion's Herald.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine is on our table.

Contents: Contemporary Literature—1st. Journalists: John Caldigate—Part ix; French Home Life—In the Country; The Fruit and Vintage of Herefordshire; The Cottage by the River; The Berlin Settlement; Index.

Happy Thoughts for Christmas, by E. H. M., of the Children's Friend, fully illustrated; quarto, cloth, gold and black, $1.00—1869; Presbyterian Publishing Co.; J. [illegible] Shetwell, Agent, 1001 Main St., Richmond Virginia.

With about thirty (30) full-page engravings; original prose and poetry, by Mrs. H. Morse, of the Children's Friend, one of the most popular writers of the day, as the children know. This is, indeed, something nice for boys and girls. We wish it had come out one month sooner. But they will enjoy it, anyhow. Get it at home and in the Sabbath School.

Topical Course of Study for the Common Schools of the United States, by R. C. Stearns. Part I.—For Elementary Schools. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, Chicago and New Orleans. 1878.

This is an attempt to may out a complete course of study by topics, in a wise and natural gradation, for all our common schools. It is founded on the experience of many leading teachers, from Boston to Nashville and San Francisco. Its suggestions are discreet, and the book should at once be carefully examined by all teachers. No iron system of education will answer for all schools. But this by topics is flexible, and admits the introduction of each teacher's preference. Certainly some general plan should govern our schools and give help to the vast number of teachers who need a course marked out for their work.

Evolution Evolved: A part, last four chapters, of the Problem of Human Life Here and Hereafter, containing a review of Darwin, Huxley and Haeckel; New York. Hall & Co., Publishers.

The Problem of Human Life contains five or six hundred pages, royal octavo. It is highly commended, but we have had no opportunity to read it. Price complete $2, and $3.00 according to the binding. Evolution Evolved, $1.00.

American Agriculturist. Best Agricultural journal for the Farm, Household and Garden in the country. $1 50 per year. Orange Judd Co., New York.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. A. H. Price has recently met with a sad bereavement. His wife died after long illness on Nov. 25th 1878.

Colonel Shorter is building a female college in Rome Ga., to cost $75,000, which he will present to the Baptists of that State.—Presbyterian.

Rev. A. D. McClure was on 8th ultc., elected pastor of the Providence church at McAfee, Ky., to fill the vacancy occasioned by the removal of Rev. H Glass to the pastorate of the church at Richmond, Ky.

"The Presbyterian church of Quitman has succeeded in securing the services of Rev. C. C. Britt, of Atlanta. Mr. Kerr will preach his farewell sermon to his congregation here to-morrow. Mr. Britt is highly spoken of as a preacher of talent and ability and as a Christian gentleman."—Quitman (Ga) Free Press.

In a business note the Rev. J. G. Feekler, of Liberty, writes us:

"I have just closed a meeting of one week's duration in Baney, ten miles from Liberty. The interest was marked from the beginning, a number inquiring, and some finding the way of Life. It is an inviting field, and I propose to visit it again in February."—St. Louis Presbyterian.

We are requested to give notice that the Presbytery of Mississippi will meet at Red Lick church, on Tuesday, January 7, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M., to dissolve, if the way be clear, the pastoral relation existing between Rev. J. S. Shaw and the church at Rodney.—Southern Western Presbyterian.

The Weatherford church has recently received five members, two on profession and three by letter. On the third Sabbath in November Rev. L. B. Cheney, the pastor, ordained two additional elders and three additional deacons. The church, after a very severe struggle, is now thoroughly organized and in good working condition. Its influence is felt in the community. Brother Cheney should feel greatly encouraged in his work, and its steady success."—Texas Presbyterian.

God has again blessed Pauldingville church. I have just closed a twelve days' meeting, which resulted in the addition of nineteen members to the Church—sixteen to Pauldingville, two to Olivet and one to the Baptist church. For three years or more, there has been constant trouble among the membership which has ham-strung the little organization, and the object of the meeting was to adjust these troubles, if possible. Three days were spent in the effort to harmonize, and at last it was agreed that all should publicly and formally forgive each other, and live and act as if no trouble had ever existed among them, each pledging never to refer to the past unless with forgiveness and sorrow. This public confession and forgiveness was thought to be best, as every one in the community knew that there was much trouble in the church, and has been for three years or more. I think I shall never forget the solemnity that fell upon the hearts of all when words of confession and forgiveness fell from the lips of those who had been so long estranged. It was easy to reach the hearts of sinners when Christians were completely melted. We pray God for the mighty demonstrations of His power and feel sure that others will be gathered into the church as the result of this meeting. To God be all the praise.—Rev. C. R. Dudley in St. Louis Presbyterian.

NORTHERN.

The Clinton Ave. Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, was surprised and grieved last Sunday morning when Dr. Storrs, who occupied the pulpit, read a letter of resignation from the pastor, the Rev. W. I. Budington, D. D. Since last Spring Dr. Budington has been suffering from a cancerous affection of the lip, upon which several operations have been performed, the last of which hoped with a promise of success. His entire recovery, however, depends upon entire rest and quiet, which, as it seems, could only be secured by retiring from his pastoral charge. Dr. Budington's active service in Brooklyn extended over a period of twenty-three years. It was in 1853 when the Clinton Ave. Church was organized that he removed from Charlestown, Mass., to become its pastor.—Christian Union.

Louisville Presbytery lately held two adjourned meetings in Warren church. In the matter of a settlement with Rev. Dr. Wilson of the First Church, for services rendered, Presbytery recommended that they pay him up to the 1st of January, 1879. The pastoral relation between him and his flock was dissolved, and the name of the church changed to the "Central Presbyterian Church." The petition to be reorganized was withdrawn on account of objections raised by some of the trustees of McKee Chapel. They consider it held in trust by them for Brooklyn Tabernacle, and until instructed to transfer it to other parties are not at liberty to act. Reorganization, according to the deed, would have given the Wilson party undisputed possession of the property. Presbytery, recognizing the justness of the objection, advised a withdrawal of the petition for reorganization. In the meantime they have the use of the building, and we have no doubt the transfer will be made on terms satisfactory to all concerned.

The Warren church troubles are not healed yet. Presbytery heard all their statements and advised them to elect additional elders, come together in the spirit of the gospel, confess their faults one another, and, for the sake of Him who laid down His life for the Church, to bury the past and be friends. The trouble in this church as in all such cases, is that they confess one other's faults instead of the way laid down in the Scriptures. Rev. Andrew Thomas is supplying the pulpit, and the attendance is good.—Correspondent Herald and Presbyter.

NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.

SECULAR NEWS.

Mr. James M. Towles died in Raleigh a few days since, aged 71. We have no further details. Mr. Towles was a merchant, highly respected by his fellow-citizens, and, at the time of his death, a ruling elder in the Second Presbyterian church. He had been for many years previous to the formation of the Second church an elder in the First church.

Capts. S. W. Skinner and R. P. Paddison, the latter owner of the steamer Northeast, destroyed in the late fire, have purchased another steamer, the Isis, and will put her regularly on the Point Caswell line.

Hon. George Davis will deliver his lecture for the benefit of the widow and children of Lieut. Benner on the 3d inst.

The amount saved to the tax-payers of Wake by the tax injunction proceeding is over $16,000, and about $7,000 is saved to the tax-payers of Halifax. The aggregate saved to the tax-payers of the two counties is $23,000, which is quite a sum these hard times.—Raleigh News.

A terrible accident from the explosion of nitro-glycerine (dynamite) occurred at Oak Ridge N. J., on 29th ulto. Three men were blown to pieces and their remains scattered piece-meal over a hundred acres of adjacent ground. The mixing house was pulverized. This is the fourth explosion at the works.

We have the beats of reasons for saying that if a charter can be obtained, the Raleigh & Augusta Air-Line Railroad Company will extend their track from Hamlet to Charlotte. —Wadesboro Herald.

Two survivors of the wreck of the steamer Emily B. Souder which foundered at sea lately, have been picked up. They saw the boat with passenger capsized alongside, but lost sight of the other boats. The Souder was the vessel charged with carrying the yellow fever to New Orleans this last season.

Myer S. Isaacs, a prominent Israelite and senior editor of the Jewish Messenger, of New York, is being urged upon the President for the position of minister to Berlin.

Diphtheria is prevailing to an alarming extent in Rockingham county. In one family five children died, in another four,—all there were in the family.

Halifax, N. S., and Havana are to have steam communication.

Rosza Sandor, the robber king of Hungary, has just died in prison. He came honestly by his calling, for his father and grand-father were both brigands of high standing in their profession. He however excelled them both in all the qualifications that go to make an ideally picturesque brigand. Thirty years ago it was not safe to travel in certain parts of Hungary without buying a permit from this robber chief. In 1818 he did brave service as a patriot leader, and did not finally fall into the hands of the authorities until 1868.—Christian Union.

DONATIONS.

At this season of the year it is usual for persons benevolently disposed to place in our hands funds to send the PRESBYTERIAN to those who want the paper, but who are utterly unable to pay for it. Such persons are often the aged and infirm—sometimes widows of deceased ministers—and always perhaps those to whom the weekly visits of the paper are considered weekly blessings.

We put the paper to all such at the rate of $2 per year. Who will make glad the heart of the poor in this way?

We will make specially favorable terms to supply those of any church, who may be unable to take the paper, when appealed to by the session of the church acting officially.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practible to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

In Washington, N. C., on Monday, December 9th, Mrs. ANN ELIZA POTTS, in the 69th year of her age.

Mrs. Potts was the wife of Mr. Joseph Potts who is doubtless well-known to a large number of your readers, especially those who are members of the Presbytery of Orange. She was in every respect a help-meet to him. She was married in the summer of 1825; in the winter of the same year she publicly dedicated her life to the Saviour of mankind and united with the Presbyterian Church in the town of Washington. She professed Christ as a young woman just entering upon the cares and responsibilities of life; since that time she has indeed witnessed a good confession, living as a consistent, humble Christian until the day of her death.

In December, 1825, she entered the Church militant; in December, 1878, she entered the Church triumphant. Fifty three years did she follow the voice of the Good Shepherd and her testimony was that he had led her faithfully according to his promises. Through youth, through middle life, through old age, with all the trials incident to each period, His grace had been sufficient for her and His strength had been made perfect in her weakness. Her life has been a useful one and her loss will be felt and mourned both by the Church which she loved so well and the community in which she had lived so long. Especially will this loss be felt by her aged husband who has journied for more than half a century with her towards the better country, and has found her a congenial companion not only in temporal but spiritual things. In her family relations, as wife, parent and grandparent, she was particularly lovely. Indeed, with reference to all the relations of life, it might well be written as her epitaph, "Faithful unto death," and above the epitaph the hand of faith might carve a crown.

Life's duty done, as sinks the clay,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While heaven and earth combine to say,
"How blest the righteous when he dies!"

S. M. S.

On the 11th instant, at her residence in Fayetteville, after an illness of a few hours, Miss MARY ANN POTTER, a daughter of Judge Potter, formerly a resident of the same place.

She suffered little pain, and passed away very quietly. The deceased was for many years, a devoted member of the Presbyterian church. She was amiable in disposition, and had many friends. Having her sister's children committed to her charge during their tender years, she acted towards them a parent's part, and won their warm affection. Her trials were numerous, but by Divine Grace they were sanctified, and wrought in her "the peaceable fruits of righteousness." Her kindred, walking in her pious steps, may hope to meet her in the Heavenly Rest

BEATTY'S OFFER FOR THIS MONTH!
$340.00 Piano Upright Parlor Organ, 5 Octaves, 13 Stops, 2 Knee Swells, for $85.00

This Beautiful Piano Upright Cabinet or Parlor Organ, (this cut). New Style No. 1665. Dimensions—Height 83 inches. Length 50 ins. Depth 24 ins. Three (3) sets of Reeds, thirteen (13) Stops. (1). Æolian. (2) Vox Celeste. (3) Echo. (4) Dulciana. (5). Violina. (6). Vox Humana. (7). Principal. (8). Hautboy. (9). Diapason. (10). Dulcet. (11). Grand Organ. (12). Principal Forte. (13). Flute. Five Octaves, Upright Bellows with immense power. Hinged Lamp Stands, out of sight when not in use. Beatty's Improved Knee Swell, and Beatty's New Excelsior grand Organ Knee Swell. Magnificent highly finished Black Walnut Case and Elegant French Veneered Panels. All late Improvements. Weight when boxed 300 lbs. It contains Beatty's New Vox Celeste Stop which is by far the sweetest and most perfect that has ever been obtained. Charming! is the universal exclamation of critics and lovers of sweet music who have heard this combination. The sudden burst of harmony thrown out by the Beatty Grand Organ Excelsior Knee Swell, from the scale being performed by a professional is inimitable. Regular Retail Price asked for such an Instrument by the Monopolists Agents about....$340. I will sell this Beautiful Organ during this month in order to have it introduced, boxed and delivered on Cars for only $85.00 Can be shipped on an Hour's Notice. Please send your order by letter or telegraph. No money required until you are entirely satisfied. Pay for the Instrument only after you have fully tested it at your own home. If it is not as represented, return it at my expense, I paying freight charges both ways. This certainly is a fair offer. Remember this offer is not good after this month and that I positively will not deviate from this price. ☞Fully warranted for 6 years. I want this instrument more generally introduced—hence this unparralleled offer.

It is about the actual cost of manufacturing. Order at once, as every Organ when introduced in a new locality sells others. It is a standing advertisement. Hence I can thus give you this splendid bargain, by selling you the first one at cost. You will do well to accept this great bargain. Over Seventy Thousand of Beatty's Celebrated Pianos and Organs are now in actual use throughout the civilized world, and I challenge any one to show one that does not give perfect satisfaction. Sales now very large, constantly increasing at a rapid rate. The most successful house in America. More unsolicited testimonials than any manufacturer. I have extended my sales now over the entire world. The sun shines nowhere but it lights my instruments. Since my recent return from an extended tour through the Continent of Europe, I am more determined than ever, that no city, town, or village throughout the entire civilized world shall be unrepresented by my celebrated instruments. Beware of imitations! My great success has brought into existence hundreds of irresponsible imitators. Beware! Buy the best! But avoid the monopolists and irresponsible houses. Illustrated Newspaper, with much information about cost of Pianos and Organs, free to any address. This Advertisement will appear but once, and nothing can be saved on this instrument by correspondence. Order now! If you do not want one yourself, order one, and make your friend a handsome present. ☞This is the cheapest offer yet made. Address, DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey, U. S. A.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Watch Your Words.

Keep a watch on your words, my darlings,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet, like the bees' fresh honey,
Like the bees they have terrible stings.
They can bless, like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut, in the strife of anger,
Like an open two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged
If their errand is true and kind;
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind;
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompts the words, let them be unsaid;
They may flash through a brain like lightning,
Or fall on a heart like lead.

Keep them back, if they're cold and cruel,
Under bar, and lock, and seal;
The wounds they make, my darlings,
Are always slow to heal.
May peace guard your lives, and ever,
From this time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the beautiful words of truth.

Castle-Building.

BY JOSIE KEEN.

Ella was comfortably seated in a great arm-chair, reading of heroic deeds and wishing, oh! so much that she might accomplish something to make her famous—something to be talked about and to win praise from all who knew her, as well as from an admiring public far and wide.

"Now, if I were only old enough to be a Florence Nightingale, go to the seat of war and nurse the wounded soldiers, wouldn't that be splendid? Or, like Grace Darling, rescue some one from a watery grave. Dear me, what can or shall I ever do?"

And foolish Ella, forgetting her room needed righting, that she had not yet practiced her music lesson, or that her mother might need some assistance this busy morning with nurse sick and Willie fretting over not receiving his usual attention, went on idly dreaming or planning what she would do at some future day, when big enough to accomplish something worth while.

"Ella, dear," called out a sweet, gentle voice from the parlor door, "won't you please run up into the nursery and help amuse Willie? Jennie's face is aching so badly she cannot pay much attention to baby."

"Oh, dear! it is always just so; I no sooner get comfortably seated reading than I must go and amuse Willie. He's a perfect bother!" mentally said Ella, as she slowly closed her book, and still more slowly rose out of the arm-chair into which she had curled herself for a good indulgence in reading and castle-building.

"Come, Ella, Willie will get to fretting real hard, and then it will be much more difficult to amuse him."

"But mother, this is Saturday, and I think I might have a little rest and pleasure of my own, without having to amuse baby whenever he is cross and fretful."

"Very true, dear, it is your holiday, but cannot you find pleasure in making others happy? I would not have my little girl grow up cold and selfish, thinking only of her own enjoyment."

"Grow up cold and selfish," repeated Ella, as she ascended the stairs. "Why, mamma doesn't know what great things I mean to accomplish one of these days. How I do wish I was big enough now to go away to China or Africa to teach the heathens, or do something of the kind."

A scream from Willie quickened her steps, but her brow bore a rather sulky look as she turned the knob of the nursery door.

"Oh, Miss Ella! I'm so glad you have come. I have a distracting toothache and the neuralgia all down the side of my face and I can't amuse Willie no way."

"You took cold talking for so long a time over the fence last evening," replied Ella, in no very gracious tone. "There, Willie, stop your crying, or I'll not play with you. Just see, you have up-set the soap-suds and broken your soap-bubble pipe."

Willie had stopped crying upon his sister's entrance into the room, but now he stood with quivering lips, scarce knowing whether to confess he was sorry or to rebel and again set up a defiant yell.

What has become of Ella's wish to care for wounded soldiers or to teach the heathens? Has she poured oil upon the troubled waters? helped to ease Jennie of the torturing pain she is so patiently trying to endure? or seen what gentle words may do to quiet Willie? Alas, no! The work just before her does not seem grand enough to claim her attention. It is not one that will win praise from her fellow-creatures, and so Ella sets about amusing her little brother in a pre-occupied, listless manner. Jennie is not sent to lie down, or Willie put into a thorough good humor, until mamma is disengaged, enters the room, and by her bright, sunny face and manner sets things to rights. Jennie has something given her for her tooth and a soothing lotion to bathe her face, and is then sent off to lie down and rest. Willie is taken upon the lap and soon quieted with a pretty picture-book.

Ella watches these proceedings, wondering why she had not thought of them, and with regretful feeling tells her mother so.

"Well, Puss, it is not easy to put old heads upon young shoulders."

"But, mamma, only this very morning I was planning what great deeds I meant to do, and was wishing to begin them right straight off."

"And forgot that the work directly before you was the only one God requires of you. I'm afraid my little girl indulges in castle-building. Like bright bubbles they will soon fall to pieces deary, unless you first lay a firm foundation."

"And how, can I do that, mamma? I don't quite understand your meaning."

"It is this. Day-dreaming, or castle-building as I call it, for the future time to the neglect of present duties, is apt to weaken the character instead of strengthening it, so when the time comes for some great and heroic deed, such a one is unnerved or incapacitated to act in the way they had dreamed they should. While another, who forgets self and daily strives to make others happy, unconsciously performs brave deeds all the time. This is the firm foundation of which I spoke. And you see, Ella, when a time comes for what you consider great and heroic deeds, they are performed as naturally and with as little thought of self as the simple ones that have long been transacted; and dear child, let me add, without a thought of this world's applause as castle-builders expect to follow their great deeds."

Ella looked thoughtful. Had mamma so clearly read her thoughts? Or was this really the way with all dreamy castle-builders? If so, she would not be one of them. And forming a good resolution, she no longer found the care of dear Willie a bother, or present duties distasteful. But, in the strength of Him who ever helps His trusting children to do right, Ella, at once set about building a firm foundation against the time she might be called upon to make greater sacrifices for others.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

What Lou Did.

"We have queer girls at school," said little Lou.

"Why? Do they wear odd dresses or bonnets, or any thing of that sort?" asked Cousin Hal, laughing.

"No," said Lou, eagerly. "But there are so many things they won't believe. For instance, Lucy Smith says there is no use in being a Christian; those she knows are not a bit better than other people."

"Cannot you show her there is something real in being a Christian?"

"I am only a little girl, Cousin Hal."

"Yes, darling; yet I am sure there must be some way for little girls, even, to show love for Jesus."

Lou began to be very careful of her words and deeds, but she asked particularly that God would fill her heart with love to everybody, even to those who were unkind to her.

One day Lucy Smith came to her at recess and whispered, "Dear Lou, I take back all I said about Christians. You are so kind to that disagreeable Sue Nolan, though she does all she can to vex you, that I really believe Jesus helps you. After all, Lou, I would like to be a Christian."

How glad Lou felt! How thankful to her Heavenly Father, who had thus helped her, a very little girl, to honor him before the world! —S. S. Visitor.

Baby and the Live Doll.

[Baby takes Jem into the great room with "S. C.," short for 'Santa Claus," on the door. There Jem has an interesting chat with the Saint, and sees wonderful things :]

They were standing near a table where a worker was just putting the finishing touch to the dress of a large wax doll, and just at that moment, to Jem's surprise, she set it on the floor, upon its feet, quite coolly.

"Thank you," said the Doll, politely.

Jem quite jumped.

"You can join the rest now and introduce yourself," said the worker.

The Doll looked over her shoulder at her train.

"It hangs very nicely," she said. 'I hope it's the latest fashion."

"Mine never talked like that," said Flora. "My best one could only say 'Mamma,' and it said it very badly, too."

"She was foolish for saying it at all," remarked the Doll, haughtily. "We don't talk and walk before ordinary people; we keep our accomplishments for our own amusement, and for the amusement of our friends. If you should chance to get up in the middle of the night, some time, or should run into the room suddenly some day, after you have left it, you might hear—but what is the use of talking to human beings?"

"You know a great deal, considering you are only just finished," snapped Baby, who really was a Tartar.

"I was FINISHED," retorted the Doll. "I did not begin life as a Baby!" very scornfully.

"Pooh!" said Baby. "We improve as we get older."

"I hope so, indeed," answered the Doll, "There is plenty of room for improvement." And she walked away in great state.

S. C. looked at Baby and then shook his head.

"I shall not have to take very much care of you," he said, absent-mindedly. "You are able to take pretty good care of yourself."

"I hope I am," said Baby, tossing her head.

S. C. gave his head another shake.

"Don't take too good care of yourself," he said. "That's a bad thing, too."

He showed them the rest of his wonders, and then went with them to the door to bid them good-bye.

"I am sure we are very much obliged to you, Mr. Claus," said Jem, gratefully. "I shall never again think you are not true, sir."

S. C. patted her shoulders quite affectionately.

"That's right," he said. "Believe in things just as long as you can, my dear, Good-bye, until Christmas Eve. I shall see you then if you don't see me."

He must have taken quite a fancy to Jem for he stood looking at her, and seemed very reluctant to close the door, and even after he had closed it and they had turned away, he opened it a little again to call to her.

'Believe in things as long as you can, my dear."

"How kind he is!" exclaimed Jem, full of pleasure.

Baby shrugged her shoulders.

"Well enough in his way," she said, "but rather inclined to prose, and be old-fashioned." —St. Nicholas for January.

Up Goes the Blue Blanket.

THE "Blue Blanket" is the historical name of one of Scotland's time-honoured and most celebrated treasures. It is the standard or banner of the incorporated trades of the ancient Northern capital. Though little heard of now beyond the precincts of Edinburgh, and known to few even to those strangers who take interest in Scottish antiquities, it was once famed in history, and has many associations with the past. King James I. in his 'Basilicon Doron," when venting his royal indignation at his too independent Scottish subjects, said of the Edinburgh tradesmen, "The craftsmen think we should be contented with their work, and if in anything they be controlled, then up goes the Blue Blanket." He meant that the citizens of Edinburgh were independent and difficult to manage, as some kings, especially his son Charles I., found the free citizens and the 'apprentices of London, with their trained bands, in later days.

Now, this Blue Blanket has a romantic history. According to Pennicuick, the order of the Blue Blanket was instituted by Pope Urban II. in the twelfth century, and is, therefore, more ancient than any order of knighthood in Europe. This author tells us that a large number of Scottish mechanics who followed Allan, Lord High Steward of Scotland, and aided him in the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre from the infidels, took with them a banner bearing the inscription—"In bona voluntate tua edificenter muri Jerusalem." This banner which they styled the "Banner of the Holy Ghost," was, from its colour, familiarly known as the Blue Blanket. On their return they dedicated it, at the altar of St. Eloi, in St. Giles's Church, St. Eloi being the patron saint of the hammermen of Edinburgh, the guardians of this celebrated banner.

Further Pennicuick tells us that in acknowledgement of a royal service rendered him, King James III. confirmed the craftsmen in all the privileges of the Blue Blanket, which they obtained by permission as an immemorial possession, and he ordered it to be called in all times coming "The Standard of the Crafts within the Burgh."

The trades thus honoured renewed their banners or ensign, by way of pennon, and the Queen with her own hand painted upon it their heraldic bearings, namely, a saltier of St. Andrew's cross, a thistle, an Imperial crown, and a hammer. The inscription ran—

"Fear God and honour the king
With a long life and prosperous reign,
And we the Trades shall ever pray."

And at its appearance not only they, but all the artizans within Scotland, are bound to follow it and fight under the Convener of Edinburgh.

In all cases of civil commotion "up went the Blue Blanket." When James V. was seized in the streets at the instigation of magistrates and merchants, and imprisoned within the common jail, the Crown being in debt for vast sums to the town of Edinburgh, the trade displayed their banner, rescued their captive monarch, and conveyed him in safety to Holyrood Palace. It was very shabby of King James to forget this good service when he spoke from London in contempt of the Blue Blanket.

When the association against Queen Mary held a Parliament in the Canongate, Edinburgh being in possession of the loyalist troops, the craftsmen believing their religion to be in danger, displayed the Blue Blanket.

When that hapless Queen was lodged in the Provost's house, on her return from Carberry Hill, the first thing that met her eyes, on looking forth on the morning, was a large white banner, "stented betwixt two spears," whereon was painted the murdered Darnley, with the words, 'Judge and revenge my cause, O Lord." The poor Queen exclaimed to the assembled multitude, "Good people, either satisfy your cruelty and hatred by taking away my miserable life, or redeem me from the hands of such inhuman tyrants." Some of the rude rabble again renewed their insulting cries, but the citizens displayed their ancient standard, the Blue Blanket, and ran to arms for her deliverance; and had not the confederates removed her to Holyrood on pretense of restoring her to liberty, she would probably have been safe for a time under her burgher guards.

When an unruly mob sought to burst into the Tolbooth when James VI. and his Council were engaged in the discussion of religious matters, John Watt, Dean Convener of the Trades, drew up his lads the soldiers of the Blue Blanket, and kept the rabble back. The king, when in safety, swore that had it not been for the loyalty of the crafts he would have burnt the town of Edinburgh and salted it with salt.

The Blue Blanket mustered for battle.

Around it the patriotic citizens rallied, as the Scottish host marshalled on the Burough Moor ere setting out for Flodden, from which disastrous field it was borne back to Edinburgh by the devoted Randolph, captain of the City Band.

A venerable relic is shown to the curious at the Trades Institution. We are sorry to disturb an ancient illusion, but we happen to know* that the reputed Blue Blanket thus exhibited is not the original standard that was dedicated at the altar of St. Eloi on the return of the Scottish Crusaders from the Holy Land. That relic is still in existence in a place well known to a few antiquarians. But, after all, the banner brought safely home from Flodden's fatal field is worth far more to patriotic Scotchmen than the more ancient relic, however that may have been consecrated by royal or priestly hands It is very likely that the custodians did not trust so precious a treasure as the original Blue Blanket to the risk of possible capture in the war with the English.

Locomotives Without Fire.

Machines on the above-named principle are now at work on the tramway from Rueil to Marly, near Paris, and with very satisfactory results. The system in use is the one introduced by M. Francy, an engineer, and is based on the fact that water boils at a lower temperature proportionately to the reduction of atmospheric pressure. Most of our readers are aware that, although water requires a heat of 212 deg. Fahr. to boil at the level of the sea, a much lower temperature is sufficient to produce the same effect on the top of a mountain. We will now explain how that philosophical fact is practically employed. In a reservoir made of thin steel—we cannot call it a boiler, for it has neither fire-place nor fire—is introduced 1800 litres of water, at a temperature of 200 deg. Fah., and then covered up hermetically. The steam it gives off at once fills the superincumbent space, and produces a pressure of 15 atmospheres. As soon as any of the vapor is turned on for moving the machine, the pressure is reduced, and the water then begins to boil, producing a fresh supply of steam. Of course, that process is of limited extent, as, at the commencement, the liquid only contains a certain amount of heat, which is gradually diminished as the reproduction of steam takes place, at lower temperatures by the exhaustion of superincumbent pressure. So that a machine of this description would be, obviously, totally inadequate to any very prolonged journey; but for short transits it has been found extremely serviceable. As the amount of pressure required to work the engine is only five atmospheres, a series of valves are so arranged as to prevent a greater amount of force issuing from the reservoir than is necessary, and thus retaining, as far as possible, the heat originally contained in the water. The driving part of the machinery is nearly identical with that of ordinary locomotives, with a few modifications, with the purpose of guarding against the useless waste of heat originally introduced into the reservoir.—Galignani.

Recuperating the Brain.

The best possible thing for a man to do when he feels too weak to carry anything through is to go to bed and sleep as long as he can. This is the only recuperation of the brain power, the only actual recuperation of brain force; because during sleep the brain is in a state of rest, in a condition to receive appropriate particles of nutriment from the blood, which take the place of those which have been consumed by previous labor, since the very act of thinking burns up solid particles, as every turn of the wheel or screw of the steamer is the result of consumption by fire of the fuel in the furnace. The supply of consumed brain substance can only be had from nutritive particles in the blood which were obtained from the food eaten previously, and the brain is so constituted that it can best receive and appropriate to itself those nutritive particles during the state of rest, of quiet and stillness of sleep. Mere stimulants supply nothing in themselves; they gorge the brain, and force it to a greater consumption of its substance until it is so exhausted that there is not power enough left to recieve a supply —Manufacturer and Builder.

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE

Rev. Wm. R. ATKINSON, (late of Peace Institute) Principal.

Fall Term began Sep 12. Spring Term begins Jan. 30.

THE advantages which this Institute for Young Ladies offers, are not surpassed by any other in the South; they are; 1, Rooms, not only neatly, but handsomely furnished for Boarding pupils. In this respect it is not excelled by any other in the State. 2, There is not an inexperienced teacher in its corps of Instructors; the most important and deservedly popular schools of Charlotte have united with the Institute. The testimonials published in the Circular show the high character and ability of the other teachers who have been added to the Institute from out of the State. 3. For the extent of the instruction given the charges are less than those of any other first class school in the State. The charge of $140 00 for Board and Tuition includes every expense of boarding, with washing all text books and stationery used by the pupil in school duties. Free band Drawing, and one language, ancient or modern, at choice of parent. No supplemental bills sent in at the close of the Term. 4. In this Institute the health of the pupil is considered of equal importance with her Education.

REFERENCES: The principal refers with confident satisfaction to his successful career as teacher for the past three years in Peace Institute, Raleigh; during which the classes in his department were raised to a higher standard than ever before attained. He there instituted a system of bona fide written examinations, the papers of which were shown to the Principal of the Bingham School, the Mathematical Professor of Davidson College, who pronounced them equal to what was attained in the best schools and colleges for young men in the State. These papers were also shown to Professors Venable, of the University of Virginia, and LeConte, of the University of California, and drew forth from them testimonials as to the thoroughness and excellence of the teacher, which are published in the circulars of Charlotte Institute. The principal also refers to the Faculty of Davidson College, to Judge Alexander C. Haskell, Rev. Edward Miles and R. Means Davis, Esq, of South Carolina, as to those who have themselves engaged in the work of education.

IT SAVED THE PEOPLE of SAVANNAH GA. WHO USED IT DURING THE TERRIBLE EPIDEMIC of 1876.

MESSRS. J. H. ZEILIN & Co.,

GENTLEMEN—We, the undersigned, Engineers on the Georgia Central Rail Road, in grateful obligation for the benefits we received from the use of SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR during the Yellow Fever Epidemic in Savannah, Georgia, in the summer and fall of 1876, desire to make the following statement: That during the aforesaid Epidemic, we used the medicine known as SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, prepared by J. H. Zeilin & Co., and though exposed to the most miasmatic influences of the Yellow Fever by going in and coming out of Savannah at different hours of the night, and also in spending entire nights in the city during the prevalence of this most fatal epidemic, with but the single exception of one of us, who was taken sick, but speedily recovered, we continued in our usual good health, a circumstance we can account for in no other way but by the effect, under Providence, of the habitual and continued use of SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR while we were exposed to this Yellow Fever malaria.

Respectfully yours, C. B. Patterson, John R. Collins, Jas. L. Mallette, Melton F. Cooper.

"CLARK'S" TERTIUM QUID.

FARMVILLE, VA., Dec. 28, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of December 25 appears an article in which the writer commits many errors.

1. He argues that Christ came to be baptized because he feared the people would consider Him among "abandoned wretches" if He did not. For He says, "If any stayed away, they were no doubt regarded as abandoned wretches, who had cast off all fear of God and respect for His authority. Had Jesus stood among these, He would have been looked upon as one of them."

What a reason is this for the baptism of Jesus! The "Pharisees and lawyers" were not considered as "abandoned wretches," though they refused the baptism of John. See Luke: vii; 30. They were undutiful certainly; yet they were leaders and rulers among the people, and of such influence as to "carry the day" at last, against Christ, so that he was crucified.

2. If "the time had not yet come for Him to make a full revelation of His character and mission," why did He allow John the Baptist to say, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make His paths straight?" His coming and birth were published in all the land. His character and mission were published by John, before and after His baptism, and the Father bore witness to Him when John baptized Him. See Matt.: iii. At this time, He did not forbid that any one should declare Him. Afterwards He plainly and repeatedly declared Himself. He taught in all Gallilee, and His fame went out through all Syria. Matt.: iv; 23, 24; Luke: iv; 14–44. In John: iv; 26, and other places, He plainly declared that He was the Christ. If, now and then, He forbade this publication on the part of others, these were exceptional cases, or special circumstances.

3. As to the language of Christ at His baptism, He insisted that John should baptize Him, not as a catering to public opinion, as "Clark" teaches, but because it was obligatory upon Him that He should be "washed" in accordance with law, at his consecration or induction to office. It was right to conform to law. But a simple yielding to the fear of what people would think of Him, would not have been a fulfilling of "all righteousness." The obligation was to "fulfill all righteousness."

4. Where does "Clark" get his authority for saying that the baptism which was always called "the baptism of repentance, (into repentance), was as much a vow of future obedience as of past sin"—insomuch that the repentance could be separated from it at will?

The records indicate that John had finished his work at Jordan, when Jesus came to him. "All the people were baptized." After they had so expressed repentance, and given promise to receive Him who was declared to be coming, as Christ, then Jesus came before the public and began His public ministry. He did not "slip in," but came openly and publicly. And John, knowing that He could not receive the baptism of repentance, refused to baptize Him, until Jesus, in substance, said, "I do not ask the baptism given to sinners, but the washing, in conformity to law, that I may legally enter upon my ministry."

"Clark" argues that Jesus observed "other ceremonial appointments." Did He ever offer a sacrifice for His own sins?" Others did this for their sins. Will "Clark" venture his "feeble services" to show when and where Jesus did it?

He came under the law, and as a man, had to conform to it, ceremonially, in so far as it required His being set apart as "holy unto the Lord." This necessitated circumcision. But in this was no expression of repentance as to Him. It was consecration of offspring to God. The rights observed by Mary did not, as "Clark" argues, "signify the depravity of the offspring." Mary had human depravity. But the angel said that her offspring, in this case, should be "that holy thing, * * * the Son of God." If, then, "Mary performed the rites of purification," this had reference to herself, not to her offspring.

5. The "baptism of repentance" involved the fact of positive sin. Therefore, according to "Clark's" own argument here, Jesus did not receive that baptism; or, if He did, then He was impure, and Mary recognized "the depravity of the offspring." "Clark" will not improve the "indulgent public" if he teaches this latter idea. Yet he seems to do it.

6. As to what is, or is not "preposterous" to "Clark's" mind, in the idea that Jesus did not take part "in the sacrifices and ceremonies which had in them a continual resemblance of sin"—matters just nothing at all. Those sacrifices said for him who offered them, "I am a sinner, needing pardon and justification. I repent, and seek atonement for my guilt, in blood." Did Jesus ever offer such a sacrifice for himself? What sin had He to make remembrance of thus? But "Clark" argues that he must have done this in abject fear of what people would say of Him, if He did not do as they did.

7. What he says of John the Baptist's ignorance, is also naught. As soon as Christ instructed this "priest" he was no longer ignorant, and shows he was not, in baptizing Christ.

After this, "Clark" may accept the consecration, or not, as he sees fit; and may an "indulgent public" pardon his suggestion of errors.

SUSTENTATION IN FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The subscriber would remind the churches of his Presbytery that the first Sabbath in January, or as soon thereafter as practicable, is the time appointed by the General Assembly for the annual collection of Sustentation. According to the circular of our Assembly's Secretaries of Sustentation, "the effort now to be made has in view giving aid in support of 150 ministers, supplying some 400 churches, sending the Gospel to 400 vacant churches, assisting in the erection of nearly 100 church buildings, and furnishing preaching to our destitute colored population." During the year 1878 $200 were required to aid feeble churches within our bounds, and as at least one weak colored church will need help, an equal or a larger amount will be necessary during the present year. In other portions of our Southern land feeble churches wanting assistance to have the preached Gospel are much more numerous than among ourselves. In the Southwest, too, during the past year many of our strongest churches have been so ravaged and scattered by yellow fever that they will not be able to make their usual contributions to this cause. If, then, we would help ourselves, aid our brethren and honor Christ, let three things be done: Let all our churches take up a collection for Sustentation during the current two months; make this offering to our Lord as liberal as possible; and forward the amount promptly to the Presbyterial Treasurer, Rev. J. P. McPherson, by the last week in February. Do not wait till Presbytery in April to send in your contributions, as the Assembly's Committee of Sustentation meets the first week in March to make appropriations for the year, and should know by that time the amount of funds in hand to be apportioned among applicants.

SKETCHES.

CHURCH OF CONCORD TOWN.

The country churches of Concord Presbytery are older than the town churches, and in one case—Fourth Creek—the church is older than the town in which it is located. Rocky River and Poplar Tent churches, once occupying the southwestern half of what is now Cabarrus county, were organized nearly thirty years before the county was laid off. When the county was formed in 1792, and the town began to grow, the pastors of Rocky River and Poplar Tent would naturally give some attention to their own people residing in or near the town. But there was no organized church in the town for ten years after its settlement. In 1804 John Masters, Esq., made a deed for two acres of land in Concord to John Niehler (Neisler), Hugh Carothers, James Scott, John Rogers, Thomas White and Robert Purviance, elders of the Presbyterian congregation. It is thought that the church was organized about this time, by Rev. Jno. Robinson, of Poplar Tent, and that he supplied the church occasionally until 1818, and that the Rev. James Carrigan, pastor of Ramah and Bethphage also preached here at times. The Rev. Samuel C. Caldwell, of Sugar Creek, supplied the church once a month from 1818 to 1824. In 1828 and 1829 the Rev. Jesse Rankin, pastor of the Salisbury church, preached one-third of his time in Concord, and in 1833 and 1834 the Rev. Jno. M. Erwin, a native of the county, was their Stated Supply. From 1835 till 1853, a period of eighteen years, the Rev. Jas. E. Morrison, a native of Rocky River, was pastor of the church, dividing his time with Bethphage until 1839, and after that preaching all the time at Concord. In 1836, near the beginning of Mr. Morrison's pastorate, the old log church was torn down and a substantial brick building, still standing, was erected. In 1853 the Rev. P. T. Penick was elected pastor, and took charge of the church January 1st, 1854, continuing pastor until 1860, when he resigned. The Rev. R. B. Anderson served the church a short time in 1860, and also in 1865 about six months. Rev. Wm. M. Kilpatrick became pastor in 1862, and left in 1863. Rev. E. H. Harding was pastor from 1866 to 1870. The Rev. L. McKinnon, the present pastor, took charge of the church in 1871. During his ministry this church has made good progress, in members and in christian work. They have erected for themselves a large and handsome church and have lately established a classical school.

The situation of Concord is on the dividing line between the Scotch Irish and German settlements of Cabarrus county, and the names of the officers and members of the church are partly of each race of people. From the roll the following names are gathered: Neisler, Carothers, Scott, Rogers, Purviance, Smith, Milster, Shinn, Hudson, Russell, Means, Masters, Miller, Meisenheimer, Young, McLelland, Hamilton, Cannon, Coleman, Mahan, Spears, Harris, Pharr, Phifer, Gibson, Allison, Fink, Plunkett, Gorman, Burkhead, Price, Yorke, Brown, Area, Foard, McDonald, Moss, Fisher, Barringer, Gillon, Kimmons, Fetzer, King, McDonald, Bingham, Johnston, McNinch, and others. Many of these families have been recently added to the congregation, and a number have disappeared from the community. Unlike our country churches, the families of our towns are frequently transient in their stay, having few local attachments.

In 1853 a precious revival of religion was enjoyed by this church, under the preaching of the Rev. Daniel Baker, of Texas, when the members of the church were greatly refreshed and many added to the church. And again in 1866, the Rev. Robert Nall, D. D., of Alabama, held a protracted meeting and many others professed their faith in Christ. During the time of the present pastor, at several times precious seasons of reviving have been enjoyed and many added to the church.

This church has sent only one of its sons to preach the Gospel—the Rev. J. Y. Allison, now pastor of the church at Marion, La. Their present church building was put up at the cost of about ten thousand dollars, and was first occupied for worship by the Synod of North Carolina in October, 1874.

THE SABBATH QUESTION POINTED.

Your correspondent from Greensboro in estimating the number of persons compelled to labor on the Sabbath by the running of Sunday trains, has omitted in the calculation all the local employees of the post office department and the express companies. The addition of these will largely increase his estimate.

It is proposed to memorialize the Legislature for the prevention of this Sabbath desecration. In so doing the Synod, the Methodist Conference and the churches will be doing their duty as corporate associations.—But I wish to ask a question:

What is the duty of the individual Christian when God demands of him one thing and the world demands the contrary? The Apostles were divinely commissioned to preach. The Sanhedrin forbade them to preach in Christ's name. Penalties were threatened. "Whether it be right," answered Peter and John, "in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." They were confident that the Sanhedrin would admit the principle upon which they proposed to act, and hence the "judge ye." Now I ask, what is the duty of Christian employees? Where is their testimony, which would speak louder than Synodical resolutions or legislative enactments? Where, the martyr spirit of persecuting times?

DO THE BAPTISTS BAPTIZE?

We don't ask, "Have the Baptists a baptism?" for we are glad to believe that they have the "one baptism" of the Bible, equally as well as other Christians. It is quite another thing to ask, "Do the Baptists baptize?" for the "one baptism" of the Bible is not administered by man.

There is, the Scriptures assure us, but one baptism, and that is not the baptism which Baptists administer. This is so plainly true, that I suppose the Baptists themselves will admit it. For this "one baptism" effects results which Baptists will make no pretence of accomplishing; indeed, they most emphatically disclaim any such results for the baptism which they administer. For example, they utterly repudiate baptismal regeneration, but the "one baptism" of the Bible does regenerate. The "one baptism" of the Bible "baptizes into Christ." Now what is it to be in Christ? Let the Scriptures answer. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature" or creation; in other words, he is regenerated. Baptists do not pretend that their baptism regenerates; therefore theirs is not the "one baptism" of the Bible which does.—Furthermore, a sure consequence of baptism into Christ is the forgiveness of sin. "So many of us as are baptized into Jesus Christ are baptized into his death." That is, his death as an atonement for sin is ours, and therefore as an inevitable consequence of baptism into Christ, we are not under law—our sins are forgiven us. Now the Baptist does not pretend that his baptism procures the forgiveness of sin. On the contrary, he strenuously insists that one must be justified by faith, must be a believer, before he can be a fit subject for baptism. Therefore his "one baptism" is not the "one baptism" of the Bible; not the baptism of the famous sixth chapter of Romans, and second of Colossians.

"Baptism doth even now save us," says Peter. Baptists do not claim that their baptism saves. Therefore, again, theirs is not the "one baptism" of the Bible.

"We are all baptized into one body." That body is the Church. "Christ is head over all things to the Church, which is his body."—The one baptism of the Bible makes us members of Christ, and of the Church. Yes, say the Baptists, our one baptism does that. There is no church except the Baptist church. No one is a church member who has not received our baptism.

But this baptism which baptizes into one body is not Baptist baptism. "By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body." All Christians, for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." All Christians have received Bible baptism; but all Christians have not received the 'one baptism' of the Baptists; therefore, their one baptism is not the one baptism of the Bible.

The latter is administered by the Spirit and not by man. "I indeed," said John, "baptize you with water, but * * * He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." There is, then, a water baptism and a Spirit baptism. But are there then two baptisms? Certainly not, for the Bible says there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism. That, as we have seen, baptizes us into Christ, regenerates us; baptizes us into His death, thus procuring the forgiveness of sin; assures us of the resurrection of the body, for because He into whom we are baptized lives we shall live also; makes us members of that one church for which He gave Himself; in one word, that baptism saves us now and forever. Nothing else is Christian baptism. Water baptism is a second and altogether different thing unless it symbolize this regenerating work of the Holy Ghost. To identify water baptism with Spirit baptism; to make the first the invariable channel of the Spirit's work is to teach baptismal regeneration. There is but one way in which water baptism can be one with real Christian baptism:—it must symbolize it. Now, DO THE BAPTISTS BAPTIZE?

Themselves being witnesses, we say they do not. Said the Apostle Paul to the Corinthian Church: "This is not to eat the Lord's Supper." Their manner of observance utterly vitiated the ordinance because real communion was not symbolized in the rite. So, too, the ritual baptism of the Baptists is no water baptism because it does not symbolize the real. It does not, they themselves being witnesses. They say it does not symbolize the soul-purifying, regenerating work of the Holy Ghost, effecting oneness with Christ and thereby acceptance with God, but it commemorates the burial and resurrection of Jesus. We will not dwell here upon the absurdity of John Baptist and Christ's disciples commemorating events which they did not anticipate and which the Master forebore requiring them to believe because they could not receive them. Thomas would not believe even after the resurrection till he had tangible proofs.

The Baptists themselves, then, being witnesses, we say they do not baptize with water, because their water dipping does not symbolize the real baptism. Not because of the unscriptural mode would we refuse to acknowledge Baptist baptism, nor even go so far as the author of "William the Baptist," and refuse to administer baptism by dipping the upper half of the body as the Baptists do, for there is nothing symbolical in the mode; but we deny that it is baptism at all, because it does not symbolize the real. J. W. P.

RECENT DISCOVERIES AND OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY.

On Monday evening the Rev. E. White, of London, delivered a lecture in Victoria-road Church, Leicester, on "The Confirmation of Old Testament History by Recent Discoveries." There was a large audience. At the outset of his address, Mr. White briefly dwelt on the importance of the subject. He said the great difficulty which presented itself to men's minds in believing the Bible was the miraculous element which ran through it. If it were not for the miracles spoken of in the Old Testament, few would be inclined to disbelieve the stories it contained; but it was said that the miracles were unnatural, and a tissue of falsehoods, and therefore the whole book was disbelieved. If, however, they could prove that the ordinary part of the writings in the Old Testament were confirmed by the discoveries of modern times, they would have done something to help the weak faith of the present day. The reverend gentleman then spoke of the things lately brought to light in Egypt, and said that everything which had been found by modern scholars in their study of Egyptian social, military and thinking life, exactly corresponds with the account given in the books of Moses. In the Peninsula of Sinai also considerable explorations had been made during the last twenty years, and those who had engaged in them had said that whoever wrote the account of the wanderings of the children of Israel in the Wilderness must have had an intimate acquaintance with the locality, and at one place a large number of old tombs of great antiquity had been found, which were believed to be the burying places of those rebellious Israelites who fell under the wrath of God. In Palestine, Lieutenants Warren and Conder had been working in connection with the Exploration Society for a length of time, and they had recovered more than 2,000 names of villages which accorded with the names of places in the Book of Joshua, and they believed that the inhabitants of these places in the present day were the lineal descendants of those who lived there ages ago, and that the people had really never been swept out of the land. Mr. White then adverted to recent discoveries in Moab, Nineveh, Assyria, and Babylonia, and maintained that the result of them had been to establish the general truth of the history of the Old Testament, which helped them to believe in those miracles on which they rested their hopes. During the evening the choir sang in a very creditable manner the chorus, "And the glory," from the Messiah, and an anthem, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem;" Mr. Scott ably presiding at the organ.—Christian Signal (London).

OUR MISSIONS IN MEXICO.

Rev. A. Graybill, writes to the Texas Presbyterian, December 5th, 1878:

"I have just returned from a tour of about fifty miles up the Rio Grande, preaching in ranches on both sides of the river, an account of which might be interesting to your readers.

"A Mexican, converted three years ago, under the auspices of the Methodist Mexican mission, but now living out of the reach of his own church, came fifty miles, with a two-horse ambulance, to convey me to his ranche, "El Rudeo," to marry him and to preach to his people. I was glad to avail myself of so good an opportunity, especially as Don Leandro and Mr. Chamberlain, students for the ministry, had visited his ranche, and others in the valley, during the summer, and were instrumental in awakening an interest in the gospel; also Sr. Carrero had made a visit with a similar effect.

"We left Brownsville, Mr. Chamberlain, myself and the bridegroom, in the ambulance, and Juan Guia, an adult member of the Brownsville Mexican church, now living in El Rudeo, as out-rider. Such is his interest in the gospel that he came for this purpose. A cold norther blew almost in our faces, but our out-rider supplied us with hot coffee as we passed the ranches. I was surprised to find the roads on both sides the Rio Grande so thickly settled. There are ranches containing from fifty to a hundred souls, every four or five miles. The only unpleasant suggestions along the road were those which arose from seeing wooden crosses, every few miles, which marked the spot where some one had been murdered, and around the bases of these crosses, heaps of little sticks, which indicated the number of prayers that had been said for the dead by the pious passers-by. We arrived at the ranche of Los Trevinos about 8 o'clock at night, in the midst of rain, storm and darkness. Here I had an appointment to preach. We found a congregation of about twenty, shivering around a fire in the corner of a hacal, awaiting us. They gave the most solemn attention to the preaching of the word.

On the following morning we left our ambulance, crossed the Rio Grande, and walked four miles to a ranche called San Juan; the proprietor of which had been awakened first by Estahan Gracia, an elder in the Brownsville Mexican church. He had made an appointment for preaching that night in his house. About forty assembled, giving most serious attention to the Word.

Next morning we recrossed the river to Texas, got our ambulance, and arrived at the "El Rudeo" that same evening. We had preaching that night to a congregation of about forty. After preaching, the marriage ceremony was performed. So great was the interest of part of the congregation, including the bridal party, that they spent nearly the entire night in reading the Scriptures, asking questions and singing gospel hymns. Mr. Chamberlain, who is thoroughly acquainted with the language of the people, and whose zeal never tires, conducted meetings of that sort more than once, until 4 o'clock in the morning, at the request of the eager hearers. I preached three successive nights at the "El Rudeo;" attendance 30 to 40; more would have come but for a man of influence, who works diligently against the gospel. He read to the people from a Romish book that we are the followers of Luther, who left the priesthood only to marry a nun, but retracted his error, and confessed his sins to a priest before he died. But the Holy Spirit with the Word of God, is stronger than all the astuteness of error. Six persons who had been awakened by the previous visits of Leandro and Chamberlain were baptized, and three children. One man presented a most striking example of the power of the Holy Ghost. He said to me weeping, "Sir, I was in the army of Santa Anna, a soldier for many years, and I am guilty of every form of sin. Though fifty-one years old, I never saw a Bible until six months ago. I have been familiar with the forms and teachings of Romanism from my childhood, but never knew anything of the gospel of Christ. The Light came to me almost too late, but not too late. The power of God has touched my heart. I am a great sinner, but I have a precious hope in Jesus."

We returned to Los Trevinos on Saturday, where I preached Saturday night and Sunday morning to thirty or forty persons, who were exceedingly attentive to the Word, some giving clear evidence of conversion. Sunday evening we recrossed the Rio Grande to San Juan, where we had a congregation of eighty at night. After preaching, I baptized three young men, one of them was the proprietor's son. Many are interested in these ranches. The Holy Spirit accompanies the Word along the Rio Grande. We will visit these ranches once a month, and also establish preaching at other ranches along the road as the Lord shall give us entrance, and in this way place the gospel in reach of four or five thousand more souls. We returned home on Monday, thankful to the Lord for His great grace to us, and the people among whom we are permitted to labor. The work of the Lord continues prosperous on both sides of the river. The church building here received a slight, but not permanent injury by the great freshet on the Rio Grande this past summer. The water covered a great part of the city."

MY RECOMPENSE.

BY H. L. P.

Why must I grow old and die
While all in earth and sea and sky
Remains forever new and young?
Down where my youthful footsteps strolled
The harebell blossoms as of old,
The robins sing the songs they sung;

Brooks, ever on their winding way,
Laugh with the children of to-day
As once they laughed and played with me;
The clouds, coquetting with the sun,
Still into shades fantastic run,
Like scenes in old mythology;

The ocean ne'er forgets its wail,
The storm to scatter down its hail,
The sun its beams of light and fire;
The mountains, under crowns of snow,
Send down the law to vales below,
And never from their thrones retire.

All in earth and air and sea
Laugh at my infirmity:
Jeer at me for growing old,
Jeer me as they pass along,
With their music and their song,
Into ages yet untold.

But when earth forgets to roll,
Then shall answer back my soul
From beneath life's shading tree!
"Through the portal of the grave
Hastened I my life to save
From the doom that compassed thee."

TOIL AND BE HAPPY.

The Christian at Work thinks Ruskin never said a truer thing than this: "If you want knowledge, you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it." Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work his life is a happy one. Said a poor man in Brooklyn, the other day, with a family of eleven to provide for: "If I were worth a million dollars, I should not wish to do much different than I do now every day, working hour after hour. I love it a thousand times better than to rest." He has for nearly half a century been surrounded by workers, and has caught the spirit of industry. He loves his work better than food or sleep. He is happy who has conquered laziness, once and forever.

THE MOTHERLESS.

Sitting in the school-room, I overheard a conversation between a sister and a brother. The little boy complained of insults or wrongs received from another little boy. His face was flushed with anger. The sister listened awhile, and then, turning away, she answered, "I do not want to hear another word; Willie has no mother." The brother's lips were silent, the rebuke came home to him, and stealing away, he muttered, "I never thought of that." He thought of his own mother, and the loneliness of "Willie" compared with his own happy lot. "He has no mother."

Do you think of it when want comes to the orphan, and rude words assail him? Has the little wanderer no mother to listen to his sorrows? Speak gently to him, then.—Good News.

GOLD DUST.

"He's armed without that's innocent within.—Pope.

In the nature of things the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, but the end of wisdom is the perfect love that casteth out fear.—Joseph Cook.

It is better that joy should be spread over all the day in the form of strength, than that it should be concentrated into ecstacies, full of danger, and followed by reactions.—Emerson.

The one great obstacle in the way of man's doing God's will is his own unwillingness. Just to be willing to be cleansed—to be purified, to say, "I will arise." That step taken, what a new world breaks upon the soul! The cross, which seemed so hard to take up, is now a joy to bear. The will of God, once seemingly so stern, is now a delight.—Bishop Cummins.

"There is no God," the foolish saith,
But none, "There is no sorrow;"
And Nature oft, the cry of faith,
In bitter need will borrow;
Eyes which the preacher could not school,
By wayside graves are raised,
And lips say, "God, be pitiful,"
Who ne'er said, "God be praised!"
Be pitiful, O, God!

—Mrs. E. B. Browning.

The Bible does not need defence so much as it needs proclamation. It defends itself wherever it is known. Deep in every soul there dwells forever a witness to the truth, whose clear eye and steady voice will see and respond to it wherever it is known. We do not need to implore men to believe the truth. We only need that they shall apprehend it, and then we may defy them to deny it. And thus the Bible, as eternal truth, needs no other argument for its support than itself clearly preached.—President Seelye.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Items from Weekly Review, London:

There seems to be a strong progressive feeling in a portion of the Jewish community. The desirability of periodic conferences of Jewish ministers, somewhat after the fashion of the Church Congress, is mooted in one of their organs. The establishment of Jewish Sabbath schools in London is also advocated. Such institutions are, it appears, not altogether novel among the Jews, but have already an existence in Bristol and some other provincial towns. Last week a Jewish Young Men's Literary Society was started at Portsea.

There is now a "Protestant Sect of Buddhists" in Japan. A missionary at Osaka writes:—"The Honguwanji, or, as they are called, the Protestant Sect of Buddhists, in this city, have built a great school here, and are teaching the English language as well as Western science. They have asked me three or four times if I could teach metaphysics in this school, an hour a-day. I have partly promised to teach religion two hours a-week, but they do not seem to be satisfied with so little. I would that I had time and strength to go every day. There are about two hundred young men gathered together there, studying to be priests in this most progressive sect in Japan, a sect which has in its faith nearly every doctrine of Christianity except the vicarious atonement of Christ.

The British organization of the Evangelical Alliance has just completed the thirty-second year of its existence. In no previous year has there been so large an accession to the number of enrolled members as during the past twelve months, some 300 persons having been admitted by the London Council alone.

Items from the Christian Signal:

A Scotch lady, who had read the address of the Rev. W. Fleming Stevens on "Missions in India, China and Japan," which he gave at the last meeting of the General Assembly, has sent through Lady McClure a check for £500 for the Foreign Mission of the Presbyterian Church.

In spite of the angry denials made by the Ultramontanes, the belief is firmly maintained that Leo XIII. is persistently pursuing a conciliatory policy. It is asserted in Rome that the Pope has sent a letter to the Emperor William by the intermediary of the Papal Nuncio to Bavaria, congratulating His Majesty upon resuming the direction of affairs, and expressing the wish that the pending negotiations between Germany and the Holy See may have a satisfactory result.

A report has been adopted by the Glasgow Established Presbytery declaring that in the altered condition of modern society it is expedient, for works of necessity and mercy or for persons coming from the suburbs into town for Divine worship, that tram cars within assignable limits should be run. It is pointed out that there should not be one law for the rich and another for the poor, so that the former should use private carriages and cabs while the latter are debarred from cheaper conveyances.

Mrs. Holland and Miss Wales, of London, have conducted special services for the United Methodists at Retford, England, between two and three weeks. The results have far exceeded the most sanguine expectation. Night after night the large hall in which the meetings were held was crowded with anxious hearers, and the Spirit came down in a manner such as has never been witnessed in Retford within living memory, while to immense numbers the meetings have been most beneficial.

Items from various exchanges:

There are about 400,000 persons connected with the Christian churches in India, China and Japan, besides 200,000 children receiving a Christian education.

The Primitive Methodists of England, during the past year, raised missionary money to the measure of nearly one dollar per member, or about $150,000. These people are generally poor.

It is said that in 1809 there were but thirty-five Christian Hebrews in all England. In the interval 29,000 have been baptized, and one is Prime Minister.

The Greek Church seems to have become imbued with the spirit of missions, and according to an article in the Church Review, is making considerable progress in Japan. The effort commenced with the "Consular service" at Hokodadi, in 1859, where the chaplain, noticing an interest taken in his services by the Japanese, appealed to the St. Petersburg authorities. The Synod responded to the appeal, and four mission stations were established, converts were made, but persecutions followed, and many were thrown into prison. These were stopped on an appeal to the Yeddo Government, and the report is that the missions continue to prosper, and that there are now more than three thousand Greek Christian Japanese.

The special Relief and Church Extension Fund gifts of the British Wesleyans in 1858 reached a total of £81,000. Of this amount nearly $200,000 were paid over to the treasurers of the General Chapel Fund for the formation of a special "Loan Fund" to assist trustees in paying off church debts by the help of loans without interest. The reports show that since 1854, through this Fund, loans for relief have been made amounting to about a million of dollars, and yet the Fund itself is now larger than at the beginning—about $200,000.

The Bible Society of Geneva, Switzerland, has undertaken to send a copy of the New Testament to each school teacher in France. It will require about 80,000 copies. The Society has already sent about 27,000 copies, and needs funds to complete the work. The Society has received many letters of thanks, among them one from a Roman Catholic nun.

MISCELLANY.

Mr. Spurgeon's health is very poor, he lately had the following letter read to his congregation at the Metropolitan Tabernacle from the pulpit on Sunday morning:—"Nightingale lane, Balham, Surrey.—Beloved friends,—I have from day to day been looking for the high pleasure of worshipping with you to-day. Alas! it must not be. I cannot stand for even five minutes. During the night I have been fiercely attacked by rheumatism in the back and loins, and I now feel quite prostrate. How I long to speak again in the name of the Lord! Accept my hearty love. May God bless the two brethren who so kindly fill my place. Pray for me, and let nothing flag. Your devoted minister, C. H. SPURGEON."

Rev. James Davis has retired from secretaryship of British Branch of the General Alliance.

Mrs. Noble is engaged in the work indicated below:

"As a means of augmenting the funds of the Blue Ribbon Army Gospel Temperance Movement, it has been decided to give a Christmas Tree Entertainment, and Distribution of Prizes, on Boxing Night, at the above hall. Will you kindly assist us in this work by the donation of articles for distribution, or cash to purchase the same? Any description of goods, either fancy or useful, can be sent to Mrs. Noble, Lansdowne Villa, 32 Lansdowne-road, Dalston, and will be thankfully acknowledged by Thomas H. Ellis, jun., hon. secretary."

The district around Lloyd's Square, in West London, is (says a London correspondent) very much mystified. A number of ladies have suddenly appeared in the lodging-houses there who assume the womanly virtue of dumbness. They rise early, long before the sun, and go into the dark, cold street, saying no word to any mortal soul. They return immediately after nine at night; do not even ask for a candle but expect it to be given to them, and then pass, without so much as a "thank you," but with a sad smile and a dignified bow, to their rooms. They are devout Protestants "doing a retreat" at the Home of Nazareth occupied by the Sisters of Bethany. Most of them, it is given out, are ladies of wealth and position, some of them ladies of title. Early in the morning, precisely at the hour of six, they meet to do their devotions under the direction of the holy Ritualist Fathers who have been appointed for the service. Every moment of the day has its devotional occupation. The food is of the plainest. Talking is hardly tolerated. For nearly fifteen hours they are at prayers or at meditations. They should, properly speaking, not leave the Home. But the Sisters of Bethany cannot put them all up. So these ladies in retreat set forth every evening in mysterious silence to the neighboring lodging-houses, holding no communication with man or woman, neither asking nor answering questions, passing as if absorbed from their devotions to their beds, and from their beds, to their devotions. Such is the modern antique idea of the religious life.

In London there are 13,900 cabmen, and among them are men who have been lawyers, clergymen, and doctors, and there is one real nobleman who has a right to the title "lord." The articles found in cabs and passed through the police office last year amounted in value to $90,000, and the cab fares yearly amount to $20,000,000. Judging from the number of umbrellas left, or supposed to have been left in cabs, it is presumed that many cabmen must have a large stock of silk umbrellas constantly on hand.

We acknowledge indebtedness to a number of friends for favors in the editorial department and other departments of our paper. The modesty of some of our assistants prevents the publication of a list of contributors.

FAITHFUL IN LITTLE.

Never was it more needful that Christians should feel their obligation to be faithful in that which is least. Christ placed the widow and her two mites on the pedestal of immortality. The Church and the world have drawn strength and wisdom from study of that divine sculpture. Now and again are its lessons embodied in living reality before us. This was the case, according to an account in the London Christian Signal, on December 3d, in the thanksgiving offering of the London Wesleyan Methodists in their "City Road Chapel. Many thought that the stringency of the times should arrest any present attempt to raise money to relieve their present embarrassments and extend the Lord's work. But it was resolved to make an honest effort. The business was quietly presented, with only a fair congregation, but in a manner full of increasing enthusiasm and joy. The gifts were largely memorial of deceased fathers and mothers, and pastors ascended to their rewards; and in memory of spiritual obligations to Methodism. In fact, the meeting is described as "a Wesleyan financial love feast." The largest gift was $10,000, and the smallest was one dollar and twenty-five cents by a widow in an alms-house. The total amount raised was $156,000.

That noble widow is the lineal descendant —spiritually—of her of "two mite fame. Does not God think as highly of this nineteenth century widow's offering as He does of that of the Christian Dives? May not the Church sit at her feet to-day and learn afresh the lesson of giving? Have we any warrant for waiting until more prosperous times to lend to our Lord? Out of poverty our liberality should abound. The Lord's cause demands a cake out of the handful of meal. Self-sacrifice crowns with honor, is the fruit of love to God, testifies to the location of the heart's affections, and receives Divine endorsement here and hereafter.

Is trade depressed? Does a darker future project its sorrows over the enfeebled present? Do warning apprehensions inspire and enforce prudence? Shall the child of God then narrow especially and chiefly his benevolence? Alas! many begin in contraction with the Church. Ecclesiastical claims, that is God's calls through His own Church, suffer more denial than any claims of family, pleasure or business. Now ought not this state of things to be reversed? Should not the Church be the last to be cut down? Should not God receive the best? How much nobler, while one has any ability, to give liberally to every holy work, lest if fears of coming evil be realized, there be only mourning in the midst of utter wreck, that selfishness forgot God, and now He has justly left the narrow-hearted in ashes.

Another consideration should affect the pious heart. In these times of trial, business failures and shrinkage of values, the Lord's business suffers. Missions, Education, Sustentation, every sacred enterprise feels the common wound. Consequently immortal souls are in greater peril. Then the Church—Christ's Church—needs especially more help. Shall not each pious heart then say, 'According to my ability, honestly measured before God, will I give? Here are my two mites, here is my dollar and a quarter, which with joy and prayer I cast into my Lord's treasury.' If this spirit animate the Church there will be no want in the Holy Temple. Many gifts will swell into a mighty sum. Favored sons of wealth and grace will lay down humbly their $10,000 beside the $1 25. This ensweeping and broadening Nile of heavenly love in the heart will pour out unceasing benedictions on the Church and the world, and the harvest will be so grand that earth and heaven will unite in ceaseless song. "Bring ye all the tithes into the store-house, "that there may be meat in mine house, and "prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of "hosts, if I will not open you the windows of "heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that "there shall not be room enough to receive "it."

NOT TOO LATE YET.

Christmas has come and gone. The season of merry-making has past, and the world settles down to its every-day life. The wrinkles of care, the grooves of anxious thought, smoothed away by smile and tender ministries during the festive season, have returned with the wearying round of duties and toils. The long-drawn sigh, the earnest look and eager step, the closer drawing of purse-strings after the expenditures of Christmas week and the New Year, these all indicate care, economy, fears and anxious endeavors. The thrill of generousness, the pleasure of giving, now yield to the duty of justice and the pain of self-denial. Many doubtless chide themselves, and are filled with disappointment that there are so many purposes of good unfulfilled, so many designed kindnesses unwrought. In a moment of generous regard, they wished to do this favor for a dear friend, a favor that would have been a benefit and most warmly appreciated. But the time passed by. In a moment of sympathetic feeling, they purposed sending a token of remembrance to one sick or needy. But without accomplishing a sincere intention the season has gone. In a spirit of kindness, some act of benevolence was planned, in a feeling of tender recollection, some treasured memento was thought of, to be sent to the bereft and sorrowing, or some recognition of mutual distress.

Alas of how many of our noblest intentions and purest wishes is it true:

"The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it."

Yet he has lived to but little purpose who does not know that it is better to repair a wrong, to retrieve a neglect, to overtake a beneficent design, then to set in supine inactivity and regret or bewail what is past. It is not too late yet to do the deed you wished to do; to minister to the need, the distress, the wishes of others, as prompted by sympathy, kindness, friendship, charity or love. It is nobler to shew repentance for sins of omission by the performance of those neglected duties, than, to shed tears on account of them, metaphorical or real.

Indeed it is a matter worthy of serious reflection, whether it is desirable to manifest the spasmodic beneficence that marks the "season of good will." Certainly it is not, if it cultivates only a spasmodic and occasional charity. There are times when the sun's warmth is more intense and more fructifying. But he shines all the year round. And even in the winter when his heat is less felt, it is none the less grateful. So let us maintain constantly a spirit of kindness, and shew it by acts of friendship, gifts and tokens of love. So may we in other words, as the children say, have Christmas all the year. Happy the heart and the home where this spirit prevails. Neither wailing winds, nor naked boughs, nor desolate fields drive sunshine and summer time from such a life.

COMPLAINTS

Rev. Dr. S. J. Baird announces that he has notified the Moderator of East Hanover Presbytery of withdrawal of the complaint he had proposed to lodge in the next General Assembly against that Presbytery. The reason assigned is that his brother, Rev. Dr. E. T. Baird, requests it, and assures him that it stood in the way of his full restoration to the ministry. We are glad the complaint is withdrawn. Dr. E. T. Baird we are sure has the hearty sympathy of every one, and we say for ourselves, we will be heartily glad if he can be speedily restored to the ministry.

A few more complaints that will be before the Assembly might be withdrawn, it strikes us, without serious detriment to the Church at large or any member of it.

But a complaint is to go up from Mr. E. E. Bacon, of the church at St. Joseph's, Mo. "Mr. Bacon, says the Christian Observer, "was tried and convicted by the session, unanimously acquitted by the Presbytery, whose sentence was reversed by the Synod of Missouri. Against the judgment of the Synod he complains to the General Assembly, averring his innocence of the charges preferred against him, and alleging that the trial before the session was irregular and unfair. He prays the Assembly for relief, either by sustaining the unanimous judgment of the Presbytery or by remanding the case back to the session for a new trial."

DONATIONS RECEIVED.

Received on account of donation list—Mrs. J. S. M., $2 50; B. F. L., $2 00.

PROTECT THE ORPHANS.

A friend calls our attention to the necessity of legislation to protect the orphans of our State from the mismanagement of those having their funds in charge, as executors, administrators, &c. He cites a case where a large amount of money was irrecoverably lost, because the bond given by the guardian of a lady was lost by fire.

We do not know how far present laws are faulty on the above subject; but we very much fear that cases are not rare where orphans are defrauded, as is indicated. The laws may be faulty in their text, or in their execution, but however they may lack, the whole press of the State, and every honest man in the State, may be called on to do all in his power to prevent the frauds referred to, or to see that such laws are enacted as will justly punish them. Many of our legislators are Christian men, who might take the initiative in this matter; but, without waiting for them, there ought to be friends of the orphans everywhere, ready to place the matter before the Legislature in such shape that it cannot be disregarded.

A PLAIN DUTY.

An editorial in the last issue of the Southern Presbyterian on the subject of vacant churches is so appropriate that but for its length, we would give it to our readers entire. We append, however, a part, which is so applicable and thoroughly practical, that we trust it will be heeded and the advice followed, by such of our churches as are not supplied with regular ministrations of the Gospel; and such as are being supplied only occasionally can apply the suggestions to advantage.

And we urge further that according to the nature of our ecclesiastical system there is no need that a Presbyterian church should ever die or ever cease to put forth all the signs of life. In an important sense a Presbyterian church never can be vacant. It may be without a preacher, but it can never be without a pastor, yes, pastors. The ruling elders are the shepherds of the flock, charged with the duty of watching over it and supplying all its spiritual wants. Now no shepherd can watch a scattered flock. He is derelict, if he never gathers them together, or if he leaves them to wander at will, or is careless as to whether they feed on noxious or nourishing food. Accordingly our ruling elders are empowered and recommended by our standards, to assemble their congregations on the Lord's day "for the purpose of prayer, singing praises, and reading the Holy Scriptures, together with the works of such approved divines as the Presbytery may recommend, and they may be able to procure."

We rejoice to know that some churches follow this excellent method; and we have yet to hear of an instance in which it has failed to do good and give satisfaction. Would that it was pursued in every so-called vacant church! We firmly believe that it would not only keep them alive, but that it would secure growth, edification, and activity; it would keep up the practice of public worship; it would promote the due observance of the Lord's day; it would increase the desire of the people for the services of a regular minister; it would keep the congregation together and prevent that indiscriminate hearing which is so fatal to any settled religious views, and any uniform spiritual growth. It would also probably prevent the loss of members, who go off to churches which have regular services. Even the children of the church, who are, under these circumstances, most apt to join other churches, if trained to attend services at home and to feel that they were in a course of preparation to take an active part in the church of their fathers, would feel that they have an ecclesiastical home which they would love, cling to, and work for. But a silent, torpid, apparently dead church has no attraction for any class. It comes to be regarded as a mere abstraction or a legend of the past. Hence vacant churches become the large leaks by means of which our Church loses immensely every year. They ought to be the very reverse. With a faithful eldership to lead, there would be an interested and earnest membership to follow and to work, and growth even of members would be the result. What hinders the eldership of a vacant church from keeping up a live prayer-meeting? Why should they not have a Sabbath school in full and flourishing operation? The absence of a minister, so generally urged as the reason why they have neither, is the strongest possible reason why they should have both, and why they should give the utmost effort to their maintenance and success. They should by all means endeavor to supply the deficiency arising from their having no minister. And though some of them may be plain and unlettered men, yet with piety and zeal they can accomplish much in their sphere. It is just in such cases that the value of the eldership may and should be brought out.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The telephone is now being used by Prof. De Rossi, of Rome, to detect and measure subterranean sounds at Mt. Vesuvius. The microphone will be so perfected doubtless as to prove invaluable in medical practice.

One Fox advertised a "full-dress rehearsal" to take place in his theater, in Philadelphia, on Sunday, 22d ulto. A crowd of the worst description gathered around, and finally broke in. The Mayor of the city determined to break up the practice, had Fox arrested on Monday and bound over on different charges, among others, for giving a public performance on Sunday. Bond was duly forfeited, and there endeth Sunday rehearsals.

We are glad to see, in the Missionary for January, an account of our Indian Missions, and the promise of sketches in successive numbers of our different missions. It will not only awaken a deeper interest, because of the dissemination of information, but it will furnish to our Ladies' Missionary Societies material for the reports many of them have prepared at their monthly meetings of the work of the Church in the Foreign field.

Again do we commend this interesting and attractive journal to our household. "Knowledge is power" in the cause of missions, as in every other enterprise.

If our Sunday Schools, ministers, students and lovers of religious reading would purchase their supplies and make their orders of the Business Agent of our Presbyterian Committee of Publication, it would be to the advantage of the committee, as well as of the purchaser. Mr. J. L. Shotwell is the agent, and his address is No. 1,001 Main St., Richmond, Va.

The indignation at the conduct of the "Cardinal Prince" McCloskey, in allowing liquors to be sold at the great Catholic Fair, held lately in New York City, in the unfinished Cathedral, is not confined to "Protestant heretics," or "Puritan cynics," but is shared by many Catholics. A priest writes, in the last Interior, an earnest argument against the position of the Catholic Review in defense of the great iniquity.

"Kind words can never die," says the sweet old song. And this is a privilege of doing good within the reach of the humblest. We are told that, in ancient days, "they wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth." And He that spake was known as "the carpenter's son." The command comes to us: "Run, speak to that young man." Let the word be spoken in tenderness and affectionate fidelity, so that he may see evident sincerity and kindness. The sad exclamation cannot then escape his lips, "No man cared for my soul!"

From our secular exchanges we are glad to learn that the number of students at Davidson College, during the first term of the current academical year, was 101, which, it is reported, is 20 more than at the corresponding time last year, as they say in they cotton reports. And the number afloat for this safe port, to continue commercial language, is twice as large as is usual at the second term. There is reason, in other words, to believe that the number of accessions at the beginning of the second term will be considerably more than has been for several years past. We are truly gratified that the merits of this institution are attracting public attention and patronage. The area of patronage is now larger than at any previous period of its history. We are glad to chronicle these signs of success.

There is such a thing as dull hearing, as well as dull speaking. When the soul is alive and warm and hungry for spiritual food, familiar truths, freshly presented, even old sermons, or discourses with the same old, yet ever-precious teachings, are eagerly relished, and are profiting. It is often, therefore, not so much in him that speaks as in him that hears. "Take heed, therefore, how ye hear. It is not, likewise, equally true of the word written, as well as spoken, that much depends on the spirit with which it is read, the preparation of the soil for the seed sown? May the earnest words uttered by tongues of steam and from lips of lead—the many issues of the religious press all over the land—be as the good seed, in the good ground! We may surely say for ourself that it is our earnest purpose and desire thus "to do good," to speak messages of comfort, encouragement, warning and hope to the many thousands of Israel that read our pages—to be "instant in season and out of season."

How many children are kept from the Sabbath School by insufficient clothing, and by lack of comfort at the church! How many Sunday Schools in the country have been closed for want of a close, warm house and good stoves! Just think of thousands of children doing without the training of the Sunday School, without the interesting library books and the fresh, pretty papers; without the singing, praying and reading, the worship and praises of the children of the sanctuary! All because the indifference to comfort on the part of older people keeps the church open, unfurnished, cold and uncomfortable! Isn't it too bad?

One piece of advice we venture to give. It is a trifle trite, perhaps, to some, but it is needed by many, and may prove profitable to them (and to us). If you are in arrears to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, pay up all arrearages. If your subscription expires with the year past, renew promptly. If you do not take the paper at all, why, that is too plain a case. Your own good sense will tell you what to do.

Dr. Talmadge has been giving his hearers an insight into the "Dark Side of New York," and now Rev. Dr. R. M. Hatfield is preaching on the reverse side of the picture. He is showing what is done and doing by the citizens of that great metropolis in the interest of morality and religion. It cannot be denied that, with all the vices which flourish in every great city, New York has an open hand for every good work. Hundreds of thousands are given to found hospitals and and other charitable institutions; to build churches and to establish schools; and other hundreds of thousands, under direction of its benevolent citizens, are constantly applied to relieving individual suffering and want. There is a bright, a very bright, side to New York life.

Sooner or later, even in this life, despite every precaution to prevent detection and punishment, crime is apt to bring its perpetrators to grief. A New York paper thus traces what was at the time considered an inexplicable transaction:

"The robbery of the Union Trust Company of this city of $64,000, on a forged check, seemed, at the moment, a brilliant stroke of villainy. So skillfully executed was the forgery that it seemed impossible to detect the parties engaged in it. But a young man, now dying of consumption in this city, who was clerk of the company at the time the forgery was committed, was to have been tried this week; one of the parties is in the State prison; another is in prison in Ohio, and when his term expires will be taken to England to be tried for the murder of a woman; another is in a German prison for making and passing counterfeit money. One of the gang has turned State's evidence, and another, a poor old man, has been let out on bail. Only one man connected with the affair has not been arrested. It was a glittering prize to snatch by one daring act, but dearly has every man who had a hand in it had to pay for his guilt."

In this country there is an extraordinary production of breadstuffs, which is all the better for our future prospects. Receipts of grain at the Atlantic ports were for eleven months of 1878—235,071,618 bushels being 50 per cent. greater than those of any previous year. Undoubtedly times will soon be better, are even now better north of us. All accounts agree that the outlook in that section is favorable. Now let those who are hoarding their money for fear of worse times, pay their debts and get the money into circulation, and well soon see a revival of prosperity.

Victor Emanuel was excommunicated by the infallible (?) pope Pius IX; now the infallible (?) pope Leo XIII, authorizes commemorative services in honor of his death. Yet Rome never changes.

Is the Moffett liquor law an advantage or otherwise to any State adopting it? We believe that properly executed it will raise a very large amount of revenue, but we believe further—that is to say the writer—believes—that total prohibition of the sale of liquor is the proper and most effective measure—not for raising revenue, but for reudering revenuce unnecessary, at least to a great part of the extent to which it is applied in building and supporting jails, penitentiaries sheriffs, judges, &c., &c., &c.

But as to the Moffett law here is what the Auditor of Virginia says:

Auditor Taylor sent in a report of the operations of the Moffett liquor law showing the total receipts from the time of its commencement to be $482,834, being an excess of $210,638 over assessments of the preceding year, which, after deducting the rebates allowed under the law, leaves a net balance of $110,761 in excess of the results of the old law. The Auditor says the result of the experiment shows clearly that the law is capable of being made a powerful agency for raising revenue, and suggests a number of modifications and changes to that end.

CHURCH AT WINSTON.

MR. EDITOR: There has been quite a pleasant state of religious feeling in the Winston church recently. At the communion on the third Sunday of this month Brother Johnston received four into the church by examination and four or five others by certificate. Services were continued during the week. A number of persons manifested an interest; several expressed a hope and will probably soon unite with the church. Among those who joined the church and who were interested were several prominent citizens, lawyers, merchants, &c. The whole church was interested, prayer-meetings were held, in which several of the elders and other male members of the church took an active part, testifying publicly to the ability and willingness of Christ to save, and exhorting sinners to put their trust in Him. SUSTENTATION COMMITTEE OF FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

This committee will meet on Thursday, the 13th of February, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M., in the lecture room of Fayetteville Presbyterian church. It consists of Rev. D. Fairley, Rev. M. McQueen, and Elders B. Fuller, Jos. A. McArthur, Dr. Hugh A. McSwain, with the chairman. Churches requiring aid in supporting their ministers during the current year will please forward their applications to the chairman before the time above mentioned. These applications should state what part of a minister's time is wanted, what sum is raised by the church, and whether it is in proportion to its ability, and what amount of aid is desired.

H. G. HILL, Chairman.

A NEW YEAR'S VISITATION.

TAYLORSVILLE, ALEXANDER CO., January 1st, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: You do not hear very often from Taylorsville church, but you always hear words of cheer. The good people here have just sent their happy New Year to their minister in the shape of two wagon loads of glad surprises; not pound packages, but honest, old-fashioned mill-sacks, well-filled and plump bundles that appeased the wants of every living creature at the parsonage, and will give us, for one spell at least, everything needful for comfortable living, except a good appetite: and those hams will tone up that ally of a good conscience. I am happy to see by the wrappers around the various gifts that the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN is taken by all generous Presbyterians, and I am sure that my hearty thanks will reach all the donors through your columns, to long remind us all of the mutual pleasure given by this expression of good-will and affection.

THOS. G. THURSTON.

A PLEASANT EVENING.

Unexpectedly called by business to be in Raleigh, Friday after Christmas, and not being able to leave until the next day, I accepted the courteous invitation of Mr. John B. Burwell, the eminent and successful Principal of Peace Institute, and spent Friday evening in its halls. Others have told of happy hours there. I thought you would let me speak of this pleasant and festive evening. It was a stinging cold night, and distant stars amid black masses of cloud, glittered through the icy air; the earth was clad in silver, and trees and shrubs gleamed in the faint light of a half-hidden young moon, like diamonds. It was a night to be remembered. But entering the spacious hall,—light and beauty, warmth and comfort, life and pleasure ruled the hour. The Principals had given a short Christmas recess, beginning Wednesday morning and closing Friday evening, and the young ladies, assisted by the teachers, for their own pleasure had gotten up an informal and impromptu entertainment. Not many visitors were present, but those who were braving the ice, the dark, the cold, and the mud, expressed themselves as having unalloyed delight, and as enjoying it as one of the merriest happiest nights of the Christmas.

The exercises were varied and all charming, and brought into play diversified talent and attainment. The music was such as might be expected from Prof. Baumann and his pupils. The opening overture, two performers—Gottschalk's brilliant and difficult arrangement of William Tell—was as glittering, sparkling and lovely as a clear day in winter. Prof. and Mrs. Banman favored and delighted the audience with an instrumental duet, playing a beautiful arrangement of Il Trovatore. Other performers played with taste and impressement, such pieces as I Puritain, Herz's Fantasie on Lucia de Lammermoor, and Mason's Silver Spring. And the vocal music was none the less worthy of mention, three brilliant solos, a trio and choral music making up the unexpected programme.

Besides the music there were readings, recitations, pantominies, tableaux vivant, and burlesques, all of which were enjoyable and some inimitable. "The Mistletoe Bough" was first clearly read and then represented in pantomime. The scenes were natural, impressive and beautiful. Not less so were the readiug with melodious and well-modulated tones of Tennyson's "A Dream of Fair Women," and the representation as each one was described in the mysterious poem. The recitation of the "Parting of Marmion and Douglas" was thrilling and admirable and revealed unusual talent and culture, and "Absalom" and "Farewell to the Old Year," by the same fair pupil, were equally so; and shewed greater tenderness and even deeper pathos and intensity. In all these readings and recitations the taste and patient training and marked success of the accomplished teacher of reading and elocution, Miss Muttoon, were made known.

I cannot forbear to speak of one of the most beautiful and attractive scenes of the evening—a tableaux. "The Artists' Studio." I had often seen in such scenes groups of statuary represented. But never have I seen so vivid and natural and beautiful a representation. Motionless as stone the breathing marble stood,—drapery, pose, expression, absolutely perfect and inimitable. So delighted and enchanted were the audience that they thrice demanded that the living picture be exposed to their view. To the teacher of drawing and painting Miss Wright, the beautiful conception and exquisite execution were due.

There was also fun, plenty of it—wit and pleasantry, genial and unrestrained conversation between old and young, smiles and merriment made the evening as short as it was delightful. There was so much of ease, of happiness and homelike enjoyment, I could not but be glad that the opportunity was afforded me of seeing, hearing and sharing the pleasure.

And what made the occasion all the more enjoyable, was that it was in a great degree an impromptu entertainment. The music, the reading, the notions of art were all, the usual and ordinary results of the class-room and of daily study. Such entertainments, not perhaps so long or elaborate, I was told were not unusual—a holiday exercise. It seemed to me a matter of real congratulation, that at Peace, so many and such varied resources of happiness and improvement were open to the use of all; and that there was a generation of young ladies, so fertile in resources, so skilful in execution, trained to add to the happiness of many homes and the well being of society.

And thinking this, I felt that it should be known. VISITOR.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Baptism—A Short Method with the Dipping Anti-Pedobaptists—In three parts. I. What is Baptism? II. Who are the Proper Subjects of Baptism? III. Perversions of Fact and History by Anti-Pedobaptists With Appendices. By Rev. Thomas Gallaher, Presbyterian minister, Lagrange, Mo. Pages, 340; 8 vo. 1878. Price, $1.00. Presbyterian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo. J. L. Shotwell, Agent, 1001 Main St., Richmond, Va.

This full title page describes this valuable issue. It has doubtless grown out of sharp discussions abounding in the far West with Campbellites and other submersionists. Mr. Gallaher does not stand on the defensive, but carries the war into Africa, and assails the assumptions and arguments of Dipping Anti-Pedobaptists. He makes no assumptions and grants none; holds that patience, benevolence and charity have ceased to be virtues in this controvers; that the Baptist system is born of ignorance and "error, and fed upon fallacy and falsehood;" and aims to discuss the questions propounded so clearly that those who have 'never rubbed their "heads against a college wall" can understand them fully. The book is written, consequently, in the trenchant style, and is very lively reading. It is gotten up both neatly and cheaply, and we hope will have a very large circulation. "William, the Baptist" and this book give every pastor fresh and readable weapons for his pastoral work.

Words—Their Use and Abuse.—By Prof. Wm. Mathews, LL.D., author of "Getting On In the World," &c. Fourteenth thousand. Pages, 284; $2.00. 1879 S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago, Ill.

Every one should try to read and write his own language correctly, and should understand the power of right words. Yet how many debauch the Saxon tongue, by 'their long-tailed words in 'osity' or 'ation,'" by grand words out of place, abuse of words, &c.? Prof. Mathews is an accomplished writer, and this book is full of interest and instruction, from beginning to end. While it will not supplant Horne, Tooke, Murray, Schele, De Vere, Marsh, Trench, or our own Shepherd, yet it must delight and profit every student of the Anglo-Saxon tongue. The publishers put forth the work in their peculiarly beautiful style.

The Waverly Dictionary.—An Alphabetical Arrangement of all the Characters in Sir Walter Scott's Waverly Novels, with a Descriptive Analysis of each Character; and Illustrative Selections from the Text. By May Rogers. Pages, 375; $2.00. 1878. S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago, Ill.

This volume is commendable in appearance and in detailed contents. It does what it proposed to do. Each of Scott's novels are taken up, and its argument and synopsis of its contents are given, besides the descriptive analysis of its characters. Those who have Scott's works will find this Dictionary peculiarly convenient and suggestive; while those who have not Scott will need just such a book to give them a bird's-eye view of the great Scotchman's genius, and enable them to understand classic allusions to his writings. A copious index enriches the Dictionary.

The Earnest Worker.—January, 1879; 60c. a year; five or more copies, 50c. Whittet & Shepperson, 1,001 Main St., Richmond, Va.

The lessons are prepared this month by Rev. J. H Bryson, D. D., of S. C. Our Secretary of Publication appeals earnestly to the Church to furnish 10 000 subscribers to the Earnest Worker and 40 000 to the Children's Friend, for then the royalty paid the committee by the Presbyterian Publishing Company would pay all expenses. Both publications and the Lesson Papers deserve, and should receive, the hearty support of the whole Church.

The Independent Reader.—By J. Madison Watson A. S. Barnes & Co., N. Y.

This series, which we have before commended, presents us a specimen of Barnes Iron Books, bound with Hoyt's Patent Indestructible Iron Back, of which they have secured the exclusive use. The leaves are fastened by clamping wire pins, whose ends are caught by a binding thin metal back. The books look like the others are perfectly flexible, and claimed to be indestructible by ordinary wear and tear. 'A book any careless boy cannot tear the back off. I'll buy it.' Yes, parent, and you'll be wise to do so, and let it serve the whole family.

Southern Historical Society Papers.—January, 1879, $3 a year. Rev. J. Wm. Jones, D. D., Secretary and Editor, Richmond, Va.

Contents: Jackson's Valley Campaign of 1862; Address of Col. Wm. Allen before the Virginia Division Army Northern Virginia; Gen. Taliaferro's Report of Battle of Averysboro, N. C.; Battle of Shiloh; Report of Gen Ruggles; Letters from Gen. Ruggles, Cols. Bankhead, Heard J. S Johnston and Capts. Sandidge and J. C. Thrall; Editorial Paragraphs.

The Primary Teachers' Monthly—For all Teachers of Children.—Evangelical and undenominational. Mrs W. F Crafts, Editor. January, 1879. Sixty cents a year. Fairbanks & Co., Chicago, Ill.

Excellent number and bright with promise of help during the year. Glad to see the 'Temperance Object Lesson," by Frances E. Willard, the first of a series.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly contains 60 pages of admirable reading for those who would keep up with the religious thought of the day as it is expressed in the sermons by leading divines of the country. The Preacher contains besides, departments: Preacher's Exchanging Views, Hints at the Meanings of Texts, &c. It is cheap at the price—$2 50 per annum. Religious Newspaper Agency, New York city.

STOCKHOLDERS, PLEASE NOTICE.

In purchasing the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN from the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN COMPANY I agreed to furnish the paper during the years 1877 and 1878, to such of the stockholders in that Company as were receiving the paper on stock, and who should remit the postage for those years.

Due notice of this arrangement was given at the time. On the 1st of January, 1879, the contract was fulfilled.

I trust that all who have been thus receiving the paper will enter as regular subscribers and remit promptly the amount of subscription. JOHN MCLAURIN.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE WAY TO DO GOOD.

N. Y. Evangelist:

Christ would have his followers do good in such a way that everybody who sees the good act will be smitten by its generosity and beauty, and go and do likewise. He wants them to do good in such a way that men will forget the doer in the good, and praise God for both. He wants them to hold their lantern in such a way that it will set off the superior attractions and loveliness of truth and justice and kindness and all the Christian virtues, instead of illuminating their own faces, so that every beholder will be smitten anew with the beauty and grandeur of these spiritual things, and be moved to worship God from whom they came. It is not enough to be good, pious at heart, kind in act, upright, prayerful: the goodness, the piety, the devoutness, must be shown in ways that will touch human hearts with divine thoughts and emotions. Be good grandly. Give in a sweet, cheering, helpful way.

WHY MEN GO TO CHURCH.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler:

Men and women come to church to be made better; they come to be saved, and not to be lost. They come for practical instruction, and not to be tasked with intellectual abstractions. They want the living truth for living uses. To their common sense, their consciences, and their hearts, it is our privilege to preach the most marvellous and precious and glorious Gospel that God's wisdom could devise. When it is preached faithfully, simply, and closely, it will tell. By the Holy Spirit's blessing our hearers may become—many of them will become—"sound on the main question" of salvation for all eternity.

DARE TO SAY NO!

Christian Weekly:

The great thing is for a boy to meet a temptation boldly, frankly, and at once, with a "No!" which has a meaning in it. Some boys will say "No," but it is in such a half-hearted way that the tempter knows that it means a half "Yes." This simply gives an invitation for a repetition of the solicitation, and makes almost certain, too, the yielding. But a "No!" that is enforced by tone and look that tell that the word has its own true meaning settles largely the matter; or if it does not settle it, makes it certain that if the temptation comes again, it will be weaker and be will be stronger. The first "No." is a great thing.

WHY?

Southern Presbyterian:

We are aware it requires preaching to cultivate a love for preaching and a due estimate of its value. But it is hard to understand how any real Christian can grow indifferent to this means of grace, or cease to desire it earnestly for his family, not to say his neighbors. Yet we do find hundreds of churches in our own denomination, that have gone for years without the ministry of the Word. Some of them are too hard to please. Some are not willing to give a living salary. Some rely on a protracted meeting once a year. Some depend on the occasional supplies sent by their Presbyteries. Some have not life enough even to ask for this boon. No wonder such churches generally have no record on our statistical tables—do not even report the number of communicants—and seldom if ever send delegates to the Church courts. No wonder some of them die—die of pure inanition; die of paralysis; die of sloth. The wonder is that more of them do not die.

One thing has always seemed strange to us; and that is that our vacant churches rarely give to the enterprises of Christian benevolence. Their contribution columns are generally blanks. Why is this? The common answer is, "We have no minister." The meaning seems to be, "We have no one to remind us of a duty which we know to be binding, and to press the claims of good objects which we know to be suffering. We cannot give unless we are asked or told to give, or are placed in a position in which we could not decently decline. We have no minister to support, and the money we save thereby we prefer to spend in bodily or domestic comforts, rather than to give it to spread the gospel in heathen lands, or to educate young men for the ministry, or for any other noble enterprise of the Church."

PROFITABLE SERMONS.

Richmond Christian Advocate:

Short sermons, to be profitable, require more study than long, rambling discourses. Irrelevant matter, which is easy to be introduced, must be thrown out. Minor points must barely be stated to keep up the connection, but not elaborated. The leading thought of the subject must be kept prominently before the minds of the audience, and special emphasis given to that. We have to come to it, and we might as well make up our minds to it at once. Long sermons, as a general thing, will not be tolerated by our people. It is idle to quarrel about it.

WANTED—A REVIVAL OF HONESTY.

Presbyterian:

How the Church ought to labor to have a revival in common honesty. Let brother Stubbs lay aside his prayer about justification—the blessed privilege of "worshipping God under our own vine and fig-tree, with none to molest or make us afraid"—and pray God to make the Church as honest as decent sinners are, and give up donation parties as a vicarious satisfaction for honest debts—debts where the equivalent has been forgotten. O what a revival that would be, that would begin with the collection-box, and finish up with the pastor's salary! Brother Stubbs prayer would have the merit, at least, of being short and uncommonly pointed.

ARE WE DOING OUR DUTY.

United Presbyterian:

In this country it has been the habit to boast enthusiastically of the work of the Church, and give the impression that it was making rapid progress in the work of destroying the kingdom of Satan. We should certainly be thankful for whatever of blessing God has sent us, but the disposition which has been indulged by many in the Church to brag of success and make light of enemies and hindrances has been manifestly out of place. In the calm of this thoughtful season, people are beginning to realize and acknowledge that the christianity of the country has not been doing its duty, and that it must if it rightly accomplish what is given it to do, exhibit a spirit of earnestness and consecration that has heretofore been wanting. God is waiting to be gracious—waiting on the humility and prayers of his people.

DONATIONS.

At this season of the year it is usual for persons benevolently disposed to place in our hands funds to send the PRESBYTERIAN to those who want the paper, but who are utterly unable to pay for it. Such persons are often the aged and infirm—sometimes widows of deceased ministers—and always perhaps those to whom the weekly visits of the paper are considered weekly blessings.

We put the paper to all such at the rate of $2 per year. Who will make glad the heart of the poor in this way?

We will make specially favorable terms to supply those of any church, who may be unable to take the paper, when appealed to by the session of the church acting officially.

Rev. W. T. McElroy has resigned pastoral charge of the church at Perryville, Ky. He has been very successful in building up the church and his retirement is greatly regretted.

On Sunday, the 22d, Col. C. S. Venable was ordained and installed as a ruling elder, and Messrs. R P Valentine, E. M. Antrim and F. Dunnington as deacons of Charlottesville, Va., church.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev E O. Guerrant and others, as our readers were at the time informed, have been preaching to the church at Owensboro, Ky. Lately, at a service by Rev. J C. Molloy, twenty persons were received into full communion.

It is reported that Rev. J. H Thornwell is succeeding well in his evangelistic field in Stanly county. Our Monthly reports: He has already gathered a little church of twenty members, with a church building under way. We rejoice to learn that his health is greatly improved.

The "Report of the Presbyterian Mission to the Colored Race in Savannah, Ga." states that the work was begun in March of last year. A church building has been erected, at least can be used though incomplete, for service. An organization has been perfected with thirty-one members, two elders and three deacons. A Sunday school has been commenced. The expenses this year will be one hundred and fifty dollars.

The Central Presbyterian says of Rev. John S. Watt: The friends of this venerable minister, now the oldest in East Hanover Presbytery, will learn with deep sympathy that he was stricken with paralysis on Saturday, the 28th of December, at the residence of Mr. R. F. Taylor, near Petersburg, where he had been visiting, and now lies prostrate upon his couch, unable to speak, and with little prospect of recovery. He has the kindest attention and the best medical skill, and all that can be done is being done for his recovery.

A correspondent of the Christian Observer sends an account of the dedication of the church at Athens, Ga., of which Rev. S. R. Preston is pastor. Not until December 22d last would they dedicate it because a debt of over eleven hundred dollars was hanging over it. The church was dedicated free from debt. Since the church was begun, thirty-eight persons have been added to its membership, thirty-six on examination and two on certificate—embracing a number of the most influential and prominent men in the place. Here is the moral, "Them that honor me I will honor."

A service conducted by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. J. N. Craig, was held in the Presbyterian church of Holly Springs Miss., on the 22d of December, in memory of its members who died during the yellow fever epidemic. Twenty-three communicants and thirteen from Sabbath school and Bible classes were enrolled among the dead besides four or five from the congregation at large. The church lost over one-sixth of its membership. Among the young who died were several recent college graduates, and others who were college students, or just ready to enter college. Some of the communicants had been such for nearly forty years; others, for from twenty to thirty years; and some of the sweetest of the little children of the church were among the dead. Memorial day was a sad day to many hearts.—Southern Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. R. F. Bunting began his pastorate at Galveston November 29, 1868 In his paper, the Texas Presbyterian, he thus sums up his work during the past ten years:

Sermons and addresses delivered, 1 202; pastoral visits made, 5,263; baptisms, adults, 77; infants, 140; officiations at funerals, 209, of which 30 were communicants; marriages, 152 The session had received into the church 260 members by examination, 168 by letter, with 6 restored from side roll, making a total of 434 They had dismissed by letter on removal from the city 118, being ten more than reported on the roll at the beginning of the pastorate; 52 had died and 138 had been placed upon the side roll on account of protracted absence or unknown residence, thus losing 308 during ten years

The contributions to the General Assembly's benevolent work were $25,585 58, and for congregational purposes in general $79,181 74, making a total of $104,767 32, a sum to which there had been no approximation heretofore by any Presbyterian church in the State. Three ruling elders had been installed, three had died, one had removed. Twelve deacons had been installed, two of whom had been elected to the eldership; one had died, one had ceased to act, five had removed, leaving three still acting.

NORTHERN.

Items from Presbyterian and other sources:

The Central Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, Del., (Rev. Dr. Nixon's) has three Sunday schools under its control, the church school, the Gilbert chapel school and the Rodney Street chapel school. In the church, or main school, there are three hundred and fifty names enrolled and a large and good work is done thus by this church.

Rev. A. A Wood, D. D., of Lyons N. Y., has revived an old Scotch custom of lecturing on the Shorter Catechism, an example that might be profitably followed. Contrary to the superstition of some who have never tried it, such discussions are much appreciated by all intelligent and thoughtful people, and they have not unfrequently proved a timely preparation for the spiritual refreshment of a church and its neighborhood.

The committee appointed by the late Prophetical Conference held in New York have assigned to the Rev. N. West, D. D., of Cincinnati, the duty of editing the papers read at the Conference. It is expected that the volume will be ready within a few weeks.

Mr. John Stevenson, of Richmond, Ontario county, N. Y., accumulated by daily labor and great care $10,000; and though he never was a member of any church, at his death left a bequest of $2,500 to be divided equally between the New York Baptist State Convention and the Presbyterian Home Missionary Board, and $300 each to a Congregational, two Methodist Episcopal and a Baptist school.

The First Presbyterian Church of Quincy, Illinois, new, costing $60,000, and to have been dedicated on Sabbath last, was destroyed by fire on Friday last. The Second Baptist church of St. Louis has also been destroyed—loss, $100,000.

In 1843 he was elected and ordained ruling elder, and exercised that office with great acceptance and usefulness until his death. For many years he was clerk of the session. Hospitable. Intelligent and well-informed, he was well-known and greatly beloved by a large circle of friends. In the congregation and in the Sabbath School in which he was a most efficient teacher, he wielded a controlling influence. Clear and consistent in his views of truth, his life evinced the powers of truth in his heart He lived near his Saviour and was eminently a man of prayer His character shone most brightly in his family A fond and thoughtful husband, a firm, tender, appreciative father, he was regarded with a depth of affection that cheered his heart.

The immediate cause of his death was an attack of typho-malarial fever aggravated by pneumonia, though his health had been feeble for several years His end was peace. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss Every member of our church and community will join in bewailing his removal
O.

In Raleigh, December 26th, after a long and painful illness, JAMES M TOWLES

He was for many years a useful and efficient elder of the 1st Presbyterian church and the senior elder and one of the principal founders of the 2nd Presbyterian church, of this city.

He was born in the county of Northumberland, Va., in 808 and had resided in Raleigh during a large part of his life All the relations he sustained as a husband, a father, a friend, a Christian and an officer of the church were discharged with marked fidelity. This singular modesty made him less widely known and appreciated, than a man of his rare excellence and usefulness deserved to be. His nature was of the finest mould, gentle, courteous, sincere, refined and resolute, singularly unselfish; uniting the kindest heart with a remarkable independence and decision of character.

As a Christian he was noted for humility, prayerfulness, liberality to the church and to the poor, delight in the house of God, kindness to his pastor, zeal for the truth, strong attachment to his own church, together with brotherly kindness toward all Christians In his last illness though a great sufferer, his resignation and patience were beautiful to behold, and he died as he had lived, in the blessed assurance of everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.
JOSEPH M. ATKINSON.

At her residence in Robeson county, N. C., December 26th, 1878, in the 83d year of her age, Mrs. EFFIE McLEAN, widow of the late Angus McLean

This aged lady was long a member of the Presbyterian Church, and died trusting alone in her precious Saviour, who comforted her in her long and painful illness.

PRIZE OFFER.

To the person who shall send us the largest number of new subscribers between now and February 15th we will give

WORCESTER'S QUARTO (Unabridged) DICTIONARY and KITTO'S BIBLICAL ENCYCLOPÆDIA;

— OR —

if preferred, will substitute

A LARGE FAMILY BIBLE—Publisher's price, $10 00—

for the DICTIONARY;

OR YET

in lieu of the above offer will send if desired

A SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARY

of fifty volumes, 18 mo., published by the American Tract Society, and net price of which is $13 50.

— OR —

we will pay $10 CASH as a bonus.

The DICTIONARY is two well known to require description. KITTO'S CYCLOPEDIA is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travelers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By JOHN KITTO, D. D., F. S. A.,

author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the "Journal of Sacred Literature," etc., etc.

THE FAMILY BIBLE contains several hundred engravings, embracing the Old and New Testaments and the Apocrypha; a Pictorial History of the Books of the Bible; a Dictionary of the Bible; Brown's Concordance; a handsome Family Record and a Marriage Certificate; two Steel Plates, and numerous Engravings on Wood, etc; Panelled Sides, Full Gilt, Photograph Record.

The above offer is a compensation or reward for extra services rendered, and but one person can obtain it, yet that person or any others who may compete will be entitled to the premiums offered for new subscribers, viz: The map of Palestine for each, or the American Agriculturist for any two, &c.

PLEASE NOTE CAREFULLY that every subscriber must pay in advance $2 65.

Each person competing must send in his or her name promptly that an accurate account may be kept.

The mint bureau has turned into the treasury $575,000, as profits accruing from the coining of standard silver dollars during the past three weeks. This amount was the net profit after buying the silver for coinage, paying transportation and allowing for wasting on the process of the coinage, since the commencement of the coinage of standard dollars.

"Best Literature of the day."—N. Y. Times.

THE GREATEST LIVING Authors, such as Prof Max Muller, Rt. Hon. W. E Gladstone, Jas. A. Froude, Prof Huxley, R A. Proctor, Edw. A. Freeman, Prof. Tyndall, Dr W. B. Carpenter, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, Wm. Black, Miss Thackeray, Miss Mulock, Geo MacDonald, Mrs. Oliphant, Jean Ingelow, Mrs. Alexander, Thos. Hardy, Matthew Arnold, Henry Kingsley, W. W Story, Turguenief, Ruskin, Tennyson, Browning, and many others, are represented in the pages of Littell's Living Age.

In 1879, THE LIVING AGE enters upon its thirty-sixth year, admittedly unrivalled and continuously successful During the year it will furnish to its readers the productions of the most eminent authors, ABOVE-NAMED AND MANY OTHERS; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the LEADING FOREIGN NOVELISTS, and an amount

UNAPPROACHED BY ANY OTHER PERIODICAL

in the world, of the most valuable Literary and Scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the FOREMOST ESSAYISTS, SCIENTISTS, CRITICS, DISCOVERERS, and EDITORS, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress

The LIVING AGE is a weekly magazine giving more than double column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a SATISFACTORY COMPLETENESS attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

The importance of THE LIVING AGE to every American reader, as the only satisfactory fresh and COMPLETE compilation of an indispensable current literature, indispensable because it embraces the productions of

is sufficiently indicated by the following

OPINIONS:

"THE LIVING AGE supplies a better compendium of current discussion, information and investigation, and gives a greater amount and variety of reading-matter which it is well worth while to read, than any other publication. . . . It is simply indispensable."—Boston Journal

"In it we find the best productions of the best writers upon all subjects ready to our hand"—Philadelphia Inquirer

"The prince among magazines."—New York Observer.

"It is incomparable in the richness, variety, and worth of its articles, and equal to several ordinary magazines in the amount of matter presented."—The Standard, Chicago.

"The choicest literature of the day."—New York Tribune.

"The best of all the eclectic publications, and the cheapest A monthly that comes every week."—The Advance, Chicago.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

"It affords the best, the cheapest and most convenient means of keeping abreast with the progress of thought in all its phases."—Philadelphia North American.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics, and science of the day."—The Methodist, New York

"The ablest essays, the finest poetry of the English language, are here gathered together."—Illinois State Journal

"It is the only compilation that presents with a satisfactory completeness, as well as freshness, a literature embracing the productions of the ablest writers living. It is indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"The best and cheapest periodical in America."—Evangelical Churchman, Toronto

"It has no equal in any country."—Philadelphia Press.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—New York Times.

Published WEEKLY at $8 00 a year, free of postage.

☞EXTRA OFFER FOR 1879.☜

To all new subscribers for 1879, will be sent gratis the six numbers of 1878, containing with other valuable matter, the first part of "SIR GIBBIE," a new serial story of much interest by GEORGE MACDONALD, now appearing in THE LIVING AGE from the author's advance sheets. Other choice new serials by distinguished authors are engaged and will speedily appear.

Club Prices for the Best Home and Foreign Literature.

"Possessed of THE LIVING AGE and one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation"—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

For $10 50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the American $4 Monthlies (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or, for $9 50 THE LIVING AGE and the St. Nicholas, or Appleton's Journal.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Be Gentle To Thy Husband.

Be gentle, there are hours when he
By anxious care is tossed,
And shadows deep lie on his brow,
By business trials crossed.

Be gentle, 'tis for you he toils,
And thinks, and strives to gain
Home comforts, and home happiness –
Don't let him strive in vain.

Be gentle, though some hasty word
Should fall—it was not meant;
A smile, a kind word will recall.
And many more prevent.

Be gentle, oh, 'twill soothe much care,
And make each burden light;
A gentle tone will smooth the brow,
And draw an answer bright.

Be gentle, though it may seem hard
To check an angry word;
But try, and it will surely bring
A full and rich reward.

What Shall He Do with Her?

This is a sad, but short, tale about a cat, or perhaps about a rabbit that pretended to be a cat, I do not know which. You will presently see why it must be short.

Some time ago a supposed friend sent me, as a present, what purported to be a Chinese cat. Thereby hangs a tale? Not at all. The cat hadn't a sign of a tail. It was said, by way of apology and explanation, that all Chinese cats have not. If this is a fact in natural history, it is an absurd fact; for it is known that all Chinamen—even the smallest—have tails, which are called cues, and sometimes pig-tails, but never cat-tails. And it seemed improbable and heartless that a Chinaman would deny tails to his cats. However, I took the kitten in, and named her "China"—a name she has never responded to, to this day.

And this shows the animal's instinct, for when I came to look in the dictionary, I found that, in all probability, she was a Manx cat, from the Isle of Man—a small English island (hardly room enough to turn round) where cats are obliged to do without tails. It is considered a very nice kind of cat, if it is a cat, of which I have doubts. It is said that Turner, the great painter—who was probably as good a judge of cats as ever lived—kept seven Manx cats always in his house. Perhaps it was necessary to have seven Manx cats to get the equivalent of one real cat; in my experience it requires more.

As I said, I doubt if China is a cat, take her altogether. She had, as a kitten, no tail. Her grown tail is now less than an inch long, and most of that is fur. It is exactly like a rabbit's tail, that is, a kind of place for a tail. When China first began to realize her existence she evidently thought she was a cat, and her first sportive effort was to play with her tail. She looked around and there wasn't any tail there; the other end of her was rabbit. She was mortified; but what could she do? She began without any apology, to play with her hind-leg, to chase it round and round as if it were her tail; and ever after that she has amused herself with her hind-leg.

And her hind-legs are worth playing with. For they are not like the hind-legs of a cat, but are long, and bend under exactly like the legs of a rabbit. When China sits down, she sits down like a rabbit. So she is neither one thing nor another; and I cannot make out whether she is a rabbit trying to be a cat, or a cat trying to be a rabbit. She succeeds, anyway. China is rather handsome. Her coat is the most beautiful combination of soft buff and ermine fur—a most pleasing color—and she is a shapely little thing besides, with a fine head and pretty face. Like some other beauties, however, she is not as good as she is beautiful. She has a temper—can be very playful and affectionate one minute, and scratch and bite the next, without provocation. From an infant she seemed to have no conscience. She was a perfect whirlwind in the house, when the whim took her to frolic; went over chairs and all sorts of furniture, like a flying-squirrel; succeeded in about a week in tearing off all the gimp from the chairs and lounges, climbed the azalia trees, shook off the blossoms, and then broke the stems. Punishment she minded not at all—only to escape from it for the moment. I think she had not, as a kitten, a grain of moral sense, and yet she was "awful cunning" and entertaining—more so than a spoiled child. We got a sedate old cat to come and live with China. She drove that big cat out of the house and off the premises in less than half a day; and that, too, when she wasn't more than seven inches long. She went at the big cat with incredible fury, with the blaze and momentum of a little fire-ball.

Now that China has come to be of decent size, some of the playfulness and vivacity has gone out of her, but she is really untamed—goes for things on the table, steals, and all that; and it is more difficult than ever to tell whether she is a rabbit or a cat. We have another companion for her—a mild, staid old grandmother of a cat, with a very big tail, enough for two, if they would share it. China treats her with no respect; but, on the whole, they get on well, quarreling only half the time, and content to live in the same house. China overlooks the intrusion.

But as to the nature of China, this is what happened recently: China's mistress had undertaken to raise some radishes in advance of the season, in a box in her observatory. It was a slow process, owing to lack of heat, or lack of disposition in the plants to grow. They came up, shot up, grew slender, tall and pale. Occasionally the mistress would pull up one to see why the bottoms didn't grow, so that we could eat them; but she never discovered why. The plants spindled up, all top and no radish; and by and by they got tired and laid down to rest. They might, in time, come to something. In fact, they began to look as if they were thickening in the stem and going to grow in the root. One morning they were gone. Gone, after weeks of patient watching, watering and anxious expectation! Nibbled off close to the ground. China had eaten every one of them short.

Now, doesn't that show that China is a rabbit? Will a cat eat radish tops? This is one thing I want to know.

There came once to our house a facetious person; that is, a person who makes jokes likely to hurt your feelings; and he looked at the cat and said it didn't matter if it had no tail, that I could write one for it. I have done so.

But that makes no difference. What I want to know now, from the children of St. Nicholas, is this: What can I do with her? I can neither give her away for a cat, nor sell her for a rabbit. Do you think it would coax a tail out of her to put her under blue glass?—St. Nicholas.

False Shame.

"Quick, Alec! Here behind this bush!"

"What's the matter?" cried Alec.

"Down, quick, and I'll tell you. Don't let Mr. Stanley and Frank see us hoeing potatoes."

"O, is that all?" said Alec, struggling to get from behind the bush; but Ned held him tight.

"Nonsense!" cried Alec. "Do you want to make believe we have a gardener?"

"But the Stanleys have just come to live in that fine house; Frank goes to our school, and—"

"If Frank chooses to like us the less because we help father, the sooner he shows it the better," interrupted Alec.

"It's easy to talk, but I don't want Frank to 'cut' me," said Ned.

"For doing your work? He will not, if his friendship is worth having," said wise Alec.

"Ho! Ho! What is all this talk about? Who wants to hear a story of Cyrus the Great?"

"Why, there is father; he must have heard all I said," whispered Ned.

"Like enough! Father hates that kind of pride; he says the men who have done the most for the world have never been ashamed of honest work."

"Come, boys, just ten minutes to finish hoeing and hear a story," said Mr. Dennis. "Lysander, a great statesman of Greece, was once on a visit to Cyrus; he was much pleased with all he saw, especially with certain beautiful gardens. 'The beauty of the walks, the abundance of the plants, and all things here charm me exceedingly,' he said. 'Your gardeners have shown excellent taste.'

"'This is my work,' replied Cyrus.

"'Your work?' exclaimed Lysander, with astonishment. 'Is it possible that you who wear purple robes and precious jewels can play the gardener and employ your royal hands in planting trees?'

"'Does that surprise you?' cried Cyrus. 'Let me assure you that I never sit down to the table without having fatigued myself with military exercise, manual labor, or some other work that I consider useful.'

"Lysander grasped his hand, saying, 'You are truly happy. You deserve high fortune, since you unite it with virtue.'"

The boys listened, and worked harder than ever, till it was time to put on clean linen suits and go to school. "After all, Alec," began Ned, "one need not be ashamed of hard work if such a man as Cyrus could do all that."

"I rather think not," said Alec. "Think of such men as the old Roman patriots, and the statesmen of our own country who did the same—Washington, Patrick Henry and a host of others!"

"Father is right about this, as he is about everything. Don't you know how he said, the other day, 'Boys, sin is the only thing in the world of which you need feel ashamed?'"—S. S. Visitor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Female Names.

If we look back to the time of our grandmothers and great-aunts, we find that, besides Elizabeth, Mary and Anne, there were Margaret, Emma, Caroline, Sarah, Jane, Martha, Sophia, Susan, Maria, Matilda, Louisa, Rebecca, Phœbe, Ruth, Lydia, Charlotte, and other names. Bridget, Dorothea, Chloe, Cicely, Tabitha, belong, perhaps, to even an earlier generation. But some thirty years ago such names were voted to be common; and Constance, Florence, Beatrice, Blanche, Alice, Adeline, Maud, Mabel, Sybil, Muriel, Grace, Isabel, Millicent, Gertrude, became the fashion.

It was not the custom for English people to have more than one Christian name before the reign of George III. Two or more names were first used by the Court, and the fashion soon spread all over the country, though, at first, it was considered presumptuous for a person of low degree to confer more than one name on his child. The conjunction of Anna with Maria was once considered aristocratic, but is no longer so. Mary Anne was also a novelty, but is now common in the extreme; and ladies who have been so christened prefer to write Marian, or Marianne. Some ladies even affect the French form of Mary, and insist on being called Marie. There is a tendency to turn y into ie in all names; even the pretty homely Fanny expects to be Fannie now.

History and literature supply us with the names that have been in use in England in all ages. It is, perhaps, the inferior authors who give us the best idea of the particular names that are in fashion at the time they write. They endeavor to create an interest in their characters by giving them fine names; whereas, a good writer will create a character that will give a halo to the name chosen for it. When Chaucer wrote, "Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily," he made for us a picture that we forever connect with the name of Emily. We imagine an Emily must be a bright, happy and industrious girl. We can only think of Rosalind, as Shakespeare's saucy, witty, courageous, true-hearted girl, in doublet and hose; of Miranda, as the innocent, modest creature who was not ashamed to show her love; of Portia, as the rather strong-minded young lady who wanted to prove her husband's love; of Juliet as the sentimental girl.

Ben Johnson brought the pretty, classical name Earine into English use. But this name loses its beauty when it is mispronounced, as it often is by those unacquainted with the classics. It should be in four syllables, with the accent on the second. But that it is turned into two syllables by educated people is evident; for, when it was adopted by a late novelist for one of his heroines, it was denounced by a reviewer in a paper supposed to be written for the upper classes as "savouring of a barber's ungent."

Richardson's names, Clarissa and Pamela, remind us of Watteau shepherdesses. But from an autograph letter of Richardson, in the possession of Mrs. Charles Kingsley, it would seem that the romance of Richardson's youth was connected with a lady named Clarissa.

Fielding is content with the very plainest names. When he wrote "Joseph Andrews," as a parody on "Pamela," and to counteract Richardson's style, he, no doubt, purposely made the names plain in contrast to Richardson's.

Miss Burney was fond of long-sounding names, and calls one of her novels "Evelina."

Miss Austen made use of Emma, Jane, Susan, Harriet, Elizabeth, Charlotte, and such names.

Coleridge made the pretty name of Christabel familiar to us.

Charles Lamb wrote some amusing lines concerning the name of Frances, in an album of a lady of that name. After remarking that the name suits either man or woman, he says—

"She who this twin-title decks,
Combines what's good in either sex;
Unites—how very rare the case is!—
Masculine sense to female graces;
And quitting not her proper rank,
Is both in one—Fanny and Frank!

The female novelists of the present day have exhausted almost every form of female appellation; and the worse the writer the more far-fetched and high-flown the names. This will probably cause a reaction in favor of plain names again.

Driving Horses.

Most men over drive. They attempt too much; and in so doing, distract or hamper the horse. Now and then you find a horse with such a vicious gait that his speed is got from him by the most artificial processes; but such horses are fortunately rare, and hence the style of management required cannot become general. The true way is to let the horse drive himself—the driver doing little but directing him, and giving him that confidence which a horse alone gets in himself when he feels that a guide and friend is back of him.

The vicious and inexcusable style of driving is that which so many drivers adopt, viz: wrapping the lines around either hand, and pulling the horse backward with all their might and main, so that the horse, in point of fact, pulls the weight back of him with his mouth, and not with his breast and shoulders. This they do under the impression that such a dead pull is needed in order to "steady" the horse. This method of driving we regard as radically and superlatively wrong. It would tax the ingenuity of a hundred fools to invent a worse one. The fact is, with rare exceptions, there should never be any pull put upon the horse at all.

A steady pressure is allowable, probably advisable; but anything beyond this has no justification in nature or reason; for nature suggests the utmost possible freedom of action of head, body and limbs, in order that the animal may attain the highest rate of speed; and reason certainly forbids the supposition that by the bits, and not the breast-collar, the horse is to draw the weight attached to it. In speeding our horses we very seldom grasp the lines with hands when the road is straight and free from obstructions. The lines are rarely steadily taut, but held in easy pliancy and used chiefly to shift the bit in the animal's mouth, and by this motion communicate courage and confidence to him. We find that by this method our horses break less and go much faster than when driven by men who put the old-fashioned, steady pull upon them.—Golden Rule.

Watch the Children's Feet.

Life-long discomfort and sudden death often come to children through the inattention or carelessness of the parents. A child should never be allowed to go to sleep with cold feet; the thing to be last attended to is to see that the feet are dry and warm. Neglect of this has often resulted in dangerous attacks of croup, diphtheria, or a fatal sore throat. Always on coming from school, on entering the house from a visit or errand in rainy, muddy, or thawy weather, the child should remove its shoes, and the mother should herself ascertain whether the stockings are the least damp. If they are, they should be taken off, the feet held before the fire, and rubbed with the hands until perfectly dry, and another pair of stockings and another pair of shoes put on. The reserve shoes and stockings should be kept where they are dry, so as to be ready for use on a minute's notice.

The Evaporation of Moisture from Leaves.

An exhaustive study on the physical functions of leaves has recently been published by Professor J. Boussingault of Paris, in which the phenomena connected with the absorption and transpiration of leaves are treated at great length.

Among others, numerous experiments were made on the difference in evaporation during the day and night. Those carried out with the leaves of the grape vine gave the following hourly averages per square meter of foliage: in sunshine, 35 grammes (560 grains); in shade, 11 grammes (176 grains; during the night, 0 5 gramme (8 grains) The trellis on which the vine was trained was 36 inches high and 126 feet long, and presented a surface of 406 square feet of foliage. In sunny weather this was found to lose by evaporation in the course of 24 hours, 126 lbs. of water, and nearly half of that amount during cloudy weather. To give an idea of the enormous amount of aqueous vapor dissipated by plants in the sunshine, calculation showed that an acre of beets could lose in the course of 24 hours between 20,000 and 23,000 lbs. Another experiment made with a chestnut tree 35 years old showed that it lost over 16 gallons of water in the course of 24 hours. The structure of the leaf however, containing 70 to 90 per cent of water, and possessing a thickness frequently of not more than four-thousandths of an inch, the question might occur why the evaporation is not much more rapid. The answer to this is found in the peculiar structure of the tissue forming the epidermis, designed especially to moderate the transpiration. In order to observe the remarkable retentive power exercised by this epidermis, one may expose for a few hours to the sun two cactus leaves of the same superficies, one of which has been deprived of its epidermis. In the case of the latter the evaporation will be about fifteen times as rapid as in the other. It is the presence of a similar tissue, forming the skins of fruits, which prevents an evaporation that would be otherwise too rapid. An apple, for instance, deprived of its skin loses 55 times as much water as a whole specimen in the same time. The physiological energy of leaves is notably lessened by losses resulting from rapid evaporation. Thus an oleander leaf, containing 60 per cent of water, when introduced into an atmosphere containing carbonic acid, decomposed 16 cubic centimeters of this gas; one containing 36 per cent decomposed 11 cubic centimeters and one containing but 29 per cent was without action. —Scientific American.

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE

Rev. Wm. R. ATKINSON, (late of Peace Institute) Principal.

Fall Term began Sep 12. Spring Term begins Jan. 30.

THE advantages which this Institute for Young Ladies offers, are not surpassed by any other in the South; they are; 1, Rooms, not only neatly, but handsomely furnished for Boarding pupils. In this respect it is not excelled by any other in the State. 2, There is not an inexperienced teacher in its corps of Instructors; the most important and deservedly popular schools of Charlotte have united with the Institute. The testimonials published in the Circular show the high character and ability of the other teachers who have been added to the Institute from out of the State. 3. For the extent of the instruction given the charges are less than those of any other first class school in the State. The charge of $140 00 for Board and Tuition includes every expense of boarding, with washing all text books and stationery used by the pupil in school duties. Free hand Drawing, and one language, ancient or modern, at choice of parent. No supplemental bills sent in at the close of the Term. 4. In this Institute the health of the pupil is considered of equal importance with her Education.

REFERENCES: The principal refers with confident satisfaction to his successful career as teacher for the past three years in Peace Institute, Raleigh; during which the classes in his department were raised to a higher standard than ever before attained. He there instituted a system of bona fide written examinations, the papers of which were shown to the Principal of the Bingham School, the Mathematical Professor of Davidson College, who pronounced them equal to what was attained in the best schools and colleges for young men in the State. These papers were also shown to Professors Venable, of the University of Virginia, and Le Conte, of the University of California, and drew forth from them testimonials as to the thoroughness and excellence of the teacher, which are published in the circulars of Charlotte Institute. The principal also refers to the Faculty of Davidson College, to Judge Alexander C. Haskell, Rev. Edward Miles and R. Means Davis, Esq., of South Carolina, as to those who have themselves engaged in the work of education.

HELP! FOR THE WEAK, NERVOUS AND DEBILITATED!

The afflicted can now be restored to perfect health and bodily energy, at home, without the use of medicine of any kind.

PULVERMACHER'S
ELECTRIC BELTS
AND BANDS,

For self-application to any part of the body, meet every requirement.

The most learned physicians and scientific men of Europe and this country indorse them.

These noted Curative appliances have now stood the test for upward of thirty years, and are protected by Letters-Patent in all the principal countries of the world. They were decreed the only Award of Merit for Electric Appliances at the great World's Exhibitions —Paris, Philadelphia, and elsewhere—and have been found the most valuable, safe simple, and efficient known treatment for the cure of disease.

READER, ARE YOU AFFLICTED?

and wish to recover the same degree of health, strength, and energy as experienced in former years? Do any of the following symptoms or class of symptoms meet your diseased condition? Are you suffering from ill-health in any of its many and multifarious forms, consequent upon a lingering, nervous, chronic or functional disease? Do you feel nervous, debilitated, fretful, timid, and lack the power of will and action? Are you subject to loss of memory, have spells of fainting, fullness of blood in the head, feel listless, moping, unfit for business or pleasure, and subject to fits of melancholy? Are your kidneys, stomach, or blood, in a disordered condition? Do you suffer from rheumatism, neuralgia or aches and pains? Have you been indiscreet in early years and find yourself harassed with a multitude of gloomy symptoms? Are you timid, nervous, and forgetful, and your mind continually dwelling on the subject? Have you lost confidence in yourself and energy for business pursuits? Are you subject to any of the following symptoms: Restless nights, broken sleep, nightmare, dreams, palpitation of the heart, bashfulness, confusion of ideas, aversion to society, dizziness in the head, dimness of sight, pimples and blotches on the face and back, and other despondent symptoms? Thousands of young men, the middle aged, and even the old, suffer from nervous and physical debility. Thousands of females, too, are broken down in health and spirits from disorders peculiar to their sex, and who, from false modesty or neglect prolong their sufferings. Why, then, further neglect a subject so productive of health and happiness when there is at hand a means of restoration?

PULVERMACHER'S ELECTRIC BELTS AND BANDS

cure these various diseased conditions, after all other means fail, and we offer the most convincing testimony direct from the afflicted themselves, who have been restored to

THE TARES.

"The servants of the householder came to him and said, sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence, then, hath it tares? He said unto them, an enemy hath done this."

The proximate causes of the introduction of unconverted members into the Church are: our inability to read the human heart, ignorance on the part of applicants as to the nature of a true conversion, hypocrisy on the part of some, the injudicious eagerness of friends, the desire of sessions to see the church grow and gain material strength, and an unconscious ambition on the part of ministers and evangelists to gain the credit of success. These and others are the secondary or human causes of the evil, but the passage quoted above assures us that the real agent in the business is Satan. While the causes mentioned combine to lull the office-bearers of the Church to sleep as to the necessity of guarding the door of entrance to it, the enemy comes and sows his tares among the wheat. The exploits of Satan in the history of the world show him to be possessed of the highest order of intelligence and sagacity, and so the Scriptures represent him. We may assume, therefore, that he has good reasons for this, as for every other step he takes in opposition to the kingdom of Christ. Without pretending to be able to fathom all his purposes, it is easy to discover some of the reasons why he wishes to have unconverted members introduced into the Church.

I. The effect upon the man himself is to place him at the greatest possible disadvantage for the saving of his soul. If he is a conscious hypocrite, and join the Church from a motive of worldly interest, then Satan has induced him to commit the most daring of all sins, and the one most likely of all others to cause him to be forsaken of God and left to be tilled with his own devices. But it is far from being the case that all unconverted church members are hypocrites. The great majority of them are self-deceived. Their condition, however, is hardly less deplorable. If the deception is afterwards discovered the tendency is to make the man an infidel. He was honest and sincere in believing himself a converted man, but he found himself deceived, and why should not the same be true of other people? It is evident, too, that infidelity thus induced is of the most hopeless kind. When a man becomes an infidel through a process of reasoning, there is hope that he may be reasoned out of it again, but the argument in this case is that of experience. He has tried religion and found it a failure, and the probability is that he can be indneed to try it no more.

Or, if the evil does not reach this extent, the man is placed under a strong temptation to become a hypocrite, to keep up the show of religion while conscious of not possessing it, to maintain a form of godliness while denying its power. Many have not the courage to come out and make a bold confession of their mistake.

If the deception is not discovered, the inevitable result will be to cover him with an impenetrable cloak of carnal security, and make him deaf to the only word of the Gospel that is applicable to his case. The arrows of the law cannot hurt him, and the invitations of the Gospel do not affect him, for these are aimed at the unconverted and he does not regard himself as belonging to that class. How pitiable is the condition of such a man. There is no hope for him while he remains a self-deceived church member. Thousands of professors in every age, we have sad reason to believe, live under this delusion and never discover it until they are surprised by the sentence, "Depart from me, I never knew you." Such being the effect of bringing unconverted members into the church upon the individuals themselves, we may readily see why Satan wishes them there. "An enemy hath done this."

II. Another evident reason is for the effect it will have on the Church. The great mission of the Church is to hold up a light in the midst of the world's darkness. The seven golden candlesticks in the vision of John are its symbol. Christ is himself the great Light, to lighten every man that cometh into the world. The visible Church is the light-bearer, the candelabrum, whose function is to hold up this light to the view of those who are in the region and shadow of death. This office is discharged partly through its ordinances, but chiefly through the holy living of its members. "Let your light shine before men, that they seeing your good works may glorify your Father in heaven." It is manifest that such a mission can be accomplished only by a spiritual church membership, and that every unconverted member introduced by Satan will be so much gained towards the obscuring of this light and so defeating the end of the Church's existence. This result is brought about in various ways.

First, by their position they are the Church's representatives; and being destitute of faith, which is the Christian's strength, it is impossible for them to live the life of godliness to which they are pledged. The world is on the qui vive to watch their inconsistencies, and the scandal of them is reflected on the Church. The irony of Gibbon derives all its point from this source. The world has never recognized the truth that the religion of Christ is not responsible for the abuses of it by false professors.

Again, they help to set the standard of living, even for true Christians, and by their influence it has been dragged down so low as we see it now among us. Enjoying as they often do a fair reputation, and occupying influential positions, weak Christians look up to them as models, and find in them palliatives to conscience in their own shortcomings. A weak Christian's conscience begins to hurt him for not praying and working and giving more than he does, but he says to himself, "I pray and work and give as much as Mr. A, who has a fair reputation for piety, and that is as much as can be expected of me." And so the matter rests.

Such are some of the evil results of bringing unconverted members into the Church. The church is corrupted, its standard of holiness is degraded, its work is retarded, its testimony is weakened, religion is dishonored, souls are ruined. Truly may we say, "An enemy hath done this," the enemy of God, the enemy of Christ, the great enemy of human souls.

The plain inference from all this is that church sessions and pastors ought to observe more care than we have reason to believe is commonly done nowadays in this matter of receiving members. It is true we may not be able to have a perfect Church, exercise what care we may. We cannot read men's hearts, and hence we have to judge them by their professions and by that small part of their lives which is open to our inspection. The parable teaches that there will be tares among the wheat to "the end of the dispensation." Human nature being what it is, and Satan being what he is, the introduction of false professors along with the genuine is a necessary accident of that mode of organization which our Lord has seen to be the best upon the whole for His Church. But it is an evil notwithstanding, and as such to be guarded against as far as possible. Would it not be well always to wait after our protracted meetings long enough to give full time for searching and examination before receiving members, even at the risk of some being caught by other denominations, rather than run the risk of playing into the hand of the enemy, whom it is the special business of our profession to fight?

BLOOMFIELD VS. BLOOMFIELD.

In Bloomfield's Greek Testament, on John x: 28, we find, "And they shall never perish." Tittman thus paraphrases: "At no time, neither in this life, nor in death, nor after death, to all eternity, shall anything happen to them that shall deprive them of salvation." —See John viii:51.

The words following, "neither shall any," &c., are confirmatory of the above promise; and in the next verse is suggested the reason why no one can snatch these faithful disciples from him, namely, that the Father hath delivered them to him in order to be preserved and redeemed; that Omnipotent Being in whom are the issues of life and death, both temporal and spiritual. The whole passage bears strong attestation to the divinity of Christ. Thus he (i. e., Bloomfield) proves the point of the certainty of the salvation of Christ's people, in the strongest manner. Now see how he turns around and contradicts himself:

"But [the whole passage] gives, when properly understood, no countenance to the doctrine, that the elect can never fall away and perish; having in truth, no relation to personal election or final perseverance." Can anything be conceived of more self-contradictory?

In speaking of this passage, we cannot forbear to remark on the great injury, and weakening of the sense, by inserting the word man, not in the original, and in many Bibles not even in italics. "Neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand;" but an angel may, the devil may, do it; will be readily suggested. It is adding to the Bible the word man, that is not in the original, and taking away from the sense. The expression is universal—"No one in heaven, earth or hell can do it." Some additions of the Bible Society have man here, and some have not. We regard it as a great wrong to insert it—it is an Arminian addition. We have met with four various readings in the passage.

HOME—WHAT IS IT?

Some one has said, very beautifully, that the three sweetest words in the English language are, "Mother, Home and Heaven." Few of us will dispute the statement; yet many of us have never tasted the sweetness of the first two that we have seen, and how can we conceive of that of Heaven, which is some day, perchance not far distant, to hold all that we prize as sweetest on earth?

It is upon the second of these names that my thoughts are dwelling just now—not, by any means, because I would pass lightly over the first, and more sacred of the two; but because, while some few may be found who fail to appreciate fully the blessing of a mother's love and presence, there are numbers who do not begin to comprehend the blessedness, the luxury of home. Many of the inmates of homes, outwardly lovely and full of comfort, need to be cast adrift, or set down amid the hollow comfort and real dreariness of boarding-house life, ere they can truly value what they possess.

Too many young women, alas! count home but little more than the dressing-room, where they prepare for "society," and if they take time from their personal adornment for beautifying home, it is only the parlor and such places as meet the eyes of callers, to which they turn their attention.

Too many young men, alas! consider home but as a cheap boarding place; there they go to eat and sleep; there they "take in food as an engine takes in wood and water"—in silence—and then hurry away from the house, or spend the hurried moments allotted to eating, in criticism upon the food, or upon the dress and manners of their sisters—that makes it a relief for them to go—and then farewell to home—until an hour when wearied nature compels them to seek a lodging for the night.

Reader, you know this is no fancy sketch. You, young maiden, fresh from school, do you love the very walls that enclose your home, because it is home—"be it ever so humble?" Do you enjoy the well-worn carpet and simple furniture of "mother's room," because she is there? And do you joy to use the taste which you have been educating, in the adornment of that home; or are you fretting to have it otherwise; or absorbed in the greatly-overrated pleasures of company, that so excludes home life that you have no time for this purest of all earthly pleasures?

So much has been said upon this subject, and it has been said so well, that I have little hope of originating an idea, or even a mode of presenting an idea on the subject; but it is one that bears many suggestions, and even these plain words may open some eyes, ere death or adverse fortune rudely loosens their moorings from the ingleside.

And let me say, frankly, there is little doubt in my mind that home is pretty much what the women of the family make it. Don't misunderstand me. I do not mean that an irritable, exacting, unreasonable man may not do his share, and a large share, to make a hell of this little earthly heaven; but that if, with unfaltering courage, a woman practices the divine unselfishness of that Master, "who pleased not Himself," if, apart from the graceful adornments which owe their being to her cultivated taste and deft fingers, and that help to "make sunshine in a shady place," she keeps a cheery face and manner—keeps up, at least, in a manner, with what goes on in the outer world, by reading books and papers sometimes—makes it a part of her religion to be as neat and attractive in her appearance as she can—home will be a brighter place for her presence there. And when night falls, and the tired business man goes home, and the noisy boys and restless girls meet around the supper table, their faces will show the influence of her efforts.

It is hard, you say, in these days, when house-keeping means so much. I know it. But "life is for labor, and heaven for repose." An this is a divine mission, and I believe, and I say this solemnly and humbly, nearer to that of the Master than almost any other, because it embraces so many offices in one. The subtle influence of one happy home speaks as effectively as the odor from one fragrant bed of flowers in a garden. The father of that family goes forth with a rested brain and a brisk step, to his business; the children catch the sunshine of mother's face, and shine by reflection, and the inmates of less happy homes take note and profit by the lesson.

It is simply appalling to walk the streets of most of our towns at night, and see the numbers of boys, who ought to be safely housed, that wander there for amusement, and are breathing in the foul impurities of others, older in sin than themselves; or to enter the so-called homes of many and see the lack of the good "old times" home circle, is signally appalling.

What a farce that pretty name has come to be! when the parents are expected to vacate the parlors when the beaux come, and when the young ladies only know how to talk in corners, or on the porches!

God grant to every woman of North Carolina, blessed with a home, that she may so live as that, upon her grave-stone loving hands may write,

"Long as she lived she shone"—and that not in brilliant assemblies; but in the small, yet heaven-appointed, orbit of home!

WAIF.

ENDURANCE AND FATALISM.

It has been said that every people which adopts Christianity as its creed, assimilates to itself out of that system the teaching which suits its nature, and rejects the teaching with which it finds in itself no inherent sympathy. The remark, though cynically intended, is in one way a testimony to the truth of a creed in which all natures, however different, finds encouragement and restraint, and it is undoubtedly in great part true of the British people. They feel and accept, not in practice always, but still as a theoretic ideal, a great deal of Christianity, but they reject a great deal more. They ignore altogether Christ's speeches about wealth, which, whatever He taught about it, He meant should be a very secondary object; they slur over His personal and direct testimony to the equality of men before the Lord; they "wait for the explanation" of what certain "socialistic" utterances mean; and as to His teaching about submission, they repudiate it altogether. The business of a Mohammedan, they say, is to be resigned; an Englishman must struggle with adversity, even if no hope remains. His duty is war, not submission; grumbling, not content; effort, not resignation; and if anybody teaches the contrary, why he is either a fatalist, or a weakling, or a man given to suggesting "counsels of perfection" as guides for the every-day life of a world in which the man who does not contend is sure to be crushed down in the endless stampede. Everything, says the Englishman, except death, can be prevented or remedied, and ought to be; and that man is most to be respected who gives way the least, even before the inevitable. Success in a struggle, not peace, is the Englishman's object; to assert his own individuality, not to yield to any higher power. So deeply rooted is the feeling that if the Spectator, which preaches free will about five times a week, chances to remark of a misfortune which it believed to have been unpreventable that "it taught the lesson of endurance," it is pelted with the cries of "fatalism," and accused of wishing to suspend effort, while a majority of Englishmen would utterly reject the Massachusetts Senator's prayer. He was asked in writing by some impertinent journalist to explain, also in writing, his views as to a future state, for the public benefit, and replied, if we remember aright, "I do not know much about it, and I never feel certain, but I do in my better moments hope strongly that I shall go to another world, where I shall find less friction and no editors." The Englishman would have hoped for a world in which he specially should always have strength to overcome the friction.

So far as this spirit is the outcome of energy or of combativeness against the curable evils of the world, it has, we need not say, our most hearty sympathy—though we can see also the beauty for some natures of the Catholic notion of resigned submission and retreat—but we are not fully assured that energy is the root of it all. The grumbler is not always the worker or the fighter either. We think we trace some of it, at least, possibly a good deal of it, to a much lower impulse—that passion for comfort and ease which is now so strong that it grows destructively angry when anything interferes with it; which would punish the heavens for hailing, if it could, and which at heart utterly rejects the notion that Providence can be stern. We noticed the strength of that passion fifteen years ago, during the discussion on eternal punishment, marking with pain that while the argument which moved thinkers was the disproportion between finite guilt and infinite penalties, the argument which moved the multitude was the probable and, as it were, motherly kindness of the Creator. Since then the feeling has spread, as we notice, very rapidly, till the very ideas that law is hard, that endurance in faith may be a virtue, that resignation is one of the highest graces, that elevation and not happiness may be the object of the grand plan, seem disappearing from men's minds. People seem positively to be affronted with the Divine will because shipwrecks occur; to be ready to quarrel with Nature because gas explodes in a mine; to doubt all supernatural energy because on the earthquake belt earthquakes kill innocent folk. It is not that they believe that all is love, but that all ought to be gentleness. There ought to be no violence, even in hurricanes; no bloodshed, even when eagles are hungry; no pain, even when flame has struck on flesh. There should be no teaching of endurance, but only such a development of intelligence that there shall by and by be nothing whatever to be endured.

It is a very gelatinous creed, all that, and one for which we confess we have but scant respect. It is utterly inconsistent with the facts of the world, and with any conception any reflecting creature can form of divine Providence. Suppose we adopt the physicists' theory, reject government by a sentient mind, and believe everything to be cause and effect, then the faith becomes positively ludicrous. Man has then to hear, without protection from anything but his own brain, which, in the direction of foresight, is nearly powerless, all that is and all that may be. If science is gospel, a heavy proportion of pain is as certain as a demonstration in Euclid. Granted so many millions of people, there will be so many burnt, so many drowned, so many induced to kill themselves with strychnine or corrosive sublimate, so many afflicted with tubercle of the spine; and the proportion may, under certain contingencies, be indefinitely increased till everybody, for instance, may die in solitude and neglect of yellow fever. There is no earthly reason, under a regime of simple science, why a whole population should not go raving mad; why everybody should not have hypochondria; why all food alike should not be stricken, as was the potato, and all sentient beings die out from any one country. (There is grave reason to suspect that the very thing did occur to the whole people of Cambodia.) Surely, if the scientific hypothesis is true—the very first notion to taught is the necessity of endurance, of cultivating that form of manliness which can submit to the inevitable without whining and without wasting mental strength in impotent scratches at an incoming flood, sure, at least, of this thing, that man retains control over himself. The Stoics taught that ages since, and would have smiled in scorn at the weaklings who, without believing in Providence, yet maintained that the first duty of man after a shipwreck is to scold at all concerned, the tide included, as shrilly as he can. Why not accept the lot which must fall on somebody, and which had this time fallen to those for whom he cared? And if science is not God, if, as we believe, the world is regulated by a sentient mind with a purpose of its own to be fulfilled, then the value of endurance, whether in its masculine form of fortitude or its feminine form of resignation, is even greater, for there is in repining, besides weakness, something of disloyalty and accusation of the king whose laws are so irresistible. Of the occasional hardness of those laws there can be no doubt whatever. Not to mention the sentence of capital punishment under which we all live, there is the fact that all physical penalties—for example, the action of fire—fall upon good and bad alike; that intense suffering may be inherited, as in the liability to caries or leprosy; and that pain is often proportioned, not to the capacity to bear it, but to the incapacity—the horse suffering tortures which the polypus escapes. And we may add, though the Saturday Review will be angry, this other fact, that as far as man can ascertain no care will entirely destroy his own liability to blunder, under circumstances where his blundering—as, for example, possibly in the structure of the "Captain"—will involve more misery than his guilt could do. In the face of such a regime, which no one doubts, it seems to us that to cultivate endurance, or—if we must use theological phrases—the suppression of the will before a higher power, is most conducive to mental strength, and that to condemn such cultivation as "fatalism," as three of our contemporaries recently did, is to deprive man of a portion of his possible armor. "Fatalism," as we understand it, is neither endurance, nor resignation, nor submission, but acquiescence produced by a belief that a blind power—necessity—overrules both the will of the sentient mind and the usual relations of cause and effect, and involves ultimately the denial alike of science and theology, though, as usually held, more fatal to the former than the latter. The Turkish regiments which, surrounded by Greeks in an amphitheatre of hills, sat down and died patiently of starvation, gave an example of fatalism in an extreme and nearly perfect form. Almost every recorded martyrdom gives an example of submission or resignation. But the man who, believing a shipwreck unpreventable, or caused by the unexpected and undesigned consequences of human blundering, accepts the catastrophe without questioning the Providence which, and which alone, could have prevented it, shows the example of endurance; and that endurance, if only real, and not the result of callousness, is a true strengthener to the mind, which, from most of its speculations, gains so little strength.—Spectator.

THE VARIEGATION OF LEAVES.

The variegation of leaves occurs so commonly that we do not often inquire into the cause of it. By "variegation" must always be understood abnormal coloring, the most common forms of it being bands, blotches, edgings, and splashes of creamy white, or olive grey, or yellow, of several shades more or less intermixed with the normal green common to the plant when it is not variegated. The variations of variegation are endless, but there appears to be a common cause for them all, that cause, whatever it may be, operating in a variety of ways, so that in one case it results in white, grey, or creamy colored variegation; and in another case in amber, gold yellow, or even deep orange-colored variegation; the selfsame species of plant being, perhaps, the subject of its diverse operations. The ivies, hollies, and Japanese enonymus afford examples familiar to all, and are admirably adapted as material for the study of the subject. A vague application of the term "disease" is commonly accepted as explaining the cause of variegation. In one view of the case we may be disposed to regard it as a kind of chlorosis, and in another as unmistakable etiolation. Usually it causes, or is accompanied, or is followed by a diminution of the vigor of the plant, but some variegated plants grow as freely as others of the same species that are not variegated, and generally speaking the vigor diminishes in proportion to the degree of etiolation, so that a growth purely white cannot be propagated, and soon passes away. That the variegated portion of a leaf has less vigor than the green part is suggested by the often wrinkled appearance of it, the result of a more rapid growth of the green centre than the variegated margin. This suggests that defective assimilation, the result of debility, is the primary cause of variegation, a view of the case largely supported by the experience of cultivators, who have often produced variegation by starving a plant, and effaced variegation by liberally feeding it.—The Gardner's Magazine.

DEGREES FROM GERMAN UNIVERSITIES.

Each Faculty has the exclusive right of granting degrees in its own sphere, although this prerogative is exercised under the authority of the whole university. The Theological Faculty grants two degrees, those of Licentiate and Doctor. The Philosophical Faculty also grants two, Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy, which are generally taken together. The Medical and Judicial Faculties give only one degree each, that of Doctor.

Whoever seeks the degree of Licentiate in Theology, and of Doctor and Master of Arts in Philosophy, must have studied three years at a university, and must signify his desire to the Dean of his Faculty in a Latin epistle, accompanied by a short curriculum vitæ. Before he can be admitted to the viva voce examination, he is expected to send in a Doctor-dissertation, an original treatise, generally written in Latin, in which he must manifest, not only his proficiency in the subjects in which he intends to graduate, but some power of original thought and independent research. The Dean sends this treatise round to the other members of the Faculty, who have to declare in writing their opinion of its merits. If this be favorable, a day is appointed for the grand examination, which is generally carried on in Latin, and which all the members of the Faculty are expected to attend as examiners. The Doctorandus is then subjected to a viva voce examination by each Professor in turn, after which it is decided by simple majority whether the candidate has satisfied the examiners or not. If he succeeds, he is directed to hold a public "disputation" (in Latin) in the presence of the Dean and Faculty, on theses of his own selection, which are posted at the gates of the University. After the disputation the Dean addresses the corona in a Latin speech, and hands the diploma to the new graduate.

To obtain the degree of Doctor of Theology the candidate must have finished his academical studies six years, and have written some work, which, in the opinion of the Faculty, is a valuable contribution to theological literature.

The degree of Doctor utriusque juris is taken in nearly the same way as those in Theology and Philosophy, except that the law student is sometimes subjected to a written examination previously to the oral one.—McMillan's Magazine.

Items from Weekly Review:

The Austrian soldiery seem as anxious to have the Scriptures as were those of Russia a year ago. The agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society writes: "Never, as long as this agency has existed, has there been such a run for the Scriptures of truth as at present. We have still to strain every nerve to keep up supplies. The weekly report of issues sometimes comes to 800 and 900 copies. We supply the military with the New Testament at half the ordinary selling price; and whether it is the low price, or the solemnity of their position, or both combined, thousands of soldiers avail themselves of the opportunity to purchase the Scriptures. Beyond this work, which keeps us well employed, we have the prisoners of war to attend to—a medley company, speaking Croat, Servian, or Turkish, or Arabian, or Hindustani, but all 'Turks,' of course. With rare exceptions, all have most joyfully and thankfully accepted the books presented to them." He adds: "Among the Russians down in Bulgaria and Roumania, the circulation (now chiefly sales) still keeps on vigorously, and the demand for Russian Scriptures in Constantinople continues quite brisk."

The Cardinals have decided that the Pope ought not to be released from his imprisonment in the Vatican, as they consider his seclusion necessary for the maintenance of his sovereign rights. Some difficulty has arisen between Austria and the Holy See respecting the organization of the Bosnian church, Austria wishing to keep in her hands the delimitations of the diocese, and also desiring that the Bosnian church should be subjected to the existing Concordat. The Vatican has other views. An understanding, however, will doubtless be attained, but some delay will be occasioned. The Pope had prepared a letter to the King, urging him not to permit the law compelling a civil ceremony to precede a religious marriage. Some of the Cardinals have persuaded him not to send it, on the ground that the King cannot prevent it if ministers decide in its favor. The 6th of January is fixed for an audience at the Vatican of an Italian pilgrimage, which will have some political importance. It has been arranged that an address shall be read, expressing the desire of Catholics to participate in political elections. The Pope will accept and commend the idea. It is hoped thus to overcome the opposition of the Intransigenti, who must, perforce, be silent when the Pope has thus publicly spoken. The Pope, thus seeking to strengthen his hands, is a new phenomenon in the world.

Religious Associations in France.—A return of the religious communities and associations has just been drawn up by order of the French Government. The census of 1876 showed the existence of a religious population of 158,040 person, of whom, 127,753 were women and 30,287 men. It is necessary to enter into some details. The 127,753 females are divided among 844 communities. They possess 259 central houses, 685 independent establishments, 3,137 branches; they own 5,527 private schools, and direct 10,951 public. The 30,287 men form a certain number of communities, of which nine only are authorized; some devote themselves to teaching, and possess the character of establishments of public utility, but the remainder of them have no legal existence, and may at any moment be dispersed by an administrative measure. They have 608 establishments and 768 private schools; they also direct public. The unauthorized religious associations of women are 602 in number, and present an effective of 14,003 members. About 100 of those establishments have been formed since 1870. As for the similar unions of men, they possess, in France, 384 establishments, with 7,444 members. Some of them have their central houses in France, but a considerable number—about 150—have their chiefs and directors in Rome. It is still the famous sword, the hilt of which is in the hands of the Papacy. In the front rank among those associations is that of the Jesuits, which possess no less than 57 establishments in France, with 1,487 avowed members, of whom 123 are in Paris.

Item from Christian Union:

At a recent meeting of the National Club in London some deeply interesting facts were developed as to the progress of vital religion in France. The population of that country, it was stated, is about 36,000,000, of which 1,000,000 are Protestants and 5,000,000 Ultramontanists; while the remainder, though nominally Catholics, are really destitute of all religious belief. Since the Republican victories of a year ago, when religious liberty became an established fact, a decided movement has prevailed all over the land toward Protestantism. That under the direction of M. Reveilland at Bourg, in the Department of Ain, we have already mentioned. In the Central Department of Allier there are three towns, Commentry, Montlucon and Bezenet. Ten years ago there were about sixty Protestants in this district, now there are nearly a thousand, almost all of them proselytes. At Montargis, in the neighboring Department of Loiret (the birthplace of Admiral Coligny), one year ago there were between forty and fifty Protestants, now there are one hundred and fifty, the largest portion being proselytes. At Chateauronx, in Indre, a Roman Catholic officer was buried with all the pomp due to a faithful and wealthy son of the church. In his will was a clause expressing a desire that his fellow-townsmen should possess a Protestant place of worship, for the building of which he left the necessary funds. At Pouilly-sur-Loire, near Saucerre, are now three congregations of eight hundred proselytes. The neighboring town of La Marche contains one hundred and fifty proselytes. The Reformed Church of France receives aid from the State wherever there are not less than two hundred Protestants possessing a place of worship of their own. When such aid is given it may therefore be concluded that the movement is of a permanent character. Thus, quite recently six hundred Protestants in Fresnoy, in the north, have been adopted by the State. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty Protestants, there is now a church of two hundred and fifty, receiving a grant from the State. At Lyons, with its 350,000 inhabitants, the very metropolis of Romish intolerance, reigning side by side with scepticism and atheism, three mission rooms were opened on the 17th of November. The meetings are described as crowded, and remarkable for order and attention. An ouvrier said, with tears, "Never in my life have I heard the truth thus explained. My conscience answers to it. This is what I want." From the South and West the same encouraging report comes. In Paris the meetings of Mr. MacCall are conducted in twenty-two mission stations with an average weekly attendance of 8,000 adults. Already they have worked a surprising change in the order and morality of some of the worse districts of the city. The interest of the French people in religious truth is perhaps best witnessed by the fact that in the Trocadero, during the Exhibition, 1,500,000 copies of the Gospels besides 20,000 Scripture cards and 3,000 Testaments and Bibles were distributed to grateful recipients.

Items miscellaneous:

Rev. S. G. McFarland has charge of a Christian college in Siam for the education of youth in the English and Siamese languages. The college is largely endowed by the King of Siam.

A Christian church has been reared where Munson and Lyman were massacred in the Malayan Archipelago. The murderers now have the Gospel in their own language.

When the Baptist Union of Scotland was formed, nine years ago, it embraced fifty churches, with a reported membership of 3,850. It now includes eighty-one churches, with a membership of 8,163, with an increase of thirty ministers and thirteen students.

MISCELLANY.

The Mikado of Japan having decreed that all his subjects holding official situations shall dress like Europeans, they and their wives, the Japanese milliners, who had not seen fashions change for a thousand years, have consigned to Paris the thousands and thousands of native dresses which they had in stock, and Parisian ladies are now wearing them as dressing gowns. They are said to be very becoming, and the bright dyes in them—a secret we ought to learn—will stand any amount of washing. Chinese silken skirts, so fine that you can pass them through a wedding ring, are also being sold in quantities.

There are four American colleges in the Turkish Empire, with an aggregate of 500 students. There are over 11,000 students in the various schools of the empire. The Arabic Bible is printed from the Arabic type cast in the United States. Young Islam is not intolerant, and under Anglo-Saxon protectorate, will introduce and further practical reform in many directions.

Making a Saint is the work just now to which the Jesuits in Rome are devoting their energies. Great pressure is being brought to bear on the Pope to canonize his predecessor, Pope Pius IX. Leo XIII. is no great admirer of Pius, and knows better than any one else what were the faults of his policy. He has rather snubbed the Jesuits lately, and has given them to understand that he will not yield to their pressure, and the celestial process will have to be put aside until he has settled some of the terrestrial difficulties which Pius created for him in Germany, Italy, Switzerland, and Russia.

PEACE IN JESUS.

Man often longs for peace; the desire for it exists in the breasts of all, save in the most depraved, who delight in wickedness. But, in his blindness, man too often seeks for it from other sources, and fondly says, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace. We must look alone to Him, whose prophecied name is Prince of Peace. He came to restore it; He alone can bestow it; and as each rebellious one yields submission to His gentle sway, there is once more a song in Heaven, a joy there amidst the angels, because another sinner has repented.—Ex.

We acknowledge indebtedness to a number of friends for favors in the editorial department and other departments of our paper. The modesty of some of our assistants prevents the publication of a list of contributors.

THE DUMB SPEAK.

For the afflicted dumb the bondage of silence is now broken. Under a perfectly scientific system of "Visible Speech" they are trained in lip-reading and articulation. By watching the motions of the lips of the speaker, by diagrams and words on the blackboard, and by understanding the various motions and positions of the organs of speech in pronunciation, the multitude—whose lips have been hitherto sealed in painful silence—are learning to read, on the lip, spoken but unheard words; and with distinct though not harmonious vocalization to converse with their fellows. Institutions in the United States and abroad are successfully working out this ameliorating system.

How wonderful is all this! But God, in unequaled and more wonderful mercy, is teaching the spiritually dumb to speak distinctly and sweetly the beautiful and rythmical language of the New Jerusalem. How is this work done? For alas! men are spiritually blind as well as dumb. The obscuring cataract of sin has shut the soul's eyes to the attractive glories of the truth: while the Eargate is filled with confused noises, and blockaded by strange discords, which are welcomed with mysterious joy, to the utter exclusion of the chiming notes of Redemption's songs, immortalized as they float from the Redeemer's triumphant lips, and are echoed by shining hosts of earth and heaven. Now Divine couching lifts the veil from the darkened soul, and Light—Divine Light—is poured into its innermost and obscurest chambers. Then in sweet amaze does the blind cry out, "I see!" as he looks upon One resplendent with more than mortal glory; One, eagerly accepted and enthroned as the Chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. Rescued men look to live, and look to learn. They must be imitators of their living Lord. Imitation is for them life. How they now watch every movement of His expressive lips; trace every emotion of His mobile features; learn the language of His speaking eye; read, hear and understand the precious words of the Precious One—words not heard in their richness by sinful ears. Promise, entreaty, warning, command, love, threatening, become visible speech, articulated in a spiritual alphabet. Soul breathes into soul. His Spirit teaches, and the new-born babe soon lisps "Abba, Father," and then begins to frame sentences in the speech of the Holy Land. The laws of Christian conversation, and the attitude and motion of all the organs of distinct Christian articulation and speech in a holy life, are prayerfully studied under and before this Divine Teacher, and bodied ont in conscious, glad, heaven-blessed execution.

So is born articulate Christian fellowship. Church life is no longer silent life. Organization is active. Believers are brethren in Christ, and have words for spiritual intercourse; vocal expressions of the mind of Jesus, realized by them in their earnest and holy watchfulness of their Divine Model and Head. The dumb speak. They sing. With their touched eyes they behold the beauty of holiness, and look for the King in His beauty, whom they would welcome in the galleries of their hearts. Into their instructed ears enter symphonies unheard by sinning earth,—the harmonies of holy joys of fellow-citizens in the kingdom of grace, and the sweetness of similar soul-experiences in intercourse with the Lamb, and through victories over sin. And then unchained lips and new-found voices, directed, educated, sustained and enthused by the attractive grace, expressive love and thrilling eloquence of the Divine Exemplar before them here, swell out into joyous speech—articulated manifestation of soul-life—and into holy songs, that lay a master-spell on the weird dissonances and vexing wails of sin-cursed earth. Marching squadrons hail each other with mingling and responsive vocal strains, that grow in sweetness while they linger;—music from once dumb souls. And this new utterance of song is only lost to human perception as it chimes in with the millennial choirs of the perfect in Christ; made perfect through the freedom of a blood-bought redemption, and the glory of free, sustaining, everlasting grace. Evermore the dumb speak the praises of the Lamb, by gazing upon and imitating Him by whom they were taught how to break the guilty silence of sin and speak the language of glory.

ITA EST.

Our valued and welcomed exchange, The Interior of Chicago, that treats its patrons to such a rare and exquisite Christmas number, year by year, that is usually so wide-awake, so quick to note the stumbles of its nimble contemporaries, and so fresh and piquant in its comments, tripped in its beautiful issue—for the holidays. We have just had the time to regale eye and soul with the attractive cover enclosing the number, dated December 19th; else we would have made this criticism sooner.

In the very pretty poem, called "The Mizpah Ring," by Rev. Dr. C. L. Thompson, it is said:

> "It was Fourth of July in Sixty-two,—
> The nation's memorable day,
> By open window and eastern view,
> Andrew a-dying lay.
> Trembled the wires over the land,
> With double tidings pressed,—
> At Gettysburg a triumph grand
> And Vicksburg at the west."

Barring the term "nation" and the "double tidings," which, however grateful to others, was far from joyful to us "rebels," (and every true Southern man was a "rebel" so-called,) all of which doubtless suits the majority of the readers of the Interior, and against which we have no word of criticism;—is it possible that the Interior man forgot that the Gettysburg battles and the Vicksburg siege took place in 1863? "Fourth of July in Sixty-two," McClellan was hugging his gunboats on James River after the disastrous defeats around Richmond,—and East and West the outlook for the "Confederacy" was never more hopeful.

Our friends who were on the other side in the "late unpleasantness" will have to be more careful as to their facts and fancies, for some of us can still remember those scenes. And this is said, not with reference to the line noted, for it can be easily changed, and the effect of the pretty story in verse not marred,—and moreover, it is a very unimportant matter;—nor yet with reference to the sayings of The Interior, which has always been candid, just and generous towards us;—but to express plainly our opinion as to the taste, the spirit and the christianity of what may be seen occasionally in our religious contemporaries and in religious literature. Sunday school novels, the weekly religious press, stately reviews and even more ambitious works sometimes make use of language, perhaps not intended to be opprobrious yet, which can not but be unpleasant, if not offensive. We of the South date events as "before the war," "since the war," "during the war"; sometimes to designate the close we say, "the surrender." But in journals and books that otherwise would be very attractive to us, that epoch is almost invariably termed "rebellion," its participants frequently as "rebels" and "traitors." It is plain our common language is neutral and inoffensive. We will not describe the terms used by our friends, adverted to. We regarded it as a war for our rights and for independence. But we do not use these terms. We regarded it, too, on the part of the Federal troops as a war of oppression, a war of abolition, of injustice and all that. But we do not so speak of it now in our religious literature. It is not worth while to illustrate further.

By this contrast, we do not wish to be understood as saying, "Behold how much better are we than they," nor as thanking God that we are not as other men. We are sure that in the great majority of cases, such and like opprobrious words are used without the intention to wound. Where such intention is manifested we have nothing to say,—only, to let it severely alone, unless truth and honor are compromised. But it seems to us, Christian courtesy, true taste and a just consideration (we will not say for the truth, but) for the sentiments of others would suggest an unobjectionable phraseology. We do not wish to have our children taught in the seductive guise of a Sunday-school book, that their parents were rebels and sinners above all the Galileans,—and that their enemies alone were true, patriotic and noble; that their fathers and dear kindred were weak and mean and pusillanimous, while the "Union soldiers" were ever brave and heroic and so on. It is neither kind, nor just, nor (pardon us for saying) true. We believe the time will come when the heroism and achievements and patriotic principles of Southern troops, as well as of Northern, will become the proud boast and common heritage of enlightened citizens all over a reunited country. Just as Scottish and English alike rejoice in the glories and deeds of each people, and in the common name of Britou. And such "melting charity," as was shown the Southern people during the late pestilence,—kindness doubtless given by many who conscientiously wielded sword against the same people, and given with no unsparing hand, proves not only a common humanity, and the power of Christianity, but a unity of feeling, of purpose and of destiny that belongs to a great people, a mighty and glorious country. To this, the poem referred to, beautifully alludes.

Again, we disclaim any other than a mere verbal criticism for the Interior. A paper so quick to notice slips in others, should be taken hold of, as occasion offers, and we acknowledge the occasion is very rare. But "Homer," &c. That journal, too, as we have before said, always treats those of us who conscientiously differed with them in those days and now, with a fairness and courtesy, as distinguished as it is pleasing.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

REV. S. S. GAILLARD,

Who has been for the past few years supplying Fellowship and McDonough churches, in the Presbytery of Atlanta, died at his home in Griffin, Ga., on the 31st ult. He had been in feeble health for a long time. We regret that we have not data for a more extended notice of this brother.

REV. WILEY BURGESS,

Died in Brookhaven, Miss., on the 26th ult., after a few days of extreme suffering. He was within a few days of seventy-two years of age.

Mr. Burgess was a native of Tennessee, and when little over twenty-one years of age was ordained a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In the spring of 1869 he announced a change of theological views and was admitted into the Presbytery of Mississippi. He was for a time employed as an evangelist of the Presbytery, but latterly has been supplying such vacant churches as needed his services. At the time of his death he was supplying the church at Brookhaven. He was both Stated Clerk and Treasurer of the Presbytery, and Chairman of the Presbyterian Committees of Education and Publication.

A correspondent, "J. B. S., says of him in the Southwestern Presbyterian:

The death of Mr. Burgess occasions a loss to the Presbytery of Mississippi which will be sensibly felt. It is the withdrawal of a warm heart and a ready hand from a field in which the laborers are emphatically few. His solid, well-digested sermons, his fervent prayers, and genial manners, will be sadly missed by his surviving brethren. Their consolation is, that a worn-out soldier has been permitted to lay aside his harness and enter into rest.

REV. A. FLINN DICKSON.

The sad news comes, news sad to us and to the Southern Church, of the death of Rev. A. F. Dickson, of pleurisy, on the evening of January 8th inst. Previously to the late war Mr. Dickson had in charge large congregations of negroes on the islands in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., and was accomplishing a vast deal of good in that work. The war so entirely changed the relations between white and colored that all efforts to retain these charges utterly failed. Mr. Dickson since ministered at Orangeburg, S. C., New Orleans, Wilmington, N. C., and Chester, S. C. From the last named place he was called to take the professor's chair in the Tuskaloosa Seminary for the training of colored ministers for our Church. However persons may disagree as to the policy of establishing or sustaining the Tuskaloosa Institute, all who knew Prof. Dickson will concede that, by reason of his scholarly abilities and his extended experience as an instructor of colored persons, no one more suitable than he could have such work in charge.

Prof. Dickson was an author of very considerable merit. In 1856 a series of "Plantation Sermons" from his pen was published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication. So well were these received, and so admirably did they serve their purpose of enabling Southern masters to instruct their slaves, that in 1860 a second series was published in the same style by the Philadelphia Board. In 1872 the American Tract Society published a 12mo. of about 150 pages of which Mr. Dickson was the author. It was entitled, "The Temptation in the Desert," and was an admirable exposition of one of the most difficult portions of Holy Writ. Within the past few months, by the unanimous decree of the committee of award, the $500 Fletcher prize, for the best essay on the subject "The Light, is it Waning?" being a discussion of the present aspect and position of Christianity and the essential means for its promotion, was accorded to Prof. Dickson.

A series of articles entitled "Africa in the South" and explanatory of the difficulties attending the evangelization of the colored people is being currently published in the Christian Intelligencer. These articles by Professor Dickson would doubtless have done more to set this question properly before our Dutch Reformed brethren for whom they were specially written, than anything that from any other source has been, or possibly, could be written. Prof. Dickson was likewise an occasional contributor to this paper. Other services which have not come under our observation may have been rendered.

In days that are past the writer knew Prof. Dickson well—indeed most intimately—and bears this testimony: That he never knew any one more circumspect in his walk, or more entirely and exclusively actuated by a desire to be approved in the Master's service. As a preacher he was direct, clear and pointed, without specially affecting any of the graces of rhetoric. His utterances were calculated (as from a glowing heart) to set the hearts of hearers aglow. As a pastor he was faithful and diligent. But it was as a friend, and brother—a messenger from the dear Elder Brother, at the bedside of the sick and languishing, and in the house of mourning that bro. Dickson was most appreciated.

Not as a tribute of friendship to be laid upon the grave of the one we loved, is this written. Our emotions we curb, that we may present to the Church these few points in the life of one who made her service his chief delight.

He leaves a large family. May God be with them to comfort and sustain.

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, WILMINGTON.

It was our pleasure to be present at a meeting of the congregation of the Second Presbyterian church, of this city on 10th inst., to hear the reports of the pastor and church officers as to the present condition and progress since June, 1877, a period of about a year and a half. Heretofore reports have been, as they will be hereafter, annual. The reports were in the highest degree encouraging. During the period mentioned a manse has been built and partly paid for. The pastor's salary and current expenses of the church have been met in full. The church has been open for service every Sabbath; Baptism has been administered to two adults and sixteen children; twenty-one communicants have been added to the church, viz: twelve on profession and nine by certificate; eighty-three communicants now on the roll, of whom sixty-eight are resident. The church has raised for all causes during the year and a half $2,700.

CALLED TO REST.

Rev. Joseph Evans, of St. Paul's, N. C., has met with a sad bereavement. Mrs. Agnes Morehead Evans, his wife, died, so says our correspondent, at 11 o'clock P. M. on the 1st ult. Throughout our Synod there will be sympathy for the brother and his family in their affliction.

NORTH CAROLINA MEDICAL JOURNAL.

Drs. M. J. DeRosset and Thomas F. Wood, Editors. December, 1878. This number of the Journal reaches us late, but not too late to notice. The leading article is entitled Blindness Produced by the Use of Tobacco and How to Prevent it. By Prof. Julian J. Chisolm, M. D., of Baltimore. To our unprofessional eyes it has a practical application, for the evil of excessive smoking is wide-spread. From this evil habit, defective vision in all its degrees, even to blindness, results. And all this too, without the patient manifesting any opacity, or extra natural brightness of the eye. "The cornea is clear, the pupil acts well, no pain, no grittiness has been at any time induced by an attempt to use the organ, so that outside examination reveals absolutely nothing to explain increasing defect in vision. * * * The very absence of physical signs indicates a nerve poisoning."

* * * * * * * * *

"As to the quantity of tobacco necessary to cause paresis of the optic nerve there seems to be no fixed amount. I have known men poisoned by one single segar a day, and I have known others to smoke thirty segars a day with impunity. A friend of mine, a wealthy planter in former times, made it a rule to put a bunch of strong Havana segars on his dining room mantel-piece every night of his life, for his next day's smoking. He had been indulging this passion for thirty years when I visited his Carolina country home, and saw him put out nightly a new bunch containing twenty-five segars. As far as he knew himself, no discomfort had ever arisen from this excessive use of tobacco. I have a wealthy bachelor friend, who belongs to the great army of smokers. He is seldom without a segar in his mouth. Before dressing in the morning, and after he goes to bed at night he is still smoking. He is now seventy-two, and he has been smoking since he was sixteen years of age. He considers tobacco the solace of his life, and a segar the best friend he has. He passes the entire day in smoking and reading, having, with his spectacles, perfect eyesight."

And so the writer carries us through a convincing professional description about the dangers in which tobacco smokers are beset.

We are glad to see a recognition tardy though it be, of the claims of the late Dr. James H. Dickson, of this city, as the first surgeon in this country to divide subcutaneously the tendo-Achillis, for club-foot. The recognition is more grateful as coming from a New York surgeon. Dr. Dickson's earliest operations date back as far as 1835.

We have no space to mention further the contents of this number.

A limited number of the article by Dr. Chisolm can be had on application at this office. Subscription price of Journal $3 a year. Address Dr. Thomas F. Wood, Wilmington, N. C.

LATEST FROM OUR MISSIONARIES.

Rev. J. W. Davis gives us from Shanghai, December 3d, 1878, this good news: "I am very well. Miss Safford is better—still in Japan. Our other Missionaries all well." In connection Mr. Davis sends us a copy of "The Constitution of the Chinese Religious Tract Society," of which Rev. W. R. Lambeth, M. D., Shanghai, China, is Treasurer. We will give this to our readers on our first page next week.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

S. V. M. writes: E. F. R. will find "breeches" in Ex. 28:41, and hats in Dan. 3:21.

Mr. Booth, the tragedian is just now the most abused of theatre men by theatre men—and women. It is all very well when ministers and moralists denounce the theatre. They do not know what they are talking about, it is said; but Edwin Booth knows, and says no man ought to allow his family to attend the theatre without first knowing what is to be done there. And Mr. Booth is now catching it.

It is now brought to light by the arrest of a party for harboring seamen, proof being positive, that no law exists which can take cognizance of this as a misdemeanor. Of course until this can be adequately punished, the evils resulting from it cannot be abated. We have urged that the matter be prosecuted, and we trust now that active measures will be at once instituted.

News comes that on New Year's Eve a party of men broke into the Presbyterian church in Culpeper, Va., fired pistol shots through the doors and windows, and otherwise desecrated the building. A reward of fifty dollars was offered for arrest and conviction of the perpetrators. Some persons would call this, and college hazing and the like, mere jokes, but a year or two in the penitentiary for all such jokes would brink them to a very appreciable point.

The Occident says: "Our maxim is, 'Presbyterian papers for Presbyterian people.'" To which the Presbyterian says: "A very good maxim, we think." And we add: Quite so.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Richmond, Va., is striving to win over the colored people of that city by displaying the service of his church in the most attractive way, by lectures, &c. He can never get the negroes en masse in any such way, anywhere. But this brings to mind the late raid the Bishop made upon the colored people of this city, without, so far as we have heard, any appreciable result. And further, as one thing leads to another, we are reminded that Rev. D. J. Sanders, who took up the subject and addressed the colored people in reply to the Bishop, has withdrawn from the editorship of the Southern Evangelist and will publish a paper in Wilmington, called the Afrio-American Presbyterian. This paper, the first number of which is at hand, is printed by Messrs. Jackson and Bell, and presents a very creditable appearance. In his salutatory, the editor says: "With malice toward none and charity for all, it shall advocate the principles of Protestantism in general, and those of Presbyterianism in particular. It shall also discuss freely all questions of a general character bearing on the educational and moral welfare of our people." It will do a good work, we believe, and we heartily bid it God-speed.

Oh, yes! we agree with the Interior and the Louisville Presbyterian that if the Bible Revision Committee undertake to change the text of Scripture, instead of merely dropping obsolete words and supplying words which convey the present accepted meaning. We say, if they are going to enlarge their powers and the scope of their work, they may as well prepare for the rejection of the whole.

The Republican rulers in France seemed to have carried the elections overwhelmingly, and the general feeling is that republicanism is now on a firmer footing than ever before. As republicanism is death to Ultra-montanism and all clericism, we heartily rejoice. The Christian Union thus comments:

Republicanism and Protestantism are twin shoots from the same root. We gave last week in our Religious News column some account of the marvelously rapid growth of Protestantism in the land which is but now just recovering from the terrible persecutions that in the sixteenth century deprived it of its best blood. This growth of religious liberty is accomplished with a corresponding development of political freedom. The Senatorial elections were in effect determined last Fall, when the local bodies were chosen on whom devolved the duty of electing eighty-two new Senators to replace outgoing members and some vacancies. Of these eighty-two the Republicans had in the old Senate but nineteen; in the new they have sixty-four, giving them a majority in that body of fifty-seven. This election justifies the prophecies of M. Gambetta, who advocated the organization of a Senate against the Radicals on the express ground that it would become, in time, a bulwark of liberty; it is a severe blow to the Royalists, and a yet severer blow to the diminishing followers of the waning fortunes of the Napoleonic dynasty. In 1880 the present temporary Septennate will come to an end, and the present election almost insures the definitive establishment of a Republic then in France, after a struggle towards one ever since the overthrow of the Ancient Regime by the first revolution.

TO THE CHURCHES OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Churches needing aid, in supporting their ministers, will forward their applications to the undersigned before the 15th of February next.

In your applications state (1) what part of your minister's time you desire, (2) what amount is raised by the church, and whether it is all that could reasonably be expected, (3) what amount of aid is needed, and (4) how long has your church been receiving aid.

Applications not in the hands of the Agent by the time mentioned above are not likely to be successful. JAS. C. ALEXANDER,

A PITIABLE FAMILY SCENE IN SOOCHOW, CHINA.

Monday morning, the 18th of November, in Soochow, was as lovely and bright as any morning in May that the readers of the PRESBYTERIAN ever saw. The sky was mottled with a few snow-white clouds, which were so small and so high up in the air that they made the day even brighter than a cloudless sky could have done. The air was bracing, but not chilly. Nature seemed to smile and bid man do likewise. It was a day on which it seemed that everybody must be happy.

But there was a family in this great city who felt not the beauty and brightness of the day. One of its inmates, a woman about thirty-eight years of age, had committed suicide. Yesterday she was strong and active—to all appearance a robust healthy woman—a happy wife. But in reality she was not happy: her husband smoked opium. And though yesterday was a lovely Sabbath, she knew naught of its comfort: knew nothing of the heavenly rest that it typifies; she never heard of the Saviour who rose from the dead on that day and gave, in His resurrection, assurance unto all His followers that they shall one day be raised in glory. She was revolving in bitterness and hopelessness to end her life. She saw the means of accomplishing her purpose within easy reach. One teacupful of wine with a little of the opium which her husband had bought for himself was all she needed, and she mixed the draught and swallowed it.

A friend of the family came in haste to my house about 9 o'clock on Monday. "A woman near the North Gate has taken raw opium: will the foreign teacher not come and save life?" I went with him. On entering the house a single glance, as I passed on through court after court and hall after hall, showed that it was the house of a family of wealth. We soon reached the inner apartments. In one of them lay the dying woman. She was dressed in a robe of wadded silk, and the hangings of the bed on which she lay were of silk, embroidered with bright colors. In the room was an aged, gray-headed woman, to whom all paid deference, several waiting women and three or four young men, all wearing an anxious, distressed look. On the forehead of one of the young men was a round dirty spot, caused by his having knocked his head repeatedly on the ground. But prostrating himself beside the wretched woman, or to the family gods, or to heaven and earth, was all in vain.

Adjoining the bed chamber was a small study, in which I noticed a book-case containing several well-thumbed volumes, a few chairs, a table and a low narrow couch, on which was a lamp and beside it the opium pipe. For the sake of convenience these were removed from the couch and the woman brought out and laid upon it. It was evident that the poison had done its work. The purple lips and finger nails, the heavy breathing, the feeble pulse, relaxed muscles, showed that "death sat upon her eyebrows." After a few fruitless efforts to give her medicine, which she could not swallow, I came away. On the opium smoking couch, on which her husband had often stretched himself, refusing to listen to her entreaties not to go on with his terrible habit till he and she were ruined, the wife now lay, and in a few hours will be a livid corpse.

Dear reader, there are many families in this city who have had just such an experience as that which I have described. If the number of women who have committed suicide in China during the year 1878 were told you, I doubt very much whether you would believe it or not.

How different the case might be. Had this family that I have told you about been a Christian family, guided and controlled by Christian principles, the husband would not have been a opium sot, the wife would not have been a suicide, and instead of all this misery, death and disgrace, there would be gladness and joy as pure and bright as the skies which smile on Soochow.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died in Greensboro, on Saturday night, January 4th, 1879, after a short and very severe attack of diphtheria, Miss Martha Davie Gretter.

It is hard to give adequate expression to our feelings in any obituary notice without seeming to be extravagant in our estimate of the lovely character of the deceased. The large crowd from every part of the town that attended her burial attested the deep feeling of love and sorrow felt by those who knew her. Few, if any, in all our community were more admired and loved than Davie Gretter,—she was so fair, so beautiful, so graceful, so cultivated in her tastes, so ready to accommodate, and so useful in the sphere and circles where she moved, that all mourn her death and feel a personal loss in her departure,—added to all and better than all she was a disciple and follower of Jesus, and had been a communicant in the Presbyterian Church for nearly five years—faithful in the family, in the Sabbath School and in attendance upon the ordinances of religion, public and private. She was the youngest child of Rev. Jno. A. Gretter, the former beloved and honored pastor of this church. She has rejoined her sainted father and mother and others in the presence and fellowship of the Lord Jesus in paradise. The character of her disease was such as to prevent conversation,—though her mental faculties were continued unimpaired to the last. She was conscious and evidently desired to talk to the loved ones around her, but was unable; she was engaged much in prayer and the name of Jesus was again and again heard from her feeble lips. She bid farewell to her brothers and sisters and to her beloved physician who had done all that love and skill could do, and at about 11 o'clock Saturday night, she quietly fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle.

> But O, a sweeter home than ours
> In heaven is now thine own!"

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, in Charlotte, N. C., November 19, 1878, in her 41st year, MRS. ELLEN STINSON, step-daughter of the late Senator John Walker, and sister of the late Rev. John S. Harris.

The character of this lamented lady was marked by traits peculiarly attractive and winning. Her amiable spirit and gentle manners, her modesty, simplicity, the sincerity and warmth of her affection, endeared her to all who knew her. The grace of Christ, early bestowed, crowned a disposition naturally lovely. A plant reared in the garden of the Lord, and nurtured under the hallowing influences of the sanctuary and fed by a secret spring, its leaf did not wither, and yielded its fruit in its season. Literary tastes were sanctified, and mind and heart found their highest satisfaction and enjoyment in the green pastures of Divine truth, and beside the still waters of Divine consolation. The mild light of a consistent Christian character and a holy career shed its radiance over all the relations of life, whilst, like the gentle Orb of Night, it gives the glory of it all to the great Sun of Righteousness, the brightness of whose splendour it, in subdued beauty, reflects. Tried by more than the usual vicissitudes of life, in all circumstances she illustrated the meek and confiding spirit of the Gospel; and under the chastening hand of God, however severe the strokes, and however deeply nature felt and groaned, not a murmur was permitted to vex her heart. Left a widow, with a family of eight young children around her, her chief solicitude was for their spiritual well-being. She regarded herself as a trustee for Christ, who had committed to her care precious, immortal souls, to be trained up for Him. Clearly discerning the immeasurable superiority of an interest in the everlasting covenant to the uncertain possessions of a transitory life, she sought for them, first of all, the kingdom of God, as their surest, richest, noblest inheritance. And when forced, by the progress of her disease (consumption,) to realize that she must be taken from them, though the trial to nature was very severe, yet, through the overmastering power of a strong faith, she was enabled to cast that burden on the Lord, and to commit her loved ones confidently to the tender care of that Covenant-God, who has said, "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive, and let thy widows trust in Me." She has left to her offspring the rich legacy of a holy life, a pure character, a consistent walk, and many fervent prayers, which, we trust, shall yet be answered in blessings on their heads—a legacy infinitely more precious than all the diadems and treasures of earth. May they all secure, by faith, the priceless inheritance!

It pleased her Heavenly Father to subject her to a long, protracted discipline of trial and suffering. But the cup of affliction proved to be a cup of blessing. The long, wearisome hours of sleepless nights were passed in the study of the Scriptures and the perusal of devotional books; and the large income of spiritual gain was a rich compensation for the loss of physical rest and comfort. "I find so much sweetness in my sufferings, I do not see how I could do without them," she would say. "I thank and praise God for them, for Jesus has come nearer to me now than ever before. O, the sweetness of such a Saviour!" And so she continued through weeks and months of bodily exhaustion and pain, extolling Him whom her soul loved, as the "chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." The Shepherd had brought her, with the choicest of His flock, to the "sweet fields arrayed in living green, and rivers of delight." The King had led her into His banqueting house, and His banner over her was love. She could say, with the Spouse in Solomon's song, "His left hand is under my head, and His right hand doth embrace me. I am sick of love." And when these manifestations were somewhat abated, she would exclaim: "I see Him, but I want Him nearer. Why does He delay? Why does he not come nearer to me?"

The closing scene was one of wondrous sublimity and beauty. She was not merely taken up to the Mount of Vision, and favoured with a view of the Celestial City. It was not upon Mt. Pisgah, but upon the Mount of Transfiguration, she stood with Jesus, and the fashion of her countenance was, in a measure, altered, and shone with heavenly light and beauty. "O," she exclaimed, if such is the preciousness of Jesus here, what must it be hereafter! How shall I be able to bear the weight of glory, which is, even now, beginning to press upon me! O, that all the world were here, that I could tell them of my Saviour's sweetness and beauty!" Heaven itself had come down to her, and the King, in His beauty and glory, stood before her! Her humble dwelling became, for the time, the Royal Palace of the King of Kings! Illumined with a light that was not of earth, and which shone into obscurity the boasted splendour of earth's proudest mansions; for "the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb was the Light thereof."

The ravished saint would fain have held the King in her tabernacle here. But for Jesus to be with us where we are, is not the same as for us to be with Him where He is. For the region of lights and shadows is not comparable with the region of uncloaded, eternal day. And so the celestial vision faded somewhat from her view. But her soul, dissatisfied with all beside, panted after God. "When shall I come and appear before God? Has Jesus forgotten me? I see Him, but He is not near. Why doth my Saviour tarry?"—succeeded, at length, by the triumphant cry, "HE HAS COME! HE HAS COME! GLORY! GLORY! GLORY!" And so went up to the Home of Glory and of God! Forever now upon the Mount of Transfiguration, changed eternally into the image of Jesus, from Glory to Glory!

SUSTENTATION COMMITTEE OF FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

This committee will meet on Thursday, the 13th of February, 1879, at 11 o'clock, A. M., in the lecture room of Fayetteville Presbyterian church. It consists of Rev. D. Fairley, Rev. M. McQueen, and Elders B. Fuller, Jos. A. McArthur, Dr. Hugh A. McSwain, with the chairman. Churches requiring aid in supporting their ministers during the current year will please forward their applications to the chairman before the time above mentioned. Those applications should state what part of a minister's time is wanted, what sum is raised by the church, and whether it is in proportion to its ability, and what amount of aid is desired. H. G. HILL, Chairman.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Boston Monday Lectures—Conscience, with Preludes on Current Events—by Jos. Cook. 1879. $1 50 postpaid. Houghton, Osgood & Co., Boston, Mass., or R. Berry, Newberu, N. C.

This volume embraces the first ten of the thirty lectures delivered by Mr. Cook in Tremont Temple during the last lecture season. It presents the very freshest discussion of a most important subject, in the light of the most recent, as well as the oldest theories and opinions of the foremost mental and moral philosophers. The associational, intuitional and pantheistic theories concerning the location of man's faculties, are brought under scientific and practical examination, by this remarkable man. His vigorous arguments, attractive rhetoric, fund of learning and illustration, and racy irony, sustain the reader's interest, even when he disagrees with the lecturer. But Mr. Cook believes in the Bible, and is a sturdy champion for the truth as it is in Jesus. So we follow his beautiful discussion of "Solar Self-Culture" and the "Physical Tangibleness of Moral Law" into a consideration of Matthew Arnold's "Views of Conscience;" the "Infallibility of Conscience," &c. Such reading is stimulating, refreshing, and rouses a man to investigation, and resting on sure foundations, Mr. Cook's definition of conscience is "that which perceives and feels rightness and obligatoriness in choice."

His preludes are very lively and timely. In that on "Enfranchised Ignorance in the South" he falls into error in asserting that the schools for freedmen depend almost exclusively upon the North for their support—a singular delusion!

Just How: A Key to the Cook-Books. By Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Author of "Real Folks," "We Girls," &c. 1879. Houghton, Osgood & Co., Boston, Mass.: or R. Berry, Newberu, N. C.

This book professes to be a "Grammar of Cuisine," beginning with the very A, B, C of its etymology, and showing the elementary principles of its syntax. It seems to us to be a "common sense" book. But not being skilled in the cooking department, (though skilled in testing its results,) we handed "Just How" to a good housekeeper for her criticism. She oracularly pronounces it "excellent." As a law-abiding man and lover of peace and 'cuisine' we stand by that opinion of our proxy, and repeat 'an excellent book.' She knows; or—she ought to know.

Barnes' Educational Monthly. January, 1879. $1 50 per annum. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, Chicago, and New Orleans. This entertaining and useful monthly will sharpen teachers' wits.

We have received from the University Publishing Company, New York and Baltimore, through Mrs. Susan Stanley, Bookseller, Newbern, N. C., the following:

Venable's Primary Arithmetic, or First Lessons in Numbers, 25 cents.

Venable's Intermediate Arithmetic, 1878. 50 cents.

Venable's Practical Arithmetic, Revised Edition, 1878. Pp. 348. 85 cents.

A School History of the United States of America, from the Earliest Discoveries, to the year 1870, with Maps and Illustrations, and an Appendix containing the Constitution of the United States, and the Declaration of Independence. By Geo. F. Holmes, LL.D., Prof. of History in University of Virginia. 1878. $1 25.

These text books are by eminent Professors,—one of mathematics and the other of history, in the most distinguished University of the South. We would expect them to be good. A careful examination confirms our expectation. The Arithmetics are not only well gotten up mechanically; but the treatment of the science of numbers is clear, concise, progressive and well graded; and in the Primary Arithmetic—especially—is admirably aided by multitudinous object illustrations.

Holmes' History is an excellent compend, written generally with clearness, and having a good chronological table and Review Questions, following each part. It is impossible yet to compile a completely accurate history of our late war. But it is decidedly better for Southern boys to learn its causes and general outline from a Southern pen. We call attention to one inaccuracy on p. 304, where the "whole Stonewall Division" is said to have been captured on May 12th, 1864. The writer belonged to the old Stonewall Brigade was present on that day, and knows this statement to be incorrect.

The Question Book—A General Review of Common School Studies, to be used in schools in connection with Text Books. By Asa H. ... Tenth edition, revised; 1878. pp 283. ... C. W. Hagar, Gen'l Agent, Plattsburg, Clinton county, N. Y.

A careful and judicious system of nearly 3,000 questions on Geography, Grammar, Arithmetic, Reading, Orthography, Civil Government, Physiology, and United States History. Answers are separate from questions, but are each numbered and easily found. We commend it to all teachers as an invaluable assistant. Every family will find this a most interesting and suggestive compend of condensed information on the subjects treated, and many will find much new matter. Reviews, so important in all studies, can be made by these questions, notwithstanding various text books have been issued in the schools.

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

The Jewish Chronicle finds "a prophecy fulfilled" in one of the results of the new understanding between Britain and Turkey, and thus speaks of it: The report that the Porte has granted a concession to an English company for the construction of the Euphrates Valley Railway, and to a French company for the Jaffa-Jerusalem line, has been very favorably received by the Jews in Jerusalem, especially as, according to their belief, a prophecy in the Scriptures will thereby be fulfilled. The Euphrates Railway, so it is proposed, will intersect the former provinces of Assyria and Babylonia, and will have stations at Mosul and Hillel, in the neighborhood of which towns are Assyrian and Babylonian ruins. It has been suggested at Constantinople that eventually a junction might be effected between the Euphrates line and the Egyptian railways, which, if carried out, would confirm the following prophecy of Isaiah 19:23: "In that day there shall be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.'"—Christian Intelligencer.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. Dr. R. McInnis has again entered upon the evangelistic work in the Presbytery of Central Mississippi.

The ladies of the First Presbyterian church of Augusta, Ga., lately presented Rev. Dr. Irwine with a pulpit gown.

Rev. A. J. Witherspoon, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel at New Orleans, has been quite seriously indisposed, but is better.

At Rockport, Mo., six persons were received on profession of faith. Three were children of the pastor, Rev. H. P. S. Willis.

Licentiate T. M. Lowry who has been supplying the church at Aberdeen, Miss., for some months, has accepted a call to become its pastor.

A pro-re-nata meeting of Atlanta Presbytery was held in Atlanta on the 2d inst. The pastoral relation of Rev. W. A. Dabney and Hunter street church was dissolved.

Rev. Dr. Leftwitch will not unite with the Baltimore Presbytery, it is said, until the judicial case with which he is connected, is decided by the Southern Assembly.

Postoffice addresses changed: Rev. F. L. Leeper, from Mt. Pleasant to Fort Mill, S. C. Mr. John C. McMullen, from Clinton, Ala., to Blackstock, S. C.

Arkansas College, at Batesville, Ark., has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. H. B. Boude, President of Austin College, at Sherman, Texas.

On the 15th ult., a committee of the Presbytery of Tuskaloosa, consisting of the Rev. C. M. Hutton and ruling elders J. A. Billups and E. T. Going, reorganized Sardis church. —Southern Presbyterian.

Rev. J. S. Frierson who has been referred to previously as suffering severely from an accident, has removed to Hartsell, Ala. He is slowly improving, and hopes soon to resume his labors.

The congregation of Rev. A. D. McClure, of Oxford, Miss., are not willing to part with him to become pastor of the Providence church at McAfee, Ky. They have increased his salary, and granted him a furlough.

Fairview church in Perry county, Ala., wants a minister. Address clerk of the session, Marion, Ala. Also, an Evangelist wanted for Eastern Texas Presbytery. Address Rev. W. N. Dickey, Ladonia, Texas.

The revival in Hebron congregation, Augusta county, Va., has been heretofore referred to. At this church there were in all forty-three professions and four admissions by letter.

At the First Presbyterian church, Staunton, Va., during last week there were well attended prayer meetings every evening. We do not know that the week of prayer was observed in our Southern Presbyterian churches generally.

Rev. A. L. Kline, D. D., has been compelled, by failing health, to resign the pastorate of the church of Yazoo City, Miss. His post office address, for the present, is Enterprise, Miss.—South-western Presbyterian.

The executive committee of the Mecklenburg County Bible Society held its regular monthly meeting on the 7th inst. Dr. F. Scarr reported, having made an active canvass and supplied 242 destitutions by donations and sold $91.53 worth of Bibles and Testaments. There seems to be considerable interest manifested in this cause by the good old county of Mecklenburg.

At the Presbyterian church, Manchester, Va., under the charge of Rev. W. A. Campbell, the communion was administered on last Sabbath, when there were eight additions to the membership of the church, seven on profession of faith and one on certificate. Three children were baptized. The Sunday school has 125 on the roll. It has not only paid all its expenses, but recently contributed $50 for the wall built around the church.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. J. G. Law has accepted an invitation to supply temporarily the Circular church at Charleston, S. C. Mr. Law has been laboring very successfully as an Evangelist for several months past, and has been the instrument of deciding very many souls for Christ. Among them was a venerable maiden lady in her ninetieth year. She was a child of the covenant, baptized in infancy, and at the eleventh hour gathered into the Church of her fathers. Mr. Law's correspondents will note his removal from Walhalla, S. C., to Charleston, S. C.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. Mr. Kennedy a native of South Carolina, and for some years past a member of the Arkansas Presbytery, has recently accepted a call to take charge of an Academy at Green Hill in the Choctaw Nation. He is thus brought into the field formerly occupied by Rev. Harris Dana, and will preach to the churches left vacant by his death. Mr. Kennedy is not formally connected with the Committee of Foreign Missions, but will be aided for the present in supplying those vacant churches.—Southern Presbyterian.

NORTHERN.

Items from Presbyterian:

The Thirty-fourth Annual Report of the Pennsylvania Seamen's Friend Society states that nearly one thousand seamen have been sheltered in the "Home," 422 South Front street, during the year. The weekly prayer-meeting, held on Thursday night, has been largely attended, and the Bible class, taught on Sunday morning by Miss Caroline A. Burgin, is full of interest. One hundred and eighty-eight libraries have been placed on board of vessels during the year, in the different languages, and fifty-four shipwrecked seamen have been cared for in the Home. About $3,500 have been expended during the year.

In the North, as in the South, Death has been busy among the ministers. Rev. Aaron Williams, D. D., died on the morning of the 31st ult., in Sewickley, 71 years of age. Rev. Samuel C. Aiken, D. D., died at his residence in Cleveland, Ohio, on New Year's day, aged 88. For thirty years he was pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Cleveland. Rev. Dr. E. R. Beadle, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, died at his residence on Monday, the 6th inst. He had preached, on the day previous, an extraordinary congratulatory sermon on the removal of the church debt.

The relation between temperance and wise political economy is illustrated in the fact that in Greeley, Colorado, where no liquor is allowed, there is no police force in a population of 3,000, and in two years only $7 were called for out of the poor fund.

Rev. Dr. Charles C. Beatty, LL. D., at the age of seventy-eight, was lately married to Mrs. Mary A. Crittenden- at the age of sixty. Dr. Beatty has been blind for a number of years. He has been a wealthy man, and very liberal, indeed lavish, in bestowal of his means for benevolence. His means are still large.

SECULAR NEWS.

The General Assembly has repealed the law which authorized the holding of four terms of the Superior Court of New Hanover county. Two only will henceforth be held.

There are some cases of diphtheria near Smithville in Brunswick county.

As it seems to be the fashion among North Carolina newspapers to boast about being "the only newspaper in the State" to do this or that, The Sun rises to remark that it was the only paper outside of the capital to print the Governor's Message the morning after it was read before the Legislature. The document was not received until a quarter before eleven of the night previous to publication, and it was not necessary for The Sun to leave out its general news in order to accommodate it.—Wilmington Sun.

The Mooresville Gazette has been enlarged and improved by its new proprietors.

The week of prayer was observed in Raleigh, Newbern, Smithville and other places.

The Pope is opposed to Nihilism, Socialism &c., &c., which he says spring from the Reformation. Which 'is an opinion as is an opinion.'

In our Legislature the following are among the bills introduced; to prevent the stealing of the dead; to restore the whipping post; to elect Superior and Supreme court Judges by the Legislature; to allow witnesses in certain criminal cases to become witnesses for themselves; to punish selling or giving away poisonous drugs or medicines except upon prescription of a physician; to appoint three Commissioners to collate, revise and digest the laws of the State.

Smith and Forbes of Charlotte, N. C., and Boston have failed. Their creditors are principally in North Carolina.

The N. Y. Senate has passed a resolution opposing reorganization of the army.

Heavy snow in Ohio and Kentucky. Said to be heaviest in twenty years.

Russia declines to interfere in behalf of the Ameer of Afghanistan.

Bismark wants more power to enable him to punish members of the Reichstag.

Congressman Schleircher of Texas died last week in Washington city.

The Channel Tunnel —The site first selected for the sinking of a shaft for the proposed tunnel across the British Channel was in St. Margaret's Bay, on the English side. Complete soundings, however, have shown that this location would involve too great a depth of shaft, and the site has been abandoned in favor of Dover. On the French side, Sangatta, near Boulogne, is the point selected for the eastern opening. The shaft is already seventy meters in depth, with a diameter of two meters, and the engineers estimate that at a depth of eighty meters the horizontal cutting may be begun. The engineers of both countries agree that the French opening of the tunnel is the most difficult part of the undertaking, as a clayey soil has to be dealt with instead of chalk, and the incursion of water causes much trouble.—Christian Union.

The lecture of Hon. Geo. Davis, for the benefit of the widow of Lieut. Benner netted a larger amount—$230—than was ever realized from a lecture here, except one by Hon. Edward Everett, in behalf of the Mount Vernon Association.—Wilmington Star.

A late decision of the U. S. Supreme court may be farreaching in its consequences. We take this report of it from the Christian Intelligencer:

A very important decision has been rendered by the U. S. Supreme Court, four of the Justices, including the Chief Justice, dissenting; the corollaries of this decision it is not easy to foresee. A State law of 1838 provided that the notes of the Bank of Tennessee should be receivable for taxes; an amendment to the constitution, adopted at the close of the civil war, provided that notes issued during the supremacy of the Confederacy should be regarded as null and void, from the presumption that they were issued in aid of the rebellion. The tax collector accordingly refused to receive them and was sued by one of the taxpayers to compel their reception, on the ground that the amendment to the State constitution was itself null and void as against the constitution of the U. S., because it impaired the obligation of an existing contract, that of the State to receive the money for taxes. The Supreme Court so holds, on the ground that the State of Tennessee was never in fact out of the Union; and all its acts are valid except as they are expressly shown to have been in explicit violation of the laws or constitution of the United States. The effect of this decision is to legalize, or rather to recognize as legal all the acts of the Confederate States during the four years of the Confederacy, except as they are shown to have been in direct aid of the war against the Union or otherwise beyond the powers of a sovereign State. Incidentally it at least raises the question whether all the State bonds issued during that time are not binding on the States, except as the bonds were issued expressly for the purpose of resisting the supreme authority of the nation.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practible to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

For particulars regarding Electric Belts, address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC CO., Cincinnati, O.

STOCKHOLDERS, PLEASE NOTICE.

In purchasing the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN from the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN COMPANY I agreed to furnish the paper during the years 1877 and 1878, to such of the stockholders in that Company as were receiving the paper on stock, and who should remit the postage for those years.

Due notice of this arrangement was given at the time. On the 1st of January, 1879, the contract was fulfilled.

I trust that all who have been thus receiving the paper will enter as regular subscribers and remit promptly the amount of subscription.

JOHN McLAURIN.

PRIZE OFFER.

To the person who shall send us the largest number of new subscribers between now and February 15th we will give

WORCESTER'S QUARTO (Unabridged) DICTIONARY and KITTO'S BIBLICAL ENCYCLOPÆDIA;

— OR —

if preferred, will substitute

A LARGE FAMILY BIBLE—Publisher's price, $10 00—

for the DICTIONARY;

OR YET

in lieu of the above offer will send if desired

A SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARY

of fifty volumes, 18 mo., published by the American Tract Society, and net price of which is $13 50.

— OR —

we will pay $10 CASH as a bonus.

The DICTIONARY is two well known to require description. KITTO'S CYCLOPEDIA is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travelers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By JOHN KITTO, D. D., F. S. A.,

author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the "Journal of Sacred Literature," etc., etc.

THE FAMILY BIBLE contains several hundred engravings, embracing the Old and New Testaments and the Apocrypha; a Pictorial History of the Books of the Bible; a Dictionary of the Bible; Brown's Concordance: a handsome Family Record and a Marriage Certificate; two Steel Plates, and numerous Engravings on Wood, etc; Panelled Sides, Full Gilt, Photograph Record.

The above offer is a compensation or reward for extra services rendered, and but one person can obtain it, yet that person or any others who may compete will be entitled to the premiums offered for new subscribers, viz: The map of Palestine for each, or the American Agriculturist for any two, &c.

PLEASE NOTE CAREFULLY that every subscriber must pay in advance $2 65.

Each person competing must send in his or her name promptly that an accurate account may be kept.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Can You?

Can you make a rose or a lily - just one?
Or catch a beam of the golden sun?
Can you count the rain drops as they fall?
Or the leaves that flutter from tree-tops tall?
Can you run like the brook and never tire?
Can you climb like the vine beyond the spire?
Can you fly like a bird, or weave a nest,
Or make but one feather on a robin's breast?

Can you build a cell like the bee, or spin
Like the spider, a web so find and thin?
Can you lift a shadow from off the ground?
Can you see the wind, or measure a sound?
Can you blow a bubble that will not burst?
Can you talk with echo and not speak first?

Oh, my dear little boy! you are clever and strong,
And you are so busy the whole day long,
Trying as hard as a little boy can
To do big things like a "grown-up" man!
Look at me, darling! I tell you true,
There are some things you never can do.
—St Nicholas.

Safety in Fear.

"There, mother! will I do now? Do I look nice enough?"

Frank's mother looked up at her boy. It almost saddened her to see Frank growing so tall and manly. Why, it seemed but yesterday that he was a little fellow in knee-pants. She stood up to give a finishing touch to his cravat, and then, laying both hands on his shoulders, said, "You're going to call on Mary Weston, aren't you?"

"Yes, mother. You don't mind, do you? I'll not be late, and you see I've brought you the last Harper's."

"No, my son, I shan't mind; only, Frank, the Westons all drink wine; I know it to my cost. Frank, don't take even one glass."

The boy flushed; he was sensitive on the subject, and his mother knew it and seldom referred to it. He had never touched liquor: but his father had died when he was a little baby, and Frank knew that he might still have been alive if he had not tasted wine. Strangely enough, just because of that Frank never liked to be warned about his danger. He did not wish to be thought weak, not having learned yet that "when we are weak then we are strong," if we depend on Christ's strength.

"Have no fears, mother dear! I wish that wine were not such a bugbear to you. Good-night till 10 o'clock.

As the Westons lived some way out of town Frank had a cold walk, and when he reached the house he felt quite chilled. After chatting awhile with the whole family Mrs. Weston said, "Mary, your friend has had a cold walk; you'd better take him in the dining-room and give him a glass of wine."

Frank really did not care for the wine; he would have preferred a cup of hot tea or coffee. But the room was full of people; a Mr. Denison, whom Frank had never met before was there; and so the young man followed Mary into the next room, hoping to be able to refuse when they were alone.

"Mary, I don't really care for any wine."

"O, yes! Please take just one glass; it will warm you up. Here! now that I have poured it out you can't refuse."

The young girl handed the glass; and as she said, Frank could not refuse, weak, foolish boy that he was! But as he took the glass Mr. Denison came and stood between them:

"Young Weston, I was your father's friend and since he has gone, will you allow me to take his place for one evening and ask you not to take that wine? I venture to say that if Miss Mary would brew us a good cup of coffee we would both enjoy it more. Is it not so?"

Mr. Denison's manner was so kind that Frank could not take offence, and he said, brightly, "Indeed it is. I was wishing some one would propose coffee rather than wine."

Mary was gone in a minute, and Mr. Denison drew the boy to one side of the room and talked with him in an undertone. "Frank," he said, "I call you so, for it was your father's name, and we were always 'Frank' and 'Ned' when together. I know just how you fell about this matter of wine. Because your father drank you do not like to refuse, for fear people will think you afraid. My dear boy, make up your mind to be afraid—that your only safety lies in being afraid. When your father and I were about your age we were urged to become members of a temperance society. I knew that my father had been very fond of liquor, and that there was a chance that I might have a taste for it; so I joined. Your father laughed at my fears. 'Thank goodness,' he said, 'I come from a strong people, who can drink and know when to stop! There's no hidden taste for me to dread.'

"It was at this very house—long before Mr. Weston was married—that Frank and I were first offered wine. Frank took a glass and enjoyed it. Soon he liked the taste of wine so well that he kept some in his room. He said it was hospitable to offer it to others. Still, no one thought of his drinking too much, for, as he said, he came of a strong, sturdy people. Then he married as sweet a girl as ever lived. Business troubles came, and he drank more—never to excess, as we say; but any wine was excess to him, for, as he found out when too late, his constitution would not bear it. When you were a little child, two years old, your father was dying from the effects of wine drinking.

"I went to visit him again and again, and every time he said, 'Ned, stop every boy you can from tasting his first glass of wine; one is never on the sure side when he takes that first glass.'

"Now, my dear boy, you understand why I took the liberty of asking for the coffee. And here comes our bonny lass with Mocha and cream."

The evening passed in bright talk, singing and games; but to the boy's great pleasure, Mr. Denison took leave of the Westons when he did, and said he would like to walk back to town with him. They had hardly closed the door when Frank said, "Mr. Denison, I thank you so much for what you've told me. I promise you never to touch the first drop. I see that it is my only safe way. Please, sir, be my friend, for father's sake. Dear father! I wish he had been afraid of wine."

This was the beginning of a warm friendship between the two; and Frank, when he grew to be a prosperous man, often said that he owed his health and happiness, under God, to the promise he had given to his father's friend.—S. S. Visitor.

Having A Good Week.

It was early on Monday morning that Carrie received a bundle from the teamster passing by the house, which her aunt had sent her from town. It was just the very thing she wanted most, a neat little suit of silver gray and blue all made up, and in the band-box a hat with a wreath of forget-me-nots, which just matched the dress. The little girl's eyes and feet both danced for joy, for mother's eye-sight had not been strong all the Winter, and so her Spring dress had been greatly delayed.

"Mother," said Carrie, after awhile, when she had fairly settled to work again, "Norah says if you have good luck on Monday morning before breakfast you will be sure to have it all the week."

"I don't think much of Nora's fortune-telling, Carrie," said mother, "but I will tell you something in a similar line that I have almost always noticed come true."

"Please tell me, mother," said the little girl who had a child's interest in signs and fortune-telling generally.

"I have noticed this," said Mrs. Neal, "that I generally have a good or a bad week according as I spent the Sabbath that begun it. If I honored God as I ought by strictly keeping his holy day, shutting out, as far as I could, worldly thoughts of all kinds, and avoiding as much as possible all week-day work, the week has gone well with me. If I have been careless in those matters I had troubles and difficulties enough through the week to keep me well in mind of my Sabbath-breaking all through each day. The best way to insure good success through the week is to begin it right. A celebrated lawyer said that he could commonly estimate his success or failures through the week by observing how he spent the Sabbath that preceded it. It is the same with all of us, I think. We may spend the day very strictly outwardly, and yet break it all the time in our hearts. If we sit in church and take sharp notice of all the clothes in sight, and in our minds trim over and fashion our own the same way, we have just as really sewed and trimmed, as if we took out our work-box and scissors and went to work at the goods. Heart-worship is what God requires of us all, and heart-sins are what we must avoid if we would be acceptable in his sight. Heart-communion with God and our loving Saviour, who is like an elder brother to us, is the right way in which to spend the holy Sabbath, so as to bring down God's blessing upon the whole week."—Standard of the Cross.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Ammonia in the Air.

Mr. R. Angus Smith, who has done so much for the chemistry of the air, lately read before the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society a paper on the distribution of ammonia, in which he described the simplest method yet proposed for determining the amount of ammonia in the air. And since such ammonia may be taken as an index of the amount of decayed matter in any locality, the hygienic importance of an easy test for it is not small. The availability of the proposed test arises from the circumstance that ammonia is deposited from the air on every object exposed thereto. "If you pick up a stone in a city, and wash off the matter on its surface, you will find the water to contain ammonia. If you wash a chair or a table on anything in a room, you will find ammonia in the washing. If you wash your hands you will find the same, and your paper, your pen, your table cloth, and clothes all show ammonia, and even the glass cover to an ornament has retained some on its surface." In short ammonia sticks to everything, and can be readily washed off with pure water. Hence Dr. Smith inferred that he might save himself much of the trouble he had been taking in laborious washings of air to determine the presence of ammonia, and gain the desired end by testing the superficial deposit of ammonia which gathers on clean substances during ordinary exposure. Accordingly he suspended small glass flasks in various parts of his laboratory and examined them daily, washing the outer surfaces with pure water, and testing at once for ammonia with the Nessler solution. Subsequently a great many observations were made by means of glasses exposed to air in door and out, where the air was sweet and where it was foul. By using glasses of definite size it was easy to determine whether the ammonia in the air was or was not in excess. In his laboratory experiments ammonia was observed when the glasses had been exposed an hour and a half.

Of the practical working of the test Dr. Smith remarks that it must not be forgotten that the ammonia may be pure or it may be connected with organic matter; and consequently this mode of inquiry is better suited as a negative test to show that ammonia is absent than to show what is present. When ammonia is absent we may be sure that the air is not polluted by decaying matter; when it is present there is need of caution. Dr. Smith adds that he hopes to make this a ready popular test for air, a test for sewer gases, for overcrowding, for cleanliness of habitations, and even of furniture, as well as for smoke and all the sources of ammonia. Of course it must be used with consideration and the conclusions must not be drawn by an ignorant person.—Scientific American.

Immense Labor Performed by Bees.

Nectar is the term applied by botanists to the sweet tasting fluid which is secreted within the cups of flowers; and the object gained to plants by its presence is that insects, induced to visit flowers for its sake, are useful to the plants by effecting a cross fertilization, an additional amount of vigor being thus conferred on the seeds which subsequently result, in contrast with the evil effects produced by continuous "breeding in and in." The formation of nectar is observed to take place most freely in hot weather, and to be prevented by cold or wet. So great economy is exercised by the plant that it is only formed at the time when insects' visits would be beneficial, that is, when the anthers are ripe and shedding their pollen, or when the stigma is mature and ready to receive pollen. By biologists the visits of bees, butterflies, and other insects are believed to have exercised in past time an important influence in modifying the size, shape, color, etc., of flowers. Nectar is of course the source whence bees derive honey, but it also affords food to many kinds of insects which do not possess the same habit as the former of storing it up. Professor Alexander S. Wilson, of Glasgow, has recently investigated the amounts of sugar contained in the nectar of various flowers and laid the results of his labors before the British Association. He extracted the nectar with water, and determined the sugar before and after inversion by means of Fehling's copper solution. From his table of analyses, which for our present purposes it is unnecessary to reproduce here, we select clover as an example. He found that, approximately, 100 heads of red clover yield 0.8 gramme of sugar, or 125 give 1 gramme (16 grains), or 125 000 1 kilo (2 1-5 lbs.) of sugar; and as each head contains about 60 florets (125,000x60), 7,500,000 distinct flower tubes must be sucked in order to obtain 2 1-5 lbs. of sugar. Now as honey, roughly, may be said to contain 75 per cent. sugar, we have 1 kilogramme (2 1-5 lbs.) equivalent to 5,600,000 flowers in round numbers, or, say, two and a half millions of visits for one pound of honey. This shows what an amazing amount of labor the bees must perform, for their industry would thus appear to be indispensable to their very existence.

The Sleep of Animals.

The sleep of winter and that of night are different in those animals which are torpid for months. The bat, the hedge-hog, the tawrie, the marmot, the hamster, the tortoise, the toad, snakes, mollusca, spiders, bees, flies, bears, badgers, etc, retire to their closed holes, and in various degrees undergo a temporary death for four, five, six and seven months of the year. They usually roll themselves up, but bats suspend themselves in caves. Those who lay up provisions use them before they become torpid, and on reviving before they venture abroad. Their temperature lowers; their respiration is less frequent, and at times their circulation is reduced; they lose their feeling, their digestive organs are inactive, and they suffer loss of weight. The confined air in which they shut themselves, added to the cold, is one cause of torpidity. Facts lead to the belief that some birds hibernate.

Thomas Hood.

Death and fame came to Thomas Hood almost together. For twenty years he had held his place among the rank and file of literature, earning thereby little more than daily bread and the applause that is but of a moment, when, in 1843, the Christmas number of Punch electrified its readers with the "Song of the Shirt." Those wonderful verses went from newspaper to newspaper as, in old times, the beacon fire was accustomed to pass from hill to hill. The laurels reaped by the author were, however, barren, and the sunshine of celebrity had nothing golden in its beams. With the new year was born an unlucky publication christened Hood's Magazine. Misfortunes fell thick upon both periodical and editor, and the "flashes of merriment" that the latter still put forth came from a life blackened with the thunderclouds of sickness and calamity. By May, Hood was in a sick-room, and, as editorial apology for the non-continuance of a novel he had commenced, sent forth a drawing of "a plate of leeches, a blister, a cup of water-gruel and three labeled vials." All the rest of that year and far into the spring of the next, the light of life still flickered on, sometimes burning up brightly enough for the sick man to resume his pen; sometimes all but fading away into eternity. "I am so near death's door," said Hood, on one occasion, "that I can almost fancy I hear the creaking of the hinges." The 3d of May, 1845, saw that door gently opened for him; as quietly as a tired child falls asleep, this gentle spirit passed away from earth. Not a mere jester was it that died, but a brave and kindly spirit who did his noble duty in the battle of life, and who had constantly a heart to appreciate and a hand to relieve the sufferings of others. There is nothing in the fame of Hood over which any descendant of his can ever blush. He wrote much that was calculated to make the best of men better, not a line that could by any possibility make the most worthless specimen of humanity worse. Numerous and exquisite as are his poems, there are two that in especial shed a star-like light upon his memory. While London remains a city the hearts of men must continue to be stirred by the "Song of the Shirt" and the "Bridge of Sighs." The one poem is in some sense the sequel of the other In the Metropolis, where the worship of the golden calf is practiced on an ever-increasing scale, it is the poor, and not the idols, that so frequently endure the fate of being ground to powder. These victims are, in general girls, uneducated, or half educated drudges, whom the love of liberty and the hatred of domestic services have driven to toilsome and ill-paid modes of gaining their daily bread Year by year their numbers increase, year by year thousands of miserable fates and faces tell us how swift if the descent from the death-in-life of the garret to the hell of the streets. Lest we should be over-zealous in casting stones, lest we should forget that forgiveness turned not away from the sins of Magdalen, Hood showed us the starving woman despairing, the sinful woman dead. "One more unfortunate" is, perhaps, the most pathetic line a poet ever penned. The thought of it seems to turn the Thames into a grave.—Scottish American Journal.

Children's Laughter.

How it ripples across the fields and echoes along the hill-side, as musical as distant church-bells pealing over the grassy meadows, where brown village darlings are gathering buttercups. There are no sounds so sweet to a mother's ear, except, perhaps, the first lisping of an infant's prayer. Children's laughter! How dull the home is wherein its music has once joyously echoed, but now is heard no more. How still is the house when the little ones are fast asleep and their pattering feet are silent. How easily the fun of a child bubbles forth. Take even those poor, prematurely-aged little ones bred in the gutter, cramped in unhealthy homes, and ill-used, it may be, by drunken parents and you will find the child-nature is not all crushed out of them. They are children still, albeit they look so haggard and wan. Try to excite their mirthfulness, and ere long a laugh rings out, as wild and free as if there were no such thing as sorrow in the world. Let the little ones laugh, then; too soon, alas! they will find cause enough to weep. Do not try to silence them, but let their gleefulness ring out a gladsome peal, reminding us of the days when we, too, could laugh without a sigh.

Overworked Farmer.

Overwork is simply working after the strength has been reduced so low that it is painful or wearying to move. It is working after the nourishment in the blood has been mostly used up. It is like keeping a mill going when the steam is low, or when the water in the dam is nearly out. In the care of the muscles avoid colds and rheumatism. They make people stiff and lame. They take away the natural elasticity which always gives so much pleasure and substitute a worn-out, tired exhausted feeling which borders on pain and is often more difficult to bear. How very careful the owner of a fine horse is that it shall not take cold! He knows if it does it will founder, and after this it will never be a good stepper. Our whole country is full of foundered men and women, who are stiff, lame, rheumatic, old in feeling, inelastic. Most of them might have preserved their elasticity to old age if they had taken proper care of themselves. As a rule farmers do not bathe as much as they should. The daily bath is to them quite as important as to any class. It requires but a few moments to take it, and when followed by friction it fortifies the skin against colds.

SECULAR NEWS.

The Legislature of North Carolina met on the 8th inst. and fully organized by the election of J. M. Moring, of Chatham, as Speaker of the House. Lieut. Gov. Jarvis took his place as ex-officio Speaker of the Senate. In the Senate R M. Furman, of Buncombe, was elected principal clerk; Platt D. Cowan, of Wilmington, reading clerk; W. A. Barrett, of Lenoir, engrossing clerk; Murrill, of Onslow, doorkeeper. In the House, John D. Cameron, of Orange, was chosen principal clerk; R. W. Best, of Raleigh, reading clerk; J. S. Tomlinson, of Catawba, engrossing clerk, and William Hill, of Randolph, doorkeeper.

Gov. Vance's message is very practical and sound. He refers at length to efforts made in behalf of education and advises continued appropriations to the Normal schools, white and colored, and some changes in the law to make them more serviceable. The subjects of penal and charitable institutions, railroads so far as under State supervision, convict labor, the finances, &c., &c., are all ably discussed.

The trial of Geo. W. Swepson, charged with conspiracy to defraud the State, has been removed to Franklin county; on the plea that a fair trial could not be had in Wake, on account of the wealth and local influence of the defendant.

Hon. Julian Hartridge, representative in Congress from Georgia, died last week in Washington.

Revolution anticipated in Panama.

Four hundred miners in Pennsylvania struck and are idle.

Two of the Russian schools have been closed on a disturbance among the students.

On Thursday a gale of wind, stated as at the rate of over forty miles per hour, blew down fences, tore away shutters, and such other damage—none serious—in Wilmington.

The Free Will Baptists of North Carolina have 97 churches and 5,797 members. Their church organ has between 375 and 400 names on its books, one-third of whom are not members of this church. Of these, at least three-fifths have not paid their subscriptions.—Star.

The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed a decision of the Supreme Court of Utah, in a case appealed, and in which the defendant was found guilty of polygamy. The question was as to the constitutionality of the law prohibiting polygamy, it being claimed that polygamy is a part of the Mormon religion. The decision is that all polygamists are violators of law, and the plea of religion cannot shield them.

A railroad to connect Lincolnton, on the Carolina Central railway, and Hickory, on the Western N. C. R. R., is proposed.

On the 5th inst., ice was plenty, even in Florida.

During last and this week 25,000 young California salmon were put in Deep river at Jamestown, for the Cape Fear river; 30,000 in the mountain streams of Dan river; 30,000 in the Green river, in Henderson county, on the Spartanburg and Asheville railroad. There are now 60,000 young trout ova hatching, which will be put in the hill country streams.—Piedmont Press.

It is encouraging to see the success Dr. Mears accomplished by his energy and perseverance with his process for extracting gold from sulphurate ores. He really does not leave a trace of gold after going through his process. It is putting quite a value on the rich sulphurate ores which have lain dormant so long in Cabarrus county. There has been, this week, a valuable mine sold by William A. Smith of Concord, to a Philadelphia company.—Concord Register.

EDUCATIONAL.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE,

MECKLENBURG CO. N. C.

1877–'78.

THE NEXT COLLEGIATE YEAR BEGINS ON THURSDAY, September 12th, 1878, and ends June 12th, 1879. It is divided by a recess of about ten days, embracing Christmas and New Year's-day, into two Terms.

The necessary expenses for the entire year, exclusive of clothing, traveling expenses, and pocket money, vary from $225 to $250.

There are three fully organized Courses of Instruction:

1. The CLASSICAL COURSE, occupying four years.
2. The SCIENTIFIC COURSE, occupying three years
3. The ECLECTIC COURSE, designed for those who do not wish to take a regular course but to pursue special studies.

Applicants for any class will be received at any time during the year.

Davidson College is on the Railroad, midway between Charlotte and Statesville.

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE

Rev. Wm. R. ATKINSON. (late of Peace Institute) Principal.

Fall Term began Sep 12. Spring Term begins Jan. 30.

THE advantages which this Institute for Young Ladies offers, are not surpassed by any other in the South; they are; 1, Rooms, not only neatly, but handsomely furnished for Boarding pupils. In this respect it is not excelled by any other in the State. 2, There is not an inexperienced teacher in its corps of Instructors; the most important and deservedly popular schools of Charlotte have united with the Institute. The testimonials published in the Circular show the high character and ability of the other teachers who have been added to the Institute from out of the State. 3. For the extent of the instruction given the charges are less than those of any other first class school in the State. The charge of $140 00 for Board and Tuition includes every expense of boarding, with washing all text books and stationery used by the pupil in school duties. Free hand Drawing, and one language, ancient or modern, at choice of parent. No supplemental bills sent in at the close of the Term. 4. In this Institute the health of the pupil is considered of equal importance with her Education.

REFERENCES: The principal refers with confident satisfaction to his successful career as teacher for the past three years in Peace Institute, Raleigh; during which the classes in his department were raised to a higher standard than ever before attained. He there instituted a system of bona fide written examinations, the papers of which were shown to the Principal of the Bingham School, the Mathematical Professor of Davidson College, who pronounced them equal to what was attained in the best schools and colleges for young men in the State. These papers were also shown to Professors Venable, of the University of Virginia, and Le Conte, of the University of California, and drew forth from them testimonials as to the thoroughness and excellence of the teacher, which are published in the circulars of Charlotte Institute. The principal also refers to the Faculty of Davidson College, to Judge Alexander C. Haskell, Rev. Edward Miles and R. Means Davis, Esq, of South Carolina, as to those who have themselves engaged in the work of education.

Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster. A WONDERFUL REMEDY.

There is no comparison between it and the common slow acting porous plaster. It is in every way superior to all other external remedies including liniments and the so-called electrical appliances. It contains new medicinal elements which in combination with rubber, possess the most extraordinary pain relieving, strengthening and curative properties. Any Physician in your own locality will confirm the above statement. For Lame Back, Rheumatism, Female Weakness, Stubborn and Neglected Colds and Coughs, diseased Kidneys, Whooping cough, affections of the heart, and all ills for which porous plasters are used, it is simply the best known remedy. Ask for Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster and take no other. Sold by all druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent on receipt of price, by Seabury & Johnson. 21 Platt Street New York.

THE CHRISTIAN MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

Blessed is the memory of a pious mother. It floats to us now, like the perfume of woodland blossoms. The music of other voices may be lost, but the entrancing memory of her will echo in our souls forever. Often faces will fade away and be forgotten; but her beautiful face will shine on until the light from heaven's portals shall glorify our own. When, in the fitful passes of busy life, our feet wander back to the old homestead, and crossing the well-worn threshold, stand once more in the old rooms so hallowed by her presence, how the feeling of childish innocence and dependence comes over us, and we kneel down in the soft moonlight, streaming through the western window, just where, long years ago, we knelt, lisping our childish prayer. How many times, when the tempter lures us on, has the memory of those sacred hours saved us, we trust, from sin! Years have filled great drifts between her and us, but they have not hidden from our sight the glory of her pure, unselfish love.

The mind of this mother of a large family, one would think, was indeed oppressed with cares; but her ever-cheerful face brought only sunshine to the household. The inspiration of her character, the quiet dignity and perfect repose of manner, inculcated implicit obedience in each child; and now that each one is at the head of a household, the strict integrity, sincerity and purity of this mother's life is envied, and felt for all time. And as we visit her grave, in a dense forest of trees, where only the singing of birds is heard, each tree seems to possess a sanctity associated with the sacred spot. There the eye rests on letters of white marble—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God"—inscribed by the husband, who knew and valued her most. This seems the most blessed of all the beatitudes; holiness and happiness fully described and put together. May these holy words illumine the dark pathway of life to all who revered this beloved mother, whose "children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." The youngest son of this family, though young at the time of her death, often spoke of her great influence over his boyish life. On one occasion, after a political triumph, the Sheriff of the county came to him and told him his constituents expected a treat from the successful candidate. He, at first, protested against such a debasing thought, but finally handed him the requisite sum of money. Riding out of town, towards nightfall, the terrible effects of this deed were perceptible, in the staggering and prostrate forms around him. Then conscience smote him sorely; his road lay near this mother's grave. Dismounting, he knelt and poured out his heart in deepest contrition of soul. We must believe these prayers were answered, for he soon gave up the honors of time, entered the holy ministry; but was soon called to a higher work in Heaven.

Our Church has sorrowed deeply at the loss of so elevated a Christian as dear Mrs. Vance. The religious light of her life shone brightly here; as the sun transforms a drop of dew by the reflection of his own glorious image, so Jesus seemed to shine in her soul, making the weak, feeble, mortal life a medium of His matchless grace. Her nature was enthusiastic and fervent to a great degree, always sustaining her pastor and church against all the evils and inroads of the world. Such a mother must have left the impression of her pious example on the sons left behind her. She expressed the strongest faith in believing that they would become Christians, though she might not live to witness it; and we trust that, in eternity, they may be found as jewels in her crown of rejoicing.

Another life comes to memory—a "mother of Israel," long an instructor of youth in our State, who has also gone to rest. One of her sons said, her posture at a mercy seat, in a retired upper-chamber, the old Bible on the window-sill, the little ones gathered around on bended knees, and her earnest supplications for each one, left a life-long impression; and the upright lives of these sons prove her influence.

Some weeks ago a saintly widowed mother, whose life had been slowly ebbing away for many weary months, passed away here. A foretaste of Heaven seemed to be given to strengthen her tried soul, at leaving seven children, most of them young and unprovided for. Just before death she called all to her bedside, to say farewell. Counting the seven, her voice was uplifted in fervent prayer that each of them would meet her above. Can that prayer ever be erased from those childish hearts? How very great the responsibility of training these immortal souls! And to think that a failure in this is a failure for eternity! It can never be that we are promised strength in our utter weakness, light in darkness, wisdom in ignorance, and those things not be given! We fail in the interpretation of the promises, when they seem to be unfulfilled, for God's Word cannot fail! Let us strive to let our light shine brighter and purer as we near the perfect day. L.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S VIEW OF SOCIALISM

I think the peculiar attitude taken by Lord Beaconsfield in regard to Socialism, can only be accounted for by his intensely Jewish character. Notwithstanding the atheism of his father, and his own life-long and intimate association with English Christians, the Jewish spirit of centuries and milleniums shows itself with unmistakable clearness. We speak of Spanish-cruelty, French frivolity, English pluck, Scotch stubbornness and Irish recklessness, as if each of these nations were peculiarly noted for their various characteristics. And so they are, but no nation has characteristics so unvarying and indelible as those of the Jews. "We are all one man's sons" was the touching remark of Joseph's brethren when they pleaded with the dreaded ruler of Egypt for justice: "We are true men." And through all the long ages since, the echoes of these words is found in the hearts of the Hebrews. Even in their fiercest religions and civil contentions, in their own land, even through the sharpest and cruelest persecutions since their exile, they still feel that the meanest Jew is better than the noblest Gentile, that they are still a peculiar people, a royal race, the chosen of God. They cling together, they assist each other; and should they even take up arms to win back their ancient heritage, they should write upon their banners those words to which, with all their sins, they have never proved false, "We are all one man's sons." Disraeli is descended from the purest of the Hebrew aristocracy—the Sephardim—and probably in every fibre of his nature feels himself a Jew. But like most men of genius, his sympathies are wide, and the feeling of brotherhood which the ordinary Jew only extends to his own race, this man extends to all human kind. His enemies call him selfish, ambitious; and even declare that he is alike devoid of heart or conscience. But his own words and acts speak for him. He was elected to Parliament in 1837; how, or by whose influence, is known to but few; and in 1849 he became the acknowledged leader of the Tory party and has continued so ever since. He has however, never been a strict "party man" on one hand; nor an "independent" on the other. Generally he voted with his party, but whenever his opponents wished to carry any measure which he believed would be for the benefit of the working classes, he has invariably voted with them. In this matter his heart has always echoed the cry, "We are all one man's sons." In this country we know little of the sufferings of the poor, because such suffering is rare. But in England and throughout Europe, there is terrible suffering. Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" are no idle tales;—statistics prove the truth of that book; and oh! infinitely more. In 1839 Lord John Russell made a speech on the presentation of the Petition of the Chartists. Although this petition bore the signatures of over a million persons, Lord John spoke of it in the haughtiest terms. Disraeli replied. A young and comparatively unknown member, who would listen to him? But his speech was earnest and bold, and although disapproving of the Charter, he spoke kindly and generously of the Chartists themselves. He insisted that the "complaints which they brought forward were not groundless; that recent legislation had been against them and their order; and that sooner or later, whether the Whigs desired it or not, the working classes would demand and obtain too, a larger share than they then had in the management of the affairs of the country." Ever since that speech was delivered, forty years ago, he has been true to the position he then assumed. "He has supported every motion, by whomsoever made, which had for its object, the bettering the condition of the working classes." (English Journal) Therefore, no one is surprised at the opinions expressed in "Lothair," his most recent literary production, in regard to the "secret societies" which are working so blindly, but furiously for their own relief. His time is one of sad and tender pathos, like that of a grieving father when he speaks of the conduct of a wicked, but deeply wronged son. "Guilty! oh yes, very guilty is my poor boy, but he would never have been so, had he not been driven to despair; flesh and blood could not bear the treatment he received." And not only in this feeling of sympathy for the oppressed do Disraeli's Hebrew instincts show themselves, but in his ideal of a heroine. What is Theodora but an attempted reproduction of the heroic women of the Old Testament; Miriam and Joel, Deborah and Esther, Zeruiah and Jehosheba? He tries to interest us in Corisande, the avowed heroine of his tale, and the model English lady, but he does not succeed because he is not interested himself. Corisande sprang from his brain, like Minerva from the head of Jupiter; but Theodora came directly from his heart. And Theodora, (what do Bismarck and Gortchakoff say to this?) Theodora is the acknowledged head of the secret societies! Every charm of person, of manner, of mind and heart is given to Theodora; she is a "perfect woman nobly planned." She is like that grand, beautiful and queenly Jewess, the daughter of the Asmodean princess, Mariamne who married Herod, the pretended convert to her faith; and went like her, to her death fearlessly. Her first conversation with Lothair is in the splendid gardens and park of Blenheim. "I do not feel altogether content in these fine gardens" she remarks, "the principle of exclusion on which they are all founded is to me depressing. I require, in all things, sympathy. Even your parks which all the world praises do not quite satisfy me. I prefer a forest where all may go—even the wild beasts." She dislikes gravel walks because she cannot "bring herself to believe they had gravel walks in the garden of Eden." These opinions show that she would like to give the tired and tortured earth a Hebrew Sabbatic rest, of endless duration, when all the beasts and cattle are turned into the fields to feed upon the natural and spontaneous produce of the earth; this spontaneous produce which is called the "Sabbath of the land." "And the Sabbath of the land shall be meat for you—and for thy cattle and for the beasts that are in thy land."—(Lev. xxv.: 6, 7.) The secret societies are made to regard Theodora as almost a goddess. They give her the name of Mary Anne, and their wildest enthusiasm is roused whenever this name is mentioned. These societies bear various names, republicans in Italy, communists in France, socialists in Germany, nihilists in Russia, trades-unions and co-operative societies in England and Fenians in Ireland. He makes his astute character the Romish Cardinal say, who plays so important a part, "After all it is the Church against the secret societies. They are the only two strong things in Europe, and will survive kings, emperors and parliaments." In our view these are the two gigantic evils which loom, like fearful spectres, to the dim mist of the future. Romanism and Communism! If Romanism were really worthy of the name the Cardinal bestows upon it—"the Church"—we would have nothing to fear from it; if Communism were really communism we would have nothing to fear from it. But the Church which is heretical tyranny, and the communism which is robbery and infidelity, are alike to be dreaded. The word commune is a holy one and from it our sacred ordinance, communion (or the Lord's Supper) is derived. And when they paint upon their banners the words, "Christ and his apostles, the first communists," we shudder at the unfulfilled duties of the Church, (our own unfulfilled duties) which enables such men to use such words. In Dicken's Martin Chuzzlewit, a striking and awful illustration of the results of unfulfilled duty is presented; and as it is a single example, I will briefly relate it. A respectable man of business rears his son with one idea, the accumulation of wealth. The tender brain of the boy receives the impression placed upon it by the father's hand, like ductile wax. Money, money, money is the one object, the one idol before which the child is taught to worship. It eats out every vestige of conscience, every moral feeling of his soul. He hesitates at no crime to attain possession of his object, money. The father falls a victim to his own teachings, and dies of heart-break on discovering that his own son is attempting to poison him for the possession of his money. There are a few really Christian capitalists, who consider themselves the stewards of God's bounty and act accordingly; and no communism grows under their hands. They Christianize by paying pastors and teachers; they educate to the needful extent; they guard their operatives from cold and hunger. But the great majority know nothing of the toiling masses who fill their mills; they regard them as a lower order of beings from themselves. When they cry in effect, "Save us from vice?" the answer in actions is, "We will not." When they plead "Save us from brutish ignorance?" the answer is "We will not." When they in their present misery implore, "Save us from cold and hunger, and death by starvation?" the answer is, "We cannot afford it, our dinner and wine parties, and balls, and clothing and equipages take so much money, we cannot help you," and so the monster miscalled, communism, rises like a terrific Nemisis in their midst, and the combined ignorance and vice and want raises its revengeful arm like that of the murderer, Chuzzlewit, to destroy its producer. Can we ever be thankful enough for our own comparative freedom from these monster evils? Let us rouse ourselves to our duty in time; and do all we can for the religious instruction of those who by any means, come within the reach of our influence. Pride of class is no part of Christian character. Foster a kindly spirit between the rich and the poor. And yet remember the saying of a dear old Presbyterian divine, "There are two great classes of poor—God's poor and the devil's poor." The first class are to be treated as friends, whatever their social station; the latter are to be abundantly relieved as paupers. "Be given to hospitality." An elder of our church told me once that his pious old mother considered hospitality so important a Christian duty, that she rarely ever sat down to table without an invited guest. Not the world's guests, but God's. Our meals are daily things, and should remind us of daily duties. Our Lord made a meal a sacrament, and its influence should extend to all meals. In the 11th chapter of Corinthians St. Paul exclaims, "What, have you houses to eat and to drink in, or despise ye the church of God, and shame those who have not?" That is, do you leave poor Christians (who compose the church) standing without, neglected and uncared for, while you yourselves feast in your own houses? Then he dwells upon our Lord's institution of the communion, and winds up his argument with, "Therefore, my brethren, on coming together to eat, cordially receive each other. If any one should be hungry in house let him eat, that you may not come together for judgment." This expression "any one" does not however, refer to the "devil's poor," for St. John expressly tells us that the unbeliever is not to be received "into house." (II John, 10th verse.) The word which I have given as "cordially receive" is ekdechesthe—a compound word compound of ek and dechesthe. Ek merely intensifies the expression. In Greek if ek is placed before the word "bitter" it makes it mean "very bitter;" if placed before the word "to learn" it makes it mean "to learn thoroughly." Sometimes ek is placed before dechesthe and sometimes pros: thus, in Philipians iv.: 29, "Receive (pros dechesthe) him therefore in the Lord with all joy"; and also in Romans xvi.: 2. "That you may receive (pros dexesthe) her in the Lord in a manner worthy of the saints." Our translation "tarry one for another" has not anything like the force and beauty of the original. H. M. I.

GOD'S LIGHTS.

"Dixit autem Deus: Fiant luminaria in firmamento coeli."—Gen. 1: 14.

From the Latin of Abelard.

The earth is green with grasses;
The sky is filled with lights—
Sun, moon and stars. There passes
Vast use through days and nights.

On either hand upbuilded,—
Arouse, O man, and see!
Those heavenly realms are gilded
By help which shines for thee.

The suns of winter cheer thee
For lack of fire below;
While the bright moon draws near thee,
With stars, thy path to show!

Leave pride her ivory spaces;
The poor man on the grass
Looks up, from fragrant places
By which the song-birds pass.

The rich, with wasteful labor—
For vaulted domes shall fall—
Mocking his poorer neighbor,
Paints heaven within his hall.

But, in that open chamber
Where all things fairest are,
Let the poor man remember
How God paints sun and star.

So vast a work and splendid
Is nature's more than man's!
No pains nor cost attended
Those age-enduring plans!

The rich man keeps his servant,
An angel guards the poor,
And God sends stars observant
To watch above his door!

THE CHINESE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

This Society was organized in Shanghai in Dec. 1878. It is hoped that it will in time, become a great national institution like the tracts Societies in Great Britain and America. The Treasurer is Rev. W. R. Lambuth, M.D. Shanghai, China.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE CHINESE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

1. This Society shall be denominated the Chinese Religions Tract Society. Its object shall be to circulate religious books and tracts throughout the Chinese Empire, and its headquarters shall be in Shanghai.

2. The Officers of this Society shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, two Corresponding Secretaries, two Recording Secretaries and a Treasurer.

3. Any person may become a Life-member of the Society by making or obtaining for the Society a donation of Fifty dollars.

4. Each Subscriber, paying annually Three dollars or more shall be considered a Member of the Society.

5. The Subscriptions solicited shall be employed as a means of enabling the Society to publish, and distribute the books and tracts at a cheap rate.

6. Auxiliary Societies shall be formed as far as practicable in different parts of the Empire with a view to promote the objects of the Society by encouraging the distribution of Religious Tracts, and to obtain subscriptions or collections in aid of its funds. The President and Secretary, for the time being, of any such Auxiliary Society, formed on the principles of this Society and contributing an annual donation to its Treasury, shall be, ex officio, members of this Society.

7. The Executive Committee shall be authorized to grant to any person who shall make a collection for the Society, a return of tracts, if required, equal in value to one half of such collection; and when the remittance, at one or more periods, shall amount to Fifty dollars, the person making such collections shall be considered a Member for life.

8. The Board of Trustees shall consist of forty members. Upon the death or resignation of a member, the Corresponding Secretaries shall issue a circular asking from the members of the Board written ballots for a new member; these ballots shall then be laid before the Executive Committee and the Chairman shall declare the result of the election. The candidate may be either a foreigner or native.

9. There shall be an Executive Committee consisting of the President, Treasurer and Secretaries, with two members of the Board of Trustees to be elected for the purpose, whose duty it shall be to attend to the general working of the institution.

10. There shall be a Publication Committee composed of four foreigners and four natives, representing the following four constituencies, viz, 1. Presbyterians and Congregalists. 2. English Episcopalians and American Episcopalians, 3. Baptists, 4. Methodists. All books and tracts published by the Society shall be examined and approved by this Committee which shall contain no more than two members from the same ecclesiastical connection, and no book or tract shall be published to which any member of the Committee shall object.

11. Meetings of the Executive Committee shall be held monthly, and frequent correspondence shall be maintained with the various Auxiliary Societies.

12. An annual report shall be published in Chinese and English bearing on the condition and operations of the Society.

13. The Board of Trustees shall fill all vacancies occurring in the Executive and Publishing Committee in the manner provided for the election of new Trustees.

14. The Board of Trustees shall meet annually on the first Tuesday in May, and at the call of the President, at such other times as may be necessary.

15. An annual meeting of the subscribers shall be held on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in May, at which the President of the Board of Trustees, or in his absence one of the Vice-Presidents, shall preside.

16. This constitution shall not be altered or amended except by the Board of Trustees, and not then till a notice of the proposed amendment, signed by at least ten members of the Board, shall have been sent to each member of the Board at least six months previous to the amendment.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger gives the following interesting description of the Bank of England:

Few visitors go inside the Bank, or pass beyond its interior portals. Yet the Bank contains a mine of wondrous information, and its vast stores of money make impecunious fingers tingle. Here are machines weighing with the nicety of a hair; machines that automatically separate the good coins from those of short weight; printing machines of exquisite finish, for making the notes; electro-plates, from which the notes are printed, and curious mechanisms for constructing the cloths by which the very effective water mark is put in the bank note paper, which is the main reliance in preventing counterfeiting and forgery. You are shown great stores of gold and notes, and for once are made rich by being permitted to hold in your hand, at one time, $500,000, though the vanity of earthly riches is at the same time taught by the celerity with which all these millions slip through your fingers—and back into the vault. You are shown great rooms full of money, with gold a perfect drug—piled up in ingots, hauled around on trucks, carted about in kegs, and shoveled from one place to another, like so much coal. My eyes were allowed to look upon an accumulation of $90,000,000 of gold coin and bullion, but I could not carry any of it off. I was offered a sack if I could lift it, but it seemed fastened to the floor. Picking up a little twenty-pound ingot, I was told to beware lest it fall, and an attendant who was limping about in a slipper said that one of them, of value equal to his next year's salary, had, the day before, almost mashed his toe. There were cart loads of silver in bricks, most of it, like the gold, coming from America, but there was not in all this great store a single Bland dollar—a famous coin at home, but which does not flourish in London as yet.

The bank does all its own note printing, and also all the assorting of light weight coins. It is the great corrector of the British coinage, returning to the mint for the melting pot all the light-weight, defective and defaced coins that come into it. By this means it keeps the coinage up to the standard, as only the good ones are allowed to go into circulation again. The loss on the silver coinage the Government bears, but the depositors have to bear the loss on the gold coinage. Every coin that comes in on deposit or otherwise is weighed, and the light ones are immediately cut almost in two, by an ingenious little machine that works with great celerity. For every short-weight sovereign the depositor is charged a uniform discount of eight cents, which covers the average loss from this cause. For gold bullion and foreign gold coins, the bank pays by weight, at the rate of 77 shillings and 9 pence per ounce of gold.

There is, among the great curiosities of the Bank, its method of tracing the history of every note it has issued, done with great labor by means of ingenious indexes. The smallest note is for five pounds and the largest for one thousand pounds. In their collection of redeemed notes, all of which are kept, is a redeemed note that had gone through the Chicago fire. This note had been burnt to a crisp, yet it had been carefully opened out and the charred remains spread upon a glass plate, so that all was restored excepting a small portion. There, in the ashes, can be read the language of the note, its number and date. This note, which was for ten pounds, the Bank promptly redeemed, and it is now carefully preserved as a great curiosity.

The bank transacts all the Government business in connection with the Government debt, and, so far as this department is concerned, it acts similarly to the Treasury at Washington in paying interest and making transfers. The debt is all registered stock, however, and separate accounts are kept with every holder. There are about 250,000 of these debt accounts, some being in very large amounts. I was shown a signature of Glyn & Co., where they had just received interest on nearly $2,100,000 of one class of the debt. The business of the bank is divided into three great departments—The Government Debt, the Issue (bank notes,) and the Private Deposits. Each of these is separately conducted, and the deposits aggregate about $130,000,000. I told some of the bank officials that this sum possibly was not all the deposits, as several of my countrymen, in Camden and elsewhere, were inquiring about 150 or 160 millions on deposit in the bank for the Jennings estate; but they did not seem to be aware of any such deposit, but they were very sure that the total actual deposits footed up what I have named.

There is a case that shows the gradual progress of the bank in making these notes, by exhibiting specimens. The earliest notes were written with a pen, and it was customary to change their amounts by erasures and interlineations. From these they improved, step by step, to the almost square white pieces of paper of to-day, printed in bold German text, and, whilst being twice the size, yet as unlike the American note as it is possible for two bank notes to be. Another curious collection contains specimens of attempted forgeries, alterations and counterfeiting of notes. Some of these are by photographing, others by pasting and raising, some being clever and others poor imitations. But whilst the printing is imitated, there has been no even approximately successful attempt to imitate the water-marked paper, wherein the bank places its main reliance for the safety of the note. In one case an attempt was made to print upon stolen genuine bank paper, gotten surreptitiously from the mill, but the checks are so admirable that it was at once detected, and the fraud suppressed before the notes had got into circulation. The bank is a wonderful place, and not the least famous part is the Directors' room, looking out upon a pretty little garden, for, even in the heart of busy London, land is not so valuable that a little cannot be spared for grass and flowers. In this bank parlor the Directors meet and sit around a large oblong, circular table every Thursday. Here they raise and lower the discount rate, and thus give official quotation, as it were, to the fluctuations of the London money market, to which all others bear tribute. But, though the enormous money power concentrates here, the Directors who wield it are, nevertheless, true Englishmen. Whatever else they do, they do not forget the inner-man, for hero smoked sundry joints of juicy beef and mutton, and other savory viands, showing that, even in the Bank of England, as elsewhere, the stomach still ruled the roast.

AFFAIRS AT THE VATICAN.

The Vatican is greatly concerned about the possibility of Marshal MacMahon being succeeded by M. Gambetta, and instructions have been issued to the French Bishops and Roman Catholics to exert themselves to the utmost to prevent such a result. Decisions have been adopted respecting Swiss ecclesiastical affairs which are expected to end the controversies, and smooth the way to the demand of the Catholic cantons for the re-establishment of relations with the Holy See. The property of Pius IX. is being sold at the Vatican every Wednesday and Saturday. Everything, from superb jewelled crucifixes to empty bottles, is offered at the sale, which is semi-public, under the guidance of Monsignor Pericoli. Every article is priced very low. The expediency of proclaiming a jubilee on the anniversary of the Pope's election is being considered at the Vatican, but nothing has yet been decided. There is also great debate at the Vatican whether it is desirable that Roman Catholics should go to the polls with the existing suffrage, since a general election seems probable. The means of entering into relations with the English government are also under consideration at the Vatican, but only a study of the question is immediately contemplated. A simple convention, by which the Roman Catholic church should be recognized, is desired. The Vatican is taking steps to establish vicars apostolic in Bulgaria and Roumelia. It is thought probable that the Pope will raise the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Edinburgh to the dignity of Cardinal. The Pope, considering the present conditions of the church and society, has thought that the observance of too many festivals, especially in Italy and Spain, causes both material and moral evils. Instructions have been issued to the Bishops to study and report on this subject. The Pope has been somewhat discouraged by the reports from the leading Roman Catholics in Germany, warning him that the German government is not acting honestly, but is disloyally seeking to make a quarrel between the Vatican and influential Catholics, in the hope of thus crushing both. Cardinal Asquini, who was born in 1802, and created a Cardinal by Gregory XVI. in 1844, died on Sabbath. There remain, of Pope Gregory's creations, only Cardinals Schwartzenberg and Carafla, the latter of whom is seriously ill.—London Weekly Review.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Items from Weekly Review:

The authorities of the Royal Hospital, Belfast, have refused by a majority of one, to give the clergy of different denominations the facilities they desired for attending to the spiritual wants of the patients. All that was asked was the simple registration of the religion of each inmate, such as exists in almost all public institutions of the kind, with liberty for clergymen who desired it to visit members of their own denomination.

The year 1880 will be the hundredth of the establishment of Sabbath schools, and the Committee of the Church of England Sunday School Institute propose commemorating the event by a series of services, conferences, and meetings of an unusually important character. The proceedings will extend from June 28th to July 4th of that year. It is also proposed to mark the occasion by founding a "Centenary Fund," the contributions to which will be applied to the erection of a building more adapted to the special purposes of the society, whose constantly increasing operations in the extension and improvements of Church of England Sunday schools makes the need of larger and more suitable premises a very pressing one.

The notable fact that the New Testament Company of Bible Revisers have completed their work suggests a reference to the time they have occupied in the performance of their important duty. The first sitting of the Company took place on the 22nd of June, 1870, so that they have been at work for upwards of eight years. Three of the most distinguished scholars included in the original list have died while the revision was in progress, these being Bishop Wilberforce, Dean Alford, and Dr. Eadie. The Scottish members of the Company who have been spared to see the close of the final revision are Dr. David Brown of Aberdeen, Professor Milligan of Aberdeen, and Professor Roberts of St. Andrew's.

From miscellaneous sources:

The Watchman says: "It is a singular feature of our times that an age which has seen the conversion of the Sandwich Islands, of Madagascar, of the South Sea, of the Karens, of the Teloogoos, an age which has seen the destruction of the Pope's temporal power, an age which has seen the doors of China and Japan thrown open to the herald of the cross, should be an age which encourages despair of the ultimate victory of Christianity over the world."

The Methodist population of the world is estimated at 20,000,000, and the number of communicants at 4,389,877. In the United States the membership is about 3,396,999, with 25,542 local and 22,163 itinerant preachers.

A good deal has been said and written about French journalism. Here is one of its vagaries—a paper called Echoes from Purgatory. It is edited by a priest, and informs the public what souls in Purgatory are suffering, and exactly what must be done to relieve their sufferings. This is the only representative organ of the large representative constituency beyond the dead line.

The Jewish Messenger suggests that Roumania's 250,000 Jews repair to Palestine, as the first step in the solution of the Eastern question. Morocco is persecuting its Jews so terribly that they must flee or be exterminated.

Letters from Rome report that Pope Leo XIII., who took St. Peter's chair, a tall, erect man, with dignified gestures, and clear, strong voice, has become, in a few months, a broken down old man, with trembling voice and hands, and a suspicious, fearful glance, and that he wants to go to Perugia, but is afraid of the Jesuits. It is said that his brother brings all his food surreptitiously to him, he is so fearful of being poisoned, to make way for Cardinal Billio, who is the favorite with the Society of Jesus.

Mr. W. C. Jones, of England, who, five years ago, gave the missionary societies $1,000,000, has now given $175,000 to the native church of India for evangelic work.

There are now forty thousand children attending Sunday-school in the Fiji Islands, where, only forty years ago, the inhabitants feasted on human flesh.

It has been calculated that, for every pound sterling England expends in missions, she receives in trade, and the same ratio will hold in the United States.

The Presbyterian church of Ningpo, China, has called one of the native ministers to be its pastor, and has engaged to provide for his salary without aid from the mission. In their very limited circumstances this is quite an onward movement.

Six years ago there was but one church in Japan; now they number thirty-five or thirty-six. Then every Christian effort was frowned upon by the government. To-day one hundred young men are studying for the ministry in the schools of the American Board.

Dr. Chamberlain, who is home from India, states that more than four hundred thousand persons had been gathered into the Christian churches, and the number was constantly increasing. He affirms that there is not a district where Hindooism stands firm on its ancient foundations.

High Church housemaid (to Low Church cook—"Lor' cook, how can you sit and listen to a man as wears nothin' but black alpaca! You should have seen our young priest this morning! He had on a black silk skirt with a white Cambric tunic trimmed with reel Walansheens lace as missis gave him, a narrer 'igh-art green scarf round his neck; an' when he folded his arms across his buzzum, with his 'air parted down the middle, oh, he looked pufleckly lov-e-ly!"—Punch.

The clergy of the Romish Church of France are very poorly paid, and their political influence is admittedly considerable; but in spite of their pressing necessities and the obvious political advantages of making them the friends of the Republic, the Liberal majority in the Chamber of Deputies have refused the grant in aid which the Government asked, and which the Senate approved. On Saturday the Senate intimated its acquiescence in the Disestablishment policy of the Lower House; and Parliament thereupon adjourned for the Christmas holidays with the two branches of the Legislature at peace with each other.

NIHILISM.

By whatever name those who are now so troubling the governments of the European continent are known—whether as Nihilists, Communists, or Socialists—at the root they are one and the same. Their principles are aptly expressed in these words of one of their number: "The Revolutionist despises all doctrines and has renounced all science of this world. . . . He knows but one science, that of destruction."

The manifestations of this principle of destructiveness of property, Church, State and all human institutions, vary with the character and dispositions of various nationalities, and with their educational facilities and the circumstances of the different modes of government or misgovernment, but the spirit in all times and under all circumstances is the same, and it originates with oppressive taxation, grievous military conscriptions, failures of crops and whatever else may tend to bring the poor to regard themselves as in hopelessly miserable contrast to the rich.

This spirit of Nihilism is neither reasoning nor logical—it hates wealth, because its possessors do not have it, and can never have it. It is the despair of him who sees that for him and for his children after him forever, there is no hope of aught but abject poverty. It does not originate to oppose religion, but is of necessity anti-religious. Its very terribleness to its possessor consists in its looking to nothing beyond this life—and in this life misery only.

The Sans-culottes who figured so conspicuously and so horribly in the French revolution as the murderers of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, and the Communists of Paris who so lately shocked humanity, by their fiendishness, are the same under changed conditions with the German Socialists and the Russian Nihilists.

Germany is repressing with the strong hand, and that may be necessary now, but the distress of the people drives them into this rebellion, and the State should set about lightening the burdens of the people. No cure can be permanent that overlooks this. In Italy and Spain, while there is some of the spirit, there is comparatively little. The attempts made to assassinate the rulers do not seem to have met the sympathy of any class of the people.

But Russia finds herself, great and powerful as she is, handicapped by the Nihilists. Much as she might be disposed to interfere with Great Britain's designs against Afghanistan, she can do nothing. It is estimated that there are 100,000 Nihilists in St. Petersburg alone, and 3,000,000 in the empire. The order is only ten years old, and almost at its very inception, by its discovery and the banishment to Siberia of hundreds of the conspirators, it was supposed to have been stifled.

During the year just closed 600 University students were banished to Siberia. In fact, the Universities seem to be the hotbeds of Nihilism, and of late even insurrections have broken out among them. But, indeed, no class of society in Russia seems to be exempt from the contagion. Even the aristocratic and the wealthy, in contradiction of the very root-principle of the order, seem to be infected. The reason of reasons for these upheavals of society is found in misgovernment; such misgovernment as produces the hopelessness of poverty to which we have above referred. A writer in the Sunday Magazine thus refers to the subject:

There is still another and potent reason why Nihilism should flourish with a yet ranker growth in the Czar's dominions, than that of Socialism in the Fatherland. It has recently been shown by Mr. Wallace, a very able writer on Russia, that the commune—economic life in common—is the basis of the rural organism throughout the Empire. Taxes are levied, not on the individual, but on the rural district, or village; the community makes contracts for work on behalf of its laborers; the village, in some sort, owns the land that the peasant and the freedman serf till. The idea of the tribe, of the holding of all property for the common good, is familiar to the "monjik." Here, then, is a most congenial soil for the seed of Socialism; and added to it are two other grounds of propagation. The Russians, both educated and ignorant, both high class and low class, have been latterly drifting fast from their ancient creed into outright materialism: opinion and faith are passing through an era of revolutionary change. Again, when the Socialist agitator points to the grinding taxation, to the widespread corruption in the government, to the despotic will of the Czar, often cruelly and relentlessly exercised, to the wholesale conscription, he makes an appeal to a population almost every individual of which is, or has at some time been, a direct sufferer from these evils.

But if misgovernment is the cause of these convulsions it follows that they cannot exist to an extent at all alarming where freedom of expression and action is allowed—where liberal institutions exist, and just and beneficent legislation places it in every man's power to be, humanly speaking, the architect of his own fortune. Turning again to France we see her, in striking contrast to her late victorious rival, revoking the banishment of the communists; we see her allowing even the most blatant of incendiarists to harangue the populace, or through the press to libel the government—and why? The people are governing the people. We do not step aside from our proper theme, however tempting the opportunity, to consider the religious outlook in its connection with this subject, but pass to other countries. Great Britain seems to be, despite the terrible distress of the poorer classes, singularly free from Communism, for its Fenianism never took that form. And the United States: The unprecedented financial stringency, creating wide spread distress and for so many years, has done nothing more than bring to the surface a few despicable political adventurers, whose utter impotence was merely a short-lived farce. Wendell Phillips, who is not usually credited with extraordinary wisdom, is nevertheless wise in saying,

The Americans will never be communists; because three-fifths of them have something; and the other two-fifths expect to have something.

A single glance at the late astonishing statement of Pope Leo that Communism, Socialism and kindred social disorders are the outgrowth of the Reformation. Compare this statement with Catholic France, the nursery of these evils, and France now emerging into Protestantism along with the extinction, in her borders, of them all. And so England and Scotland, and the United States, so free of them now and in all time past, and yet Protestant to the core. In very truth, religion or the lack of it—religion in any form, or in no form—is not the germ of these evils, though they always consist with irreligion, and are utterly inconsistent with the religion of Christ.

THE CATHOLIC PRESBYTERIAN.

We have announced the appearance of the initial number of this international ecclesiastical magazine, which is an outgrowth of the First General Presbyterian Council at Edinburgh, in July, 1877. It may interest all who have not seen it to get a bird's eye view of its contents and promise.

Prof. Blaikie, in his editorial salutatory on "Catholic Presbyterianism," shows that the assembling of three hundred and thirty-three commissioners from forty-nine Presbyterian Churches, in twenty-five different countries, holding creeds in harmony with the consensus of the Reformed Confessions, sufficed to establish the claim of Presbyterianism to the adjective catholic. Singular clouds of prejudice against Presbyterianism as a cross-grained Scotch movement, and a mere provincialism, unfortunately baptized by some martyr memories, have been scattered by this grand revelation of its life and light from all quarters of the globe. It matters much to the world how this great aggregate of moral energy is wielded. New experience of the needs of the Church of God, and the best ways of ministering to these, must result in positive benefit from a survey of the paths by which God has led the various sections, some of which have survived reigns of terror and fiery persecutions. While denominationalism will not be destroyed, a warmer charity and closer fellowship will produce a powerful, active and world-wide confederation of aim and work; will illustrate the New Testament character of the principles of government and worship and doctrine of our Church; and conscious strength will inspire to grander and more loving labors for the Captain of our Salvation. It is remarkable, too, that the Edinburgh Council drew to it, rather than repelled, other Christian bodies.

M. Eugene Reveillaud writes a luminous article on "Religious Reform in France." We see how the Romish Church, by fatal complication in the politics of the day and violent efforts to restore the old monarchy, has lost its hold on the masses. We see, too, how Protestantism has been taking hold of prominent men, and that, under God's blessing, at any moment a grand tide may flow into the Evangelical Church. The recent elections have been fatal to Rome.

Dr. Stuart Robinson gives one of his incisive articles on Presbytery and Liberty in his well known vigorous style. He emphasizes the influence on Anglo-Saxon civilization and constitutional liberty of two grand principles, viz: the doctrine of the fundamental difference between powers temporal and spiritual, though both of God, as set forth in the Second Book of Discipline, and against Erastian Moderates; and the Scriptural theory peculiar to Presbyterianism, that the constituntional elements of the Church are families and not individual believers.

Dr. Livingstone's posthumous article on "Missionary Sacrifices" is the earnest breathing of a godly man.

Dr. Pressense's brief paper on "Voltaire's Centenary," Dr. Philip Schaff's article on the Anglo-American Bible Revision, and Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson's "Thoughts After a Mission Tour Round the World" will prove very instructive. The closing article is on the "Entire of the Presbyterian Church in the United States," by Prof. E. D. Morris, of Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati. He takes a hopeful view of the future, is rather latitudinarian in his views, and smitten with the disease of the age—union, union—and somewhat forgetful of the fact that there is a Southern Presbyterian Church.

Then follows a brief general survey of Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Hungary and the United States; Prof. Christlieb's Letter of 1877, and Notes and Queries, Historical and Critical.

We are greatly pleased with this beginning of a difficult enterprise, which promises, if well supported, to be a source of great pleasure and profit to all readers, and a means of drawing all Presbyterian bodies in the world nearer to each other and augmenting the efficiency and glory of their prayerful labors.

In the list of sixty-six names of distinguished persons in this country who have promised contributions to the Catholic Presbyterian about one-third are connected with the Southern Presbyterian Church. Among them are Rev. Jos. M. Atkinson of Raleigh, Dr. A. D. Hepburn, president of Davidson College, and Dr. J. R. Wilson of Wilmington, all of the Synod of North Carolina; also Rev. Drs. B. M. Smith, H. C. Alexander, M. D. Hoge, J. Leighton Wilson and Wm. S. Plumer. We hope to hear from some of these brethren in the next number.

Subscription to the Catholic Presbyterian is only $3 a year or 25c. a number, and it may be obtained through J. L. Shotwell, Agent Presbyterian Publishing Committee, 1001 Main street, Richmond, Va.

We trust that a liberal support will be accorded to this valuable enterprise.

DEATH OF REV. DR. WM. MACK.

We have to announce the death of Rev. Dr. Wm. Mack, a few days since at Columbia, S. C., where he was on a visit to his son Rev. J. B. Mack, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian church in that city. We regret that we have no details.

Rev. Allen T. Graves, a member of the Presbytery of Elizabeth, residing in Plainfield, N. J., died December 5.

OUR LEGISLATURE.

Several very important bills are before our State Legislature. With such as do not refer to the educational or moral interests of our people we suppose we have little to do; before proceeding however, let us put right, what has been in very many exchanges been made wrong relative to the resolution of Col. J. L. Brown of Mecklenburg, on the State debt. We give it correctly:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring; That a committee of eight upon the part of the House and five on the part of the Senate, be appointed to which shall be referred all resolutions and bills in regard to the public debt."

This State debt question has a very serious moral aspect, but is so intersociated with and dependant upon political action that we can do no more than urge that while our law-makers authorize the payment of not one cent more than is justly due, they will most jealously guard the honor of our State, and render as fully what is due from her to her creditors, as if the question was one between individual Christian gentlemen.

Col. Brown introduced a petition from the Trustees of Davidson, through a committee, for establishment of a Normal school at that place and making an appropriation of $1000 therefor. We have had occasion heretofore to say that the Normal schools ought to be distributed through our State and not to be confined to the University. They have certainly done good in stimulating the cause of education, and in imparting new and valuable ideas on the subject to our educators.

In passing we note that Gov. Robinson of New York in his recent message recommends the discontinuance of Normal schools as having failed to accomplish the purpose of their establishment. This ought to put us on our guard to see that these institutions which can be made so very serviceable do not fall into mismanagement. But we decidedly favor the establishment of the Normal School at Davidson College for reasons heretofore given.

Another subject which also has been fully considered in this paper, was presented to the House. The Raleigh papers tell us that petitions were presented by Col. Brown, from a committee of the Methodist Church, from the Synod of the North Carolina Presbyterian Church, from the ladies of Charlotte, from certain citizens of Steele Creek and Berry Hill townships in Mecklenburg county, from Back Creek church, from certain citizens of Henderson county, and from certain citizens of Charlotte, praying the passage of a law to prevent the running, loading or unloading of trains on Sunday. Referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements. Mr. Oliver presented a petition on the same subject, as also Col. Alexander one from Concord Presbytery. A bill on the subject was referred to Committee on Internal Improvements.

The subject of Sabbath desecration is engaging the attention of Christians all over the country, and it is high time. One or more of our Southern Synods have taken up the matter. The Central Presbyterian shows that the laws of Virginia prohibit the freight business on railroads, and to that extent need only enforcement. Farther North the effort is made against the attempt to break up the Sabbath by Zoological Gardens, Academies of Fine Arts, the Permanent Exhibition, and lastly, by theatrical exhibitions on Sunday. A bill on this subject, carefully prepared, will be presented to the Legislature of Pennsylvania at its present session. In New York city they are moving forward in the same direction.

But to return to our Legislature, from which we were getting pretty well off. A bill from Mr. Meares, to prevent enticing of seamen from vessels and harboring them, with a penalty attached of $50 or imprisonment one month for each offence, passed its third reading in the House and will doubtless soon be law. The penalty ought to be at least one year in the penitentiary, but if the law is carried into rigid practice great good will be done.

PRESBYTERIAL AUTHORITY.

The Southern Presbyterian deplores the decay of Presbyterial authority, as manifested by the independence of action in our churches in regard to the calling of pastors and the acceptance of the call; in such cases the Presbytery being called in merely pro forma, to ratify what has been actually accomplished. The subject of the grouping of churches and the indifference to the directions of Presbytery, or direct opposition to its injunctions is also cited. The whole discussion is very able. The Louisville Presbyterian discusses "Presbyterial Supervision of the Olden Time," and quotes from Webster's History of the Presbyterian Church a picture of every-day life in the churches of Colonial times thus:

The congregations were divided into portions called "quarters," each of which was committed to the charge of an elder, and the people in each quarter were gathered at suitable and oft recurring seasons, at some convenient point—it might be a kitchen or a barn, to accommodate large numbers—and old and young were solemnly, carefully, and at length, catechised. The seed sown in the sanctuary was harrowed in by the catechising. The minister knew the state of the flock, and how they profited by the word preached.

The Presbyteries (see minutes of Donnegal Presbytery) visited the congregations, taking first the minister by himself, and asking him how he performed the duties of preaching, visiting and catechising, how the elders discharged their office, and how the people hearkened to the word, and submitted to godly discipline.

He being put forth, the elders were called in and questioned concerning the minister's doctrine, life, diligence and faithfulness; as to the extent to which they labored in their quarters, and how the people deported themselves toward those who were over them in the Lord. Lastly, the people were called in to answer, by their representatives—who were strictly what their name imputed—representatives. These were chosen to act and speak for the people, to sign their call and be the responsible representative agents in all secular matters. They were asked how the people were satisfied with their minister, and with the elders, and how they performed their stipulations for his support. Each of the three parties was asked if any cause of complaint existed, or of dissatisfaction, and the Presbytery proceeded, "authoritatively," to investigate the alleged matter, and to remove it or rebuke the offenders."

The latter exchange contrasts the practice of the present with those times and wishes that these old-fashioned usages were restored among us, especially among our feeble and vacant churches. But those usages will never return we fear. The day when we can make visitations by elders effectual, to any great extent certainly, is forever past.

This subject of Presbyterial authority is one which ought to be very thoroughly discussed in our Presbyteries. Invasions of their authority are constantly occurring, and there seems to be an utter apathy on the subject.

But those under the immediate reach of the Court may well have a care in too freely setting up Presbytery as bishop. We have known the discussion of the subject to prove a very boomerang when put into practice. In the case we refer to, the principle met with a sudden and most unexpected application. Yet we make bold to say "Presbytery is Bishop."

DEATH OF REV. A. M. CAMPBELL.

Rev. A. M. Campbell died of swamp fever on the 27th ulto. He had been preaching for several months at Newelton, La., and had received a call to that church which he proposed to accept. The Southwestern Presbyterian says of him:

Mr. Campbell was a member of the Presbytery of New Orleans, although he contemplated connecting himself with the Presbytery of Red River. He was raised a Presbyterian, but joined the Southern Methodist Church and became a minister in that denomination, where he was much respected. He was received by us not quite two years ago, and had his life been spared, it would have been, no doubt, a very useful one. He had but fairly commenced his work with us when he was taken away.

We learn that his family is in straitened circumstances. They are living among strangers, comparatively. It would be a good deed to help them. Anything for that purpose may be sent to us at this office.

FINALLY, BRETHREN.

We do not propose, after we have laid down our pen this time, to refer again to the affairs of Dr. E. T. Baird, unless it be, as we sincerely trust it may, to announce his entire restoration to the office of the Gospel ministry. Reference now seems but just to Dr. Baird. He publishes a letter in the Christian Observer in which he states that much said by his brother, Dr. S. J. Baird, was under misapprehension. Thus he, Dr. Thompson Baird, did not mean to convey the idea that any members of East Hanover Presbytery had committed themselves to him. He regrets, too, that what was said with regard to testimonials was allowed to appear in print. Other points are made, but we did not refer to their subjects beyond stating that Dr. Samuel Baird assigned as his reason for withdrawing the complaint, that it stood in the way of Dr. Thompson Baird's restoration. The latter now says:

"If I used that language, or what justly bears that interpretation, as I must have done, my meaning was that it was the only obstacle I had to contend against, so far as my action in the matter was concerned; and, indeed, I considered it, and had found it, an insuperable obstacle. For, some who had interpreted things in a manner favorable to me, from the beginning, and some who had concurred in the previous action of Presbytery, but thought that the ends of discipline had been reached, concurred in the opinion that the complaint was a bar to any action on the part of Presbytery, pending it."

With regard to Dr. S. J. Baird's motive Dr. E. T. Baird says:

"I feel deeply sensible of the affectionate interest my brother has taken in me and my vindication, and much and painfully regret that he and I have not always seen eye to eye as to the methods best to be pursued. I am sure he has been actuated by the highest and most conscientious motives, and has yielded his own judgment to my entreaties, on this and other occasions, at a great sacrifice of personal feeling."

CHANGE OF BASE.

With the New Year, Rev. P. P. Winn took charge of Concord church, in Iredell county, as pastor elect. At the same time he entered upon his duties as stated supply to Shiloh church, in the same county. Until further advised his post-office address will be Taylorsville, Alexander county, N. C. We congratulate the churches named on securing Bro. Winn's services.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Hon. Neal Dow for whom, indeed, we entertain high respect, seems to have indulged recently in some careless expressions, charging intemperance upon some one in such terms as are everywhere regarded as applying to Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Mr. Spurgeon clears himself effectually, and now Mr. Dow says he did not name Mr. Spurgeon. But so much the worse for the charges; as they have been applied to one innocent man, they may be applied to one and another—to dozens of persons who are entirely innocent. It is due to all who may be criminated that the person meant should be distinctly named.

"Holland is a happy country. Our Minister to Holland reports that there has not been a bank failure for forty years, and that the paper money of the banks equals the gold. There is no failure of a fire insurance company on record, and the companies realize six per cent. yearly, although the rate of insurance is only a half per cent. First class railroad travel is only one cent per mile, yet the roads pay good dividends. Pilfering officers are scarcely ever heard of, and are severely punished and forever disgraced when exposed. No free passes are granted to anybody. Dishonesty or failure in business means public dishonor. Four millions of people live within an area of 20,000 square miles, and appear to be prosperous and contented. All live within their income, and are industrious and honest."

The above extract is from Barnes' Educational Monthly for this month. Would it not be a capital plan for the United States to be annexed to Holland for a term of years, that we might fall into her primitive ways.

"Can't you preach a sermon to your readers on honesty? 'Tis disgraceful for Presbyterians to pay eight hundred dollar salaries with five hundred dollars. Would it not be better to promise less and pay it? So asks an esteemed friend of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.

Well, if we should preach a sermon it would be our first, and just think of it; our first sermon, to the readers of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN on honesty. Our friend in fact says about all we could say; but some persons call that financiering—making five hundred dollars pay an eight hundred dollar debt. We should use a different term to characterize it, and decidedly think it better to promise less and pay all that is promised.

We call special attention to the fact that Rev. W. R. Atkinson has changed his terms—see advertisement—so as to put all the advantages of the school, save private lessons on Music and Painting at $25 a term for board and tuition. No extra charge for Ancient and Modern Languages, Calisthenics, Kindergarten and Free Hand Drawing.

It is said that the coffin of a public man who died lately cost $1,500. Isn't it time to call a halt in such extravagance? We believe in general in the free expenditure of money by those who have it in large quantity. It is better to keep money in circulation by disbursing for anything, not in itself sinful, than to hoard it—but for example sake we would certainly make an exception in cases of funeral decoactions. The poor seem to feel that it is a religious duty to vie with those of larger means in their outlays for the dead. We have heard of a case where a family spent their last cent, literally, for funeral expenses to a relative, and hadn't means to buy a crust of bread on their return from the grave. Such as this ought to be held up everywhere as deserving of the strongest reprobation. The only way to cure the evil is to create a healthy public opinion on the subject.

It seems that all trustees of estates which own shares of the Glasgow Bank are held by the Scotch Court of Session to be liable equally with ordinary shareholders. This, even, when the trusteeship is undertaken from purely benevolent motives, and no prospect or desire of gain. The case is certainly a hard one. The London Weekly Review says: "To the general public, however, it will certainly appear that very grievous hardship is thereby inflicted upon a meritorious and humane class of persons. The case which was decided in Edinburgh the other day was a test case, and will rule a large number of others; for, if we mistake not, about a fourth of the total of shareholders on the register of the broken bank are executors and trustees of some sort or another."

It really looks now as if the wisdom of the old adage "call no man happy until death" may yet be verified in the experience of Prince Bismarck. He would seem, in the extreme measures he is taking to prevent free speech even in the Reichstag (German Parliament), to be playing a game which will destroy every vestige of freedom in Germany—or destroy Bismarck.

The State Board of Health met in Raleigh on Monday last. The work these physicians propose to do for the State will be of incalculable benefit, and we trust the Legislature will take the matter in hand and make a liberal appropriation for it, as well as so empower the Board that they may carry out all sanitary measures needed.

FIRST CHURCH, RALEIGH, N. C.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 20th, 1879.

MR EDITOR: Yesterday was the second occasion of the celebration of our Lord's Supper in the First Church of this city since our pastor, Rev. John S. Watkins, has been with us. The hearts of God's people were made glad by the addition of twelve persons to our number—all adults. Four of these were admitted on profession of their faith in Christ and eight by certificate. The communion services were conducted by Rev. John S. Watkins, assisted by Rev. Dr. Shaw. It was indeed a solemn and joyous season. Christian hearts were lifted up to God in grateful thanks for the blessings of His gracious Spirit which had quietly but steadily done a glorious work among us. There were doubtless silent prayers offered by all that this might be but the earnest of something more glorious, the prelude of a greater blessing. May God increase our faith and prepare us for a great revival of true religion.

This little flock has in the person of Rev. John S. Watkins a faithful shepherd, who is with zeal and earnestness engaging in the Master's work. He has won completely the hearts of his people, and will doubtless in the providence of God accomplish a great work in our midst.

There was a Union Bible meeting held at this church at night. An address was made by Rev. Dr. McLean, Secretary of American Bible Society. Gov. Vance being present, by request also addressed the meeting. Both addresses were able defences of the divine origin of the Bible, and the fact was clearly demonstrated that wherever the light of God's Holy Word shines it carries with it civilization and prosperity as well as spiritual benefits. At the close of the meeting a collection was taken up for the Bible cause.

For the N. C. Presbyterian

Sustentation Committee of Fayetteville Presbytery.

This committee will meet on Thursday, the 13th of February, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M., in the lecture room of Fayetteville Presbyterian church. It consists of Rev. D. Fairley, Rev. M. McQueen, and Elders B. Fuller, Jos. A. McArthur, Dr. Hugh A. McSwain, with the chairman. Churches requiring aid in supporting their ministers during the current year will please forward their applications to the chairman before the time above mentioned. Those applications should state what part of a minister's time is wanted, what sum is raised by the church, and whether it is in proportion to its ability, and what amount of aid is desired.

H. G. HILL,
Chairman.

Good Advice.

The Rev. Leigh Richmond, author of "The Dairyman's Daughter," gave the following advice to his daughter, as to how she ought to behave in company: Be cheerful, but not a giggler. Be serious, but not dull. Be communicative, but not forward. Be kind, but not servile. Beware of silly, thoughtless speeches; although you forget them, others will not. Remember God's eye is in every face, and his ear in every company.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Educational Journal of Virginia. Editors, Wm. F. Fox and W. H. Ruffner, Sup't Public Instruction. $1 50 per annum. January, 1879. Clemmitt & Jones, Richmond, Va. An excellent Southern journal. As we have no educational monthly in North Carolina would it not be well for our teachers to write for and support this one?

From S. W. Partridge & Co., 9 Paternoster Row, London, the following for January, 1879, fully illustrated and attractive: 1. Infant's Magazine, 25 cents a year, 16 pages. 2. The Family Friend, 25 cents a year, 16 pages. 3. Band of Hope Review, temperance, 15 cents a year.

Mothers' Catechism. By Mrs. Anna L. Price, Richmond: Presbyterian Committee of Publication. 2 cents or $1 50 per hundred. Mothers will find this catechism simple and serviceable. But the Lord's Prayer is given incorrectly, and this fault and several inaccuracies of expression should be rectified.

The International Review has come to hand. Contents are: Frustrated, a poem, by Edgar L. Fawcett; Suffrage a Birthright; The Political Future of France; The American Export Trade; Morality in France; Recollections of Mazzini; In Conflict with Science; The Literary Movements in America; and Recent English Books Published by A. S Barnes & Co, New York. Issued monthly. Price 50 cents.

Sunday Magazine. This excellent magazine, edited by Rev C. F. Deems, D. D., and published by Frank Leslie, certainly excels in the variety and worth of its articles, and also in the beauty of its illustrations. The February number contains many interesting articles, among which are: A Day with the Lebanon Shakers; The Light of His Eyes; The "Rock of Ages" and its Author; David Fleming's Forgiveness; One Life; Making God a Beggar, and also many others which it will be impossible for us to mention for lack of space. The number before us, indeed, seems to be an advance on others. $3 per annum. Frank Leslie's Publishing Co., N. Y.

Vick's Floral Guide. The first number of this magazine for 1879 is on our table. This magazine contains many very fine illustrations of flowers; also a very pretty chromo, "A Bunch of Peonies." $1 25 per annum. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine. This magazine is not only good but beautiful, and also very interesting. Each number contains one or more beautifully colored plates representing some flower or family of flowers. In the January number are two colored plates, one a group of roses and the other illustrations of church and holiday decorations. Mr. Vick evidently understands the cultivation of flowers, and certainly makes his Monthly Magazine one of the handsomest in existence. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y. $1 25 a year.

Vol. xxxvi Bibliotheca Sacra, Jan., 1879. Article 1, Organic Forms; 2, Note on Galatians iii: 16; 3, Unchangeableness of God; 4, Notes on Acts xiv: 16, 17, xvii: 30, and Romans iii: 25, 26; 5, American Pre-Revolutionary Bibliography; 6, A Defence of the Catholic Faith concerning the Satisfaction of Christ against Faustus Socinus of Sienna, written by Hugo Giotius (translated by Rev. F. H. Foster); 7, Mohammedanism as a Missionary Religion; 8, Theological Education; 9, Notices of New German Theological Publications, and University Intelligence; 10, Notices of Recent Publications.

Chamberlayne & Beirne, Richmond, Va., publishers of The State Almanac, send us a copy. It is really gotten up in superior style, has nearly twenty wood cuts, of superior finish, representing natural scenery principally, and its pages are interspersed with agreeable reading matter. The publishers are editors of the State, one of Richmond's most popular daily papers.

Our American Magazines. The marvelous beauty of the illustrated magazines of this country is attracting attention throughout the world. The edition of Scribner in England has doubled within a few months. The London correspondent of the New York Times says: "The whole lot of magazine annuals (Englis) put together, are not equal in pictorial art to a single number of Scribner's Monthly." But the price at which our magazines are sold is even a greater marvel. For example, a single number of Scribner, "The Midwinter Number," just issued, has a full-page frontispiece Portrait of Emerson, of rare excellence, and contains one hundred and sixty pages of letter-press, with more than seventy illustrations, many of which are works of art such as before the advent of Scribner appeared only in gift-works and purely art magazines, and yet it is sold for 35 cents. It would be difficult to find an illustrated book to match it at $5. The subscribers for the current year, get, in Scribner, not only four of these full-paged portraits of American poets, and nearly two thousand pages of text (equal to 5,000 book pages) of the choicest current literature, with more than 1,000 illustrations, including a completed novel, "Haworth's," by Mrs. Burnett but shorter stories, poems, reviews descriptions of travel, biographical sketches, etc., and also the splendid series of papers and pictures of exploration in the great South American empire of Brazil, delivered free of postage, and all for four dollars.

In Children's Periodicals, too, America leads the world with St. Nicholas. Prof. Proctor, the astronomer, writes from London: "What a wonderful magazines it is for the young folks! Our children are quite as much delighted with it as American children can be. I will not say they are more delighted as that may not be possible." St. Nicholas is sold for 25 cents a number, and fourteen numbers (November, 1878 to 1880) are given for $3.

At first glance one would say, literature, art, and cheapness can no further go—but in this country intelligence is so widespread, and artistic culture is so extended, that there is scarcely any end to the demand for such magazines as Scribner's for grown-ups and St. Nicholas for children, and, as the sale of these publications increases their conductors will no doubt continue to add new features of excellence and attraction. Scribner & Co., 743 Broadway, New York.

Lippincott's Magazine for February: handsomely illustrated Now ready. Containing Hungarian Types and Austrian Pictures; A Gate to the Nether World; Substitution. A poem; Narcissus; Ferns. A poem; An Hungarian Artist; The Colonel's Venture; Lord Beaconsfield; Through Winding Ways; In A Cabinet; Carrie Fane; The Latter Days of the Bloomerhassetts; "Not Worth the While"; The Daughter of the Legion of Honor; Our Monthly Gossip; Literature of the Day; For sale by all Book and News Dealers. Terms Yearly Subscription $4 00. Single Number, 35 cents. Liberal Premiums to Club-getters. Specimen Number mailed, postage paid, to any address, on receipt of 20 cents. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

Ah! "Music hath charms," &c. Hymns and Songs for Social and Public Worship. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. When we open a music book, we are like a blind man in a flower garden; we know everything is very lovely, but we can't see it. This book contains nearly 300 pp., with 660 hymns and 300 tunes and chants. Special reference was had in its preparation to the needs of chapels and small churches. The publishers say:—In order to meet the demand for a cheaper book, we have now an edition, printed on cheap, but strong paper, and strongly bound in boards, at 65 cents a copy for introduction. This is the cheapest Hymn and Tune Book ever published in this country.

We have received from Messrs. Jones Brothers & Co., 1003 Arch St., Philadelphia. (Branch houses in St. Louis, Memphis and Atlanta), their "Inductive Series" of Arithmetics, viz.:—1. First Lessons in Arithmetic on the Indictive Plan, including Oral and Written Exercises. By W. J. Milne, A. M., Principal of State Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y. 1878. 144 pages. 30 cents.

2. The Practical Arithmetic on the Inductive Plan, including Oral and Written Exercises. By W. J. Milne. 1878. Pages 391. Price, 60 cents.

These books are superior in their typography, beautiful and instructive illustrations and their clear and practical method. There is no rubbish in them. Two books cover the course, and are cheap. For introduction the prices will be reduced greatly.

ECLECTICISMS.

WORTH VOLUMES OF ARGUMENT.

Christian Union:

Edwards county, Ill., which has not licensed a liquor saloon for twenty-five years, is situated in the southern part of the State, where whiskey used to be plenty and schools few and poor! Its exceptional character is due to its settlement thirty years ago by a body of the Sons of Temperance. And now the Clerk of the Circuit Court testifies that the jail during these twenty-five years has not averaged one occupant a year, and the county has sent but one person to the penitentiary, and that man got drunk at a licensed saloon in an adjoining county and killed his wife; that the county has an annual average of only three or four persons to support; that its taxes are thirty-two per cent. less than in adjoining or license-granting counties; and that quarrels are so few that the Circuit Court completes its year's work usually in a week. Chicago, on the other hand, which licenses nearly one thousand saloons, pays $670,000 this year for policing the city. Our readers are recommended to study this paragraph carefully, and give it serious consideration when the next time comes for the election of excise commissioners in their town or county.

THE BEST THINGS.

S. S. Times:

God's best things for his children are always in the future. This has been so, is so, and is to be so forever and ever. No child of his has to look back for a sight of the most delightful things of his life; they are ever before him. "The path of the just"—of those who are justified in Christ—"is as the shining light which shineth more and more"—not less and less—"unto the perfect day." This life is at the completest but as the early dawn of existence—"as the light of the morning when the sun riseth." The noontide of glory is not reached on earth—far less is it passed, to become a memory instead of a hope. This new year on which we have entered is to bring better things to every trustful child of God than ever he possessed before. No matter what are the disciple's circumstances or bereavements, trials, losses or needs, his best things are yet to come. Why will not all rest down on this conviction? Our happiness is by no means dependent on our surroundings or our possessions; to the follower of Jesus happiness is a result of faith. Hope also comes of faith—a hope which maketh not ashamed; a hope which enters within the veil of the future, and cannot be shaken or removed. All the changes of the coming year will work together for good to those who are the loving children of God—will bring blessings hitherto undreamed of. "As it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

A CHANCE FOR IMPROVEMENT.

Evangelical Messenger:

Costly churches are multiplying in the wealthy centres of population, but nobody can observe a corresponding increase of piety and Christian efficiency. The Golden Rule is right in saying: "We have spent too much money on school-houses and churches. The education and the piety of the country have not been advanced by our policy. Better put the money into a plainer and larger building and into the services of the Sabbath, so that the people may have the best, the very best. An elegant table with scant food is a mockery to hunger; and elegant churches with a thin, juiceless service are a mockery to the soul." There is a better use for money than the ministration of pride in costly churches.

PROSELYTING.

Central Presbyterian:

There is another kind, and a very bad kind, of proselyting. It is the making disciples for ourselves, or for our party or school or denomination, rather than for Christ and His truth. To proselyting of this kind Presbyterians have never been much given. The whole genius of our denomination is opposed to it. The distinctive character of Presbyterianism is the supreme importance it ascribes to the essence of the gospel, the way of salvation, the doctrine of grace. Hence a genuine Presbyterian is always more concerned about making a sinner a Christian than about making a professing Christian a Presbyterian. His eye is always on the main thing, salvation, and he will rejoice in the conversion of a soul to God, even if that soul prefers to serve the Saviour in some other fold than his own.

BAD READING AND GOOD.

Christian Intelligencer:

No fault can be found with a secular journal that reports briefly what is done in the under world and among the criminal classes. Yet it were well if these ill-odorous reports were never read in families and never made the topics for domestic or social conversation. That style of reading is best that holds up for contemplation the highest and purest examples, that constantly appeals to the highest motives, and which, in fine, familiarizes the minds of readers with the thoughts and purposes and deeds of the men and women who have been or who are benefactors. It is the office of the religious press to render this service, and any family that undertakes to get on well without it will sooner or later find out its mistake.

THE REAL QUESTION.

Southwestern Presbyterian:

The encyclical has not fairly met the true question of the times. The real question for the court of Rome to consider is: Why do those countries who know it best, and who have most fully realized all that Romanism can do for society—why do they, one after another, announce by their action that she has been weighed in the balances and found wanting?

Let us have an encyclical on that subject!

RELIGION THE CHRISTIAN'S ELEMENT.

Presbyterian Journal:

The religion of some people is constrained—like the cold bath, when it is used not for pleasure but from necessity for health, into which one goes with reluctance, and is glad when able to get out. But religion, to the true believer, is like water to a fish. It is his element. He lives in it, and could not live out of it.

DESERVING POOR.

Zion's Herald:

The deserving poor are the last to be found. Too modest and self-respectful to beg, they remain hidden away in corners and attics, in hunger and nakedness, until some village Nightingale searches them out and provides for their necessities. Back door begging is often brazen and undeserving. Idleness and vice brought

TO THE CHURCHES OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Churches needing aid, in supporting their ministers, will forward their applications to the undersigned before the 15th of February next.

In your applications state (1) what part of your minister's time you desire, (2) what amount is raised by the church, and whether it is all that could reasonably be expected (3) what amount of aid is needed, and (4) how long has your church been receiving aid.

Applications not in the hands of the Agent by the time mentioned above are not likely to be successful.

EFFECTS OF PERFUME ON HEALTH.

An Italian professor has recently made some very agreeable medicinal researches resulting in the discovery that vegetable perfumes exercise a positively healthy influence on the atmosphere, converting its oxygen into ozone, and thus increasing its oxidising influence. The essences found to develop the largest quantity of ozone are those of cherry, laurel, clover, lavender, mint, juniper, lemon, fennel, and burgamot; those that give it in smaller quantity are anise, nutmeg, and thyme. The flowers of the narcissus, hyacinth, mignonette, heliotrope and lilly of the valley, develop ozone in closed vessels. Flowers destitute of perfume do not develop it, and those which have but slight perfume develop it in small quantities. Reasoning from these facts, the professor recommends the cultivation of flowers in marshy districts and in all places infested with animal emanations, on account of she powerful oxidising influence of ozone.

STOCKHOLDERS, PLEASE NOTICE.

In purchasing the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN from the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN COMPANY I agreed to furnish the paper during the years 1877 and 1878, to such of the stockholders in that Company as were receiving the paper on stock, and who should remit the postage for those years.

Due notice of this arrangement was given at the time. On the 1st of January, 1879, the contract was fulfilled.

I trust that all who have been thus receiving the paper will enter as regular subscribers and remit promptly the amount of subscription.

SECULAR NEWS.

Bills have been introduced into the State Legislature to provide some remedy for sureties; to prevent State officers and member of the Legislature from receiving free passes on railroads; to incorporate Burgaw Male and Female Academy; to change the name of the Western Railroad Company and authorize its consolidation with certain other roads; to incorporate the Bennettsville and Hamlet Railroad; to establish Normal Schools at Wake Forest, Trinity and Davidson Colleges.

The following bills passed the Senate; to punish abduction of children under eighteen years of age (an amendment to prevents its application to females abducted for marriage was lost. The penalty is fifteen years imprisonment); to revise and digest the public laws of North Carolina; to allow defendants in certain criminal actions to be witnesses for themselves. The bill to elect Judges of Supreme and Superior courts by the Legislature and for life was laid on the table.

In the raid made by revenue officers in Stanly county, last week, we learn that thirteen stills were seized and destroyed, and eight distillers arrested—four of whom were brought to Albemarle.—Wadesboro Herald.

London, Jan. 17.—An immense crowd has assembled in Lombard street. Great excitement prevails over a reported run on the Bank of London and the County Banking Company. The crowd was originally attracted by a dispute on the street. The large attendance gave rise to a rumor of a run on the bank, which afterwards became a fact.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Boys Make Men.

When you see a ragged urchin
Standing wistful in the street,
With torn hat and kneeless trousers,
Dirty face and bare red feet,
Pass not by the child unheeding;
Smile upon him. Mark me, when
He's grown old he'll not forget it,
For, remember, boys make men.

Have you never seen a grandsire,
With his eyes aglow with joy.
Bring to mind some act of kindness—
Something said to him, a boy?
Or, relate some slight or coldness,
With a brow all clouded, when
He recalled some heart too thoughtless
To remember boys make men?

Let us try to add some pleasure
To the life of every boy;
For each child needs tender interest
In its sorrow and its joy.
Call your boys home by its brightness;
They avoid the household when
It is cheerless with unkindness;
For remember, boys make men.

Aquariums.

WHAT! No one in the class ever kept an aquarium! The Professor must really take off his glasses and wipe them and look again. There must be some little boy in the back row whose hand he didn't see. Not one! Well, here's a good chance for the Professor to show some of his knowledge in that direction, and tell of an aquarium he once had. To be sure, this isn't just the best season to stock one, but then, after you turn the corner at New Year's, the spring is not far off, and you can be planning for it and getting help about it beforehand. Now, which shall it be, a salt or fresh water aquarium? "Both?" No! No! One at a time, and as the Professor, when he was a lad, at home, really did have a salt water tank, he will tell you all about it.

Well, then, what will you use for your tank? "A tin pail"

Yes; but then you couldn't watch what you put in it very well. Better have something glass—a large bowl, or globe. The Professor's father, who used to love to indulge him in every thing instructing, had a regular tank made. A marble slab, say, 20x14 inches, for the bottom, with wooden pillars at each corner holding glass which formed the four sides. But it is just as well to have a large globe, such as you use for gold fish, then there will be no danger of leaking; and your cement must be of a very peculiar kind to keep the other water-tight.

Now, what to put in it is the next question. Shall we fill it with salt water, and put in a few fishes and expect them to take care of themselves? How would they live; what would they have to eat?

"We'd feed 'em."

Yes, I haven't a doubt of it; but you might kill them that way. Food put into the water makes it foul. How do the fishes live in the ocean?

"The oxygen in the water." Yes, that is it. Now, when all the oxygen in our small globe full of water is gone, then what would become of the fishes? They must die, of course. I want to tell you how to keep the water fresh and pure, and filled with oxygen for a long time. We are going to put plants in the water. Not plants such as mama has in her windows, but plants that grow in the water. You didn't think, did you, that the surface of the sea-bed has its valleys and mountains, forests and luxuriant prairies? Just as beautiful the foliage is beneath the water as above; and some of those we must start with.

You know water is composed of oxygen and carbonic acid gas and the plants consume the latter and are constantly throwing off fresh oxygen; so that the water is renewed daily by the untiring exertion of a few of these little plants that we call algae, or, more commonly, sea-weeds. Your globe must be kept, however, in a light room, as the sun has much to do with the power of the plant in throwing off oxygen.

There are an infinite variety of algae, green and brown and red, but, perhaps, the best for an aquarium is the common green laver sometimes called the sea lettuce. Often, when the sun is shining very bright, this plant will pour forth so much oxygen that its entire surface will be covered with tiny, sparkling beads that buoy up the whole plant, and it hangs in festoons from the surface of the water, forming emerald caves and grottoes. Other kinds of sea-weed are pretty and more delicate. You want a variety, but be sure and have some of this sea lettuce.

Sea-weeds have no real root, and will live just as well floating through the water; but it is better that they should be confined to some stone or shell, so that you can arrange them to look well.

"But you haven't any stones or shells in there."

To be sure we haven't! Then we must have those next—stones, at least. Select a few pretty ones and build a little arch or bridge in the center of the globe, if you have room, and cover it with sea-weed, and the fish can play hide and seek all they want to around the corners.

"But you haven't any fishes."

Well, well, you children go too fast for an old man like the Professor. Patience, now, and let us see what comes next.

Let us have some shells. A great many of our most interesting animals live in these little shells. You generally pick them up on the beach, or see them in your cabinets when the animals have been taken out. There is the limpet, perhaps the most common of all. He has a cone-like shell, and adheres to rocks or other hard substances, for support. He moves slowly, and now comes the advantage of a glass tank, for soon after he is dropped in he will begin to crawl up the side, and then we have a full view of his body and can watch his locomotion.

Another shell, called the livid top, is more conical still and variegated by brilliant rings of color. The animals living in them have wonderful tongues, like a miniature file, used, not so much for tasting food, as a means for cutting it off. He is useful in an aquarium, for when the algae begin to do their work and pour out spores, the glass often becomes dim by the mass of minute vegetation. Then the tops come to our aid, and, with their little natural scythes, mow away, as they crawl up the sides of the glass, as composedly and regularly as if they were paid for it.

There is another pretty shell, very long, narrow and sharp-pointed, called the wentletrap. Inside it is formed of succeeding whorls, more delicate than carving.

Now come the anemones; more interesting to the Professor than anything else you can put into a salt water aquarium.

We must go at low tide for them. Let's get into a boat and go down under the bridge, and we shall find quantities of them clinging to the piers, just below low-water mark. If they will not yield to our fingers we can dislodge them with a hoe.

"Oh, how ugly they are!"

No, indeed! Our anemone does look rather uninteresting, to be sure, just now; but you must wait. He looks like a soft brown or dark red lump; but we will put him in the globe and watch him.

Slowly, very slowly, he begins to expand. The ball gradually rises till it is upright; then, from out the top, come long, graceful feelers, growing so close that they look like fringes, forming a sort of wreath around the top. They were packed away so snug you never for a moment suspected they were there, did you? And when they are fully spread they move gently up and down with a slow waving motion. Why, they are as light-colored and soft and delicate as the down on a feather; but pretty as they are, each one, at the end, has a minute "lasso cell" you cannot see with the naked eye, which has a long, hollow thread coiled up in it, and when there is any little shrimp swimming about in the water which the anemone fancies for a meal he has the power of flinging this thread suddenly out and entangling his victim, and drawing him into the mouth, which lies directly in the center of these beautiful fringes and communicates with the stomach.

You mustn't fail to have these beautiful anemones, and watch them carefully.

The Professor had some crabs one season in his tank—not the fellows that are for sale in the market, but the soft-tailed crabs that have to find a shell to hide their diminished tails in. They are generally called hermit crabs, because they live a solitary life, like Diogenes in his tub.

They will take almost any uninhabited shell they can find, and if you can, by any chance, find one out of his shell, you will have a perfectly woe-begone picture, as he trails his defenseless tail behind him, as if he were ashamed of it. Drop an empty shell near him, and he will back into it quickly enough, and fasten the pincers, with which the end of his tail is furnished, firmly to the shell, and you will not catch him again away from home. He carries his house on his back hereafter.

Put only one hermit crab in the globe at a time, as they will fight till one dies, and the conqueror (little cannibal!) will eat up the conquered.

Then you want a few fish—not too many. Get the little one-spotted goby, so called from a bright spot on the back fin. These are small fish, only about two inches long, and for larger fish, get some sticklebacks. They have stout spines on the back, and there are many varieties.

Last, but not least, add a tadpole or two, and if you don't have lively work in your aquarium, don't blame the Professor, that's all.—Christian Union.

Perfect Trust.

A gentleman was walking one evening, with his little girl, upon a high bank, beneath which ran a canal. The child was pleased with the look of the glistening water, and coaxed her father to take her down to it.

"The water looks so pretty. Please papa, do take me down there," she said.

The bank was very steep and the road a mere sheep path. In getting down, the gentleman had to take hold of his little girl's arm and swing her from point to point. While doing this, she would sometimes be hanging in the air directly over the water. Yet she only laughed and chuckled, but was not the least bit afraid, although sh really seemed to be in danger.

At last they got down the bank and reache the tow-path in safety. Then, taking up his daughter in his arms, he said, "Now tell me, Sophy, why you were not afraid when you were swinging in the air, right over the water."

Nestling her plump little cheek against her father's face, she said:

"Papa had hold of Sophy's hand; Sophy couldn't fall!"

This was very sweet. Here was a perfect trust. And this is just the feeling that David had towards God when he said, "What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee." Sophy would have screamed in terror to find herself hanging over the water in the canal, unless she had had confidence in the person who had hold of her arms. But it was her father—her kind, loving father—who held her, and so, "what time she would have been afraid, she trusted in him." And this is the feeling we ought to have towards God. The thought of His power should lead us to trust in Him.—Richard Newton.

The Three Answers.

Beautiful indeed, was the lesson which a little Sabbath-school class had been reciting—all about the Saviour's kingdom. They learned that it was a kingdom of great joy and deep love; peace dwelt there, and kindness and good-will sprung all along the way-side. It was a kingdom upon which the sun of righteousness shone, and in its clear sky hung the star of Bethlehem. The eyes of the children grew bright with interest while the teacher talked; and they longed to know more about a state so glorious. Then the teacher turned to the book and this question came next—"What will you give to advance this kingdom on earth?" "Yes," added the lady, looking seriously upon the little boys, "what will you give to help on the Saviour's kingdom? What will you do, James?"

"I will give my half-pence to the missionaries, and they shall preach about it to the heathen," answered James, with great earnestness.

"And what will you do, George?"

George looked up and said, "I will pray for it."

"And what will you do, John?" said the teacher, addressing the youngest in her class.

He cast down his eyes, and softly said, "I will give my heart to it." The teacher blessed the little boy, and breathed a silent prayer that Jesus might take the offering.

These three answers comprehend all that we can do for Jesus.

It is good to give our money and our prayers; but the first thing we must do, the best thing we can offer, is to give up our hearts to the Saviour's kingdom, and let Jesus rule over us.—Christian at Work.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A New Flower.

The Italian Fanfulla records the discovery of a new gigantic flower, which is of such an amazing splendor, as well as size, that the Victoria Regia and the Rafflesia Arnoldi appear mere dwarfs by its side. The fortunate finder of this remarkable plant is the renowned traveler and naturalist, Odoardo Beccari, who has chiefly earned his fame by his exhaustive researches in the East Indian Archipelago. This hitherto unknown flower unfolds its mighty chalice bud in forests of Sumatra. The discover attributes it to the family of Amorphophallus, and has given it the specific name of Titanum. The diameter of the flower, when full blown, averages thirty-three inches.—London Globe.

A Constitutional Walk.

Few people walk enough in winter, yet it is precisely at that season that people of close sedentary habits should walk. How grateful the crisp air is to the lungs! How clear and sweet it is to the nostrils! How it inspires and sustains one in a swinging gate of four or five miles an hour! How the cheeks glow, and the eyes shine, and the muscles tingle with delightful vigour, after such a walk through the winter sunshine! A chaise-ride is not half so good, for it robs the trip of the necessary exercise. Try it, you who seek health and strength. Winter walking, as a "nervine," is a million times better than medicine, and for improving the complexion it is worth a whole harbour full of lotions and washes. It will put an edge on appetite that you can't buy at the doctor's, and in promoting digestion it is better than a corner drug-shop's entire stock of bitters and pills. If you have never tried it, take a walk. Keep your mouth closed, your shoulders well thrown back, your head up, and remember that your legs—and especially your hips—were given you to walk with. Some people walk with their knees, bodies, and shoulders—and no wonder they don't like it. We don't like to see them. There is an art in walking as in other things. If you don't believe it, observe the motion of some shapely woman who knows how to move, or study the gate of a man who has some spring and litheness in him. It is never too late to learn how to walk by walking.

How to Utilize Old Fruit Cans.

Perhaps one of the most appropriate uses of an old fruit can that can be devised is to make it contribute to the growth of new fruit to fill new cans. This is done in the following manner: The can is pierced with one or more pin holes, and then sunk in the earth near the roots of the strawberry or tomato or other plants. The pin holes are to be of such size that when the can is filled with water the fluid can only escape into the ground very slowly. Thus a quart can, properly arranged, will extend its irrigation to the plant through a period of several days; the can is then refilled. Practical trials of this method of irrigation leave no doubt of its success. Plants thus watered flourish and yield the most bounteous returns throughout the longest droughts. In all warm localities, where water is scarce, the planting of old fruit cans, as here indicated, will be found profitable as a regular garden operation.—Scientific American.

Female Wages.

Women complain, and very justly, of the discrimination made against them in the matter of wages. They receive generally, as is well known, much less than men, even when doing the same work that men do, the fact of their sex being thus, most ungallantly and unrighteously, counted against them. Perhaps, the highest price paid in the country proper to any number of women is in Boston, where, as school-teachers, they get $15 39 a week the year round, including 10 weeks of vacation. Statistics of the relative wages of the sexes have been made up in a number of States for 1875. In Massachusetts, the average earning per month for men men was $88.37; for women, $35.85. In Maine, men, $87; women, $18. In Pennsylvania, men, $41.07; women, $34.09. In Ohio, men, $60; women, $44. In Michigan, men, $51.29; women, $28.19. In some States, however, in Iowa, for example, the custom of allowing the same salary to men and women for the same kind of work is growing general. In St. Louis no distinction of sex is made in respect to teacher's pay. When women do men's work, they receive equal wages. The California Legislature determined, years since, that female teachers in the public schools should have the same pay as male teachers for like service. Some of the Southern States, and Arizona, Idaho, and Nevada, pay men and women equally, so that justice is to be done ere long to all women obliged to earn their own livelihood. Teachers of both sexes in the schools, all primary of Arizona earn from $100 to 125 a month, but one should be paid handsomely for merely living in Arizona.

The Dangers of Hurry.

A recent painful case illustrates the danger of hurrying to catch a train. The peril, says the London Lancet, is very considerable, and it besets most men in these busy times. It is not a matter of social concern, but it is one in which every member of the community has a personal interest. The high pressure and speed at which we live, and the impetuous haste of business in these days of extreme utilitarianism, do not allow any exemption from the common rush. Even the staid and deliberate classes are affected by the rapid movement around them, and must needs hurry to keep their place. No inertia can check the torrent, and the stoutest resolve to move slowly is powerless to stem the flood. It remains to adapt the conduct to the inexorable conditions. Never, in the history of intellectual and commercial progress, was the need of order more urgent. It is not the amount of work accomplished that exhausts the strength, and leads to a break-down; it is the effort made, and the worry of making it, that overtax the energy of control and the strength of action. Perhaps one of the most prolific causes of collapse in recent times has been the lack of training. This is not sufficiently recognized. In the old days of "apprenticeship," and slowly built up qualifications for work, youths were specially trained for their business in life, and the difficulties of the career came upon them gradually. Now one-half of the laborers in any department of industry have entered it in some sudden way, and industry has become a general melee, in which those who can by effort accomplish the greater results are counted successful. The effortless, though not always the least capable, are vanquished. What takes place in regard to work finds its parallel in, and is to a great extent the cause of, the hurry and worry of the busy world as a whole. Every thing and everybody presses forward at high speed, and success means outrunning competitors. The maxim of safety—to avoid physical hurry and mental hurry alike—is, prepare, deliberate; in a word, adopt an orderly method. The man with a weak heart who endangers his life by hurrying to catch a train, unless under altogether exceptional circumstances, is probably the victim of a defect in early training, which leaves him at the mercy of impulse without order; or he is striving to fill a place in life for which his chief qualification has been the faculty of accomplishing by effort more than can be achieved naturally by steady labor. Some persons are ever hurrying after their engagements; others are goaded onward by the pressure behind them; but however the "hurry" is produced, it is full of peril to happiness of mind and health of body, and in the end, by exhaustion, if not prematurely by accident, it kills.

SECULAR NEWS.

The Convention of Northern Settlers in the Southern States met pursuant to call in Charlotte on the 15th inst. They were warmly welcomed by the citizens. N. Dumont, who originated the scheme, was made chairman by acclamation. Resolutions were passed unanimously and with great enthusiasm encouraging immigration. A resolution was passed calling upon all Northern settlers in the South to hold county meetings on the 15th of February to appoint delegates to the State convention to be held in March, which convention should in turn appoint delegates to a general convention to be held in Charlotte on the 4th of July.

The Cape Fear river rose 55 feet at Fayetteville during the recent freshet. Many cattle were drowned on the line of the river.

Eighty yards of roof, at the bottom of the shaft of the Derias mine in England, have fallen since the explosion. Sixty men buried alive and no possibility of their escape or recovery.

Further reductions in wages in Great Britain and some stoppages of mills.

At the late meeting of Directors of the N. C. Railroad a dividend of six per cent. was declared, payable March 1st and September 1st. The value of stock has greatly advanced lately.

An Association of the Alumni of the University of Virginia has recently been organized with Governor John W. Stevenson, of Kentucky, as President.

No law now in South Carolina permitting divorce of man and wife.

The office of State Geologist has been abolished and duties transferred to the Bureau of Agriculture.

Gov. Vance is the candidate of the Democratic caucus for United States Senator. This is considered equivalent to an election.

Gold fever is said to be raging in the lower part of Madison county.

The Western N. C. Railroad and the Western Insane Asylum will be investigated by a committee appointed by our Legislature.

A resolution has been introduced into the United States Senate, looking to the removal of the negroes to the territories. It will hardly pass the point of good intentions.

Gov. Hampton has so far improved as to take a ride in a buggy on the 15th.

The Raleigh Observer gets the public printing this time. The News had it last.

Bills have been introduced into the State Legislature to establish Normal Schools for each Congressional district of the State; to prevent the enticing of seamen from vessels; to regulate salaries (provides for lessening salaries generally;) to provide for redemption of real estate sold under liens and mortgages.

EDUCATIONAL.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE,

MECKLENBURG CO. N. C.,

1878–'79.

THE NEXT COLLEGIATE YEAR BEGINS ON THURSDAY, September 12th, 1878, and ends June 12th, 1879. It is divided by a recess of about ten days, embracing Christmas and New Year's-day, into two Terms.

The necessary expenses for the entire year, exclusive of clothing, traveling expenses, and pocket money, vary from $225 to $250.

There are three fully organized Courses of Instruction:

1. The CLASSICAL COURSE, occupying four years.
2. The SCIENTIFIC COURSE, occupying three years
3. The ECLECTIC COURSE, designed for those who do not wish to take a regular course but to pursue special studies.

Applicants for any class will be received at any time during the year.

Davidson College is on the Railroad, midway between Charlotte and Statesville.

HELP!
FOR THE WEAK, NERVOUS AND DEBILITATED!

The afflicted can now be restored to perfect health and bodily energy, at home, without the use of medicine of any kind.

PULVERMACHER'S
ELECTRIC BELTS
AND BANDS,

For self-application to any part of the body, meet every requirement.

The most learned physicians and scientific men of Europe and this country indorse them.

These noted Curative appliances have now stood the test for upward of thirty years, and are protected by Letters-Patent in all the principal countries of the world. They were decreed the only Award of Merit for Electric Appliances at the great World's Exhibitions—Paris, Philadelphia, and elsewhere—and have been found the most valuable, safe, simple, and efficient known treatment for the cure of disease.

READER, ARE YOU AFFLICTED?

and wish to recover the same degree of health, strength, and energy as experienced in former years? Do any of the following symptoms or class of symptoms meet your diseased condition? Are you suffering from ill-health in any of its many and multifarious forms, consequent upon a lingering, nervous, chronic or functional disease? Do you feel nervous, debilitated, fretful, timid, and lack the power of will and action? Are you subject to loss of memory, have spells of fainting, fullness of blood in the head, feel listless, moping, unfit for business or pleasure, and subject to fits of melancholy? Are your kidneys, stomach, or blood, in a disordered condition? Do you suffer from rheumatism, neuralgia or aches and pains? Have you been indiscreet in early years and find yourself harassed with a multitude of gloomy symptoms? Are you timid, nervous, and forgetful, and your mind continually dwelling on the subject? Have you lost confidence in yourself and energy for business pursuits? Are you subject to any of the following symptoms: Restless nights, broken sleep, nightmare, dreams, palpitation of the heart, bashfulness, confusion of ideas, aversion to society, dizziness in the head, dimness of sight, pimples and blotches on the face and back, and other despondent symptoms? Thousands of young men, the middle-aged, and even the old, suffer from nervous and physical debility. Thousands of females, too, are broken down in health and spirits from disorders peculiar to their sex, and who, from false modesty or neglect prolong their sufferings. Why, then, further neglect a subject so productive of health and happiness when there is at hand a means of restoration?

PULVERMACHER'S
ELECTRIC BELTS AND BANDS

A TERTIUM ALIQUID.

DEAR EDITOR:—I expected to have a good quiet little time all to myself, thinking the two champions, who have been so long in the field, were completely exhausted. Imagine my surprise to find one of them suddenly punching all around me, and over me and through me, and then offering a prayer over my mangled relics. Before the other comes along and buries me ont of sight, please allow me to exhibit myself to the public for one brief remark.

I. I wish to review the ground already trod and express a little hypothetic penitence.

1. If I said even by implication, that "abject fear of what people would say" constrained Christ to do what He did, I am sorry for it, and hope the indulgent public will hear the prayer of my generous assailant. I haven't my article before me, but I remember that I meant to say that Christ was baptized in obedience to the Divine Will which instituted the ordinance. Had I said this doubtless bro. H. could have seen the distinction between the spirit of obedience and the spirit of abject fear. By pious minds the pharisees and lawyers were "regarded as abandoned wretches." In the very passage referred to by H., Christ clearly teaches that they were worse than the publicans for the very reason that they refnsed John's baptism. He teaches the same thing in Matt. xxi. : 31, 32. John the Baptist held the same opinion and no doubt the disciples of both John and Christ agreed with their masters.

2. That Christ did not make a "full revelation of His character and mission at the time of His baptism," is evident from the fact that even His most intimate disciples thought up to the time of His crucifixion that He was to restore the temporal power of the Jews. In the light of subsequent revelations we can understand his character and mission from the teaching of John the Baptist, or for that matter, from Old Testament teaching. What I meant, and what it was evident from the connection that I meant, by "full revelation," was making it clear to the people with whom He associated.

3. "As to the language of Christ at His baptism" we have only the testimony of bro. H. that "He insisted that John should baptize Him because it was obligatory." Matthew, the only other witness testifies that Jesus said to John "Suffer it to be so now for thus it becometh us, &c." The Greek (prepon) signifies what is becoming, suitable, decorous. Perhaps H. can distinguish between a sense of propriety and a sense of obligation, as well as between both these and a sense of "abject fear." Bro. H. says Christ was under "obligation to fulfill all righteousness." He was a part, and a very important part, of a faithful Jew's righteousness to conform to all ceremonial appointments. Here is a kind of righteousness which H. with beautiful consistency says Christ was under no obligation to fulfill. While he is adjusting his little discrepancy, I will content myself with the language of Scripture. It was becoming in Him to be baptized.

4. Clark has no authority for saying that the "baptism unto repentance was as much a vow of future obedience as confession of past sin—in so much that the repentance could be separated from it at will." Therefore Clark says he did not say it. What he meant to say was that repentance itself was as much a vow of future obedience, &c. For his authority, see Shorter Catechism, answer to question "What is repentance." The records do not indicate to a careful reader that John had finished his work when Jesus came to be baptized. He continued to baptize for some time after Jesus had entered upon His work. See John iii. : 22, 23.

5. Will Clark venture his feeble services to show when and where Christ observed other ceremonial appointments?" He will with pleasure, but hopes no one but bro. H. needs such services. At Jerusalem, during all the years of the public ministry. No one but bro. H. so far as I know has ever questioned the fact that Jesus observed every passover that occurred from the time of His baptism till His crucifixion. Writers differ as to the number. The general opinion is that there were three during this time. But it will be sufficient for our first lesson to assure bro. H. that Christ certainly did observe one passover, for it is mentioned by all four of His biographies. The way out of this will be easy for H. He can just strain all significance out of the passover, as he does out of circumcision and purification from the pollution of child-birth. Strange that he should be so fond of straining sin out of ordinances, and yet will not allow me the slight gratification of straining a little out of John's baptism! But that bro. H. may have another case to pray for, I will step aside and introduce the eminent Dr. Barrows. Speaking of the typical import of the passover, he says "As the blood of the paschal lamb, sprinkled on the door of the house, protected the inmates from the destroyer of the first-born: so the blood of Christ protects all who through faith receive its expiatory power from the wrath to come." Is there here no "remembrance of sin?" Did not he who sprinkled that blood say I am a sinner, needing pardon and justification; I expect and seek atonement for my guilt in blood?" What say you bro. H? Clark would like to express an opinion, but you know what he thinks on this question "matters just nothing at all." Whether Christ actually took part in any other of the Jewish feasts, we cannot say positively. We only know that He attended on them. See John 5th, when the feast mentioned was in all probability not the feast of the passover. However that may be, He did certainly go up to the feast of Tabernacles, and was present at the feast of Dedication.

II. It may seem irreverent in me to speak disrespectfully of the dead. But as H. is unconscious that his theory is a corpus mortuum, I trust my language will not shock his sensibilities. Hence I venture a few words.

1. Baptism and consecration do not mean the same thing. They are never in Scriptnre or elsewhere used as synonymons. Now, it is expressly said that Jesus came to be baptized of John. If he had come to be consecrated, can any one conceive why the writers should not have said so? There was nothing to prevent. In Greek as in English it was just as easy to say consecrate as baptize. According to H., Jesus did "say in substance, I do not ask the baptism given to sinners, but the washing in conformity to law, &c.". Most readers must think if Jesus said that at all He said it in shadow, very, very deep shadow. Unless bro. H. claims inspiration for such a paraphrase, perhaps he would do well to adhere to the ipsissima verba of Christ.

2. There is no evidence that baptism ever formed part of the ceremony of consecration much less the whole. The only act of priestly consecration described in the Bible is in the 8th chapter of Leviticus, where Moses set apart Aaron and his sons. They were washed at the door of the tabernacle. If H., will prove that the meaning is they were baptized at the door of the tabernacle, he will forever put an end to the dispute about immersion. I for one will be content with the proof if he will just refer to the Septnagint and show that the Seventy call it baptism.

3. The washing was a very small part of the ceremony. Had Aaron stepped aside as soon as this was over, he would have been no more qualified to serve at the altar than before. The baptism of Christ resembles the ceremony recorded in Exodus and here about as much as private prayer resembles the celebration of High Mass in St. Peters.

4. It is by no means certain that John was competent to perform the act of consecration. True, he was of priestly lineage, bnt he was divinely appointed to a work of a character entirely different from that which pertained to the Aaronic priesthood. It is therefore, highly probable that he was never consecrated to that office, for at the age of thirty he entered upon a work which involved none of its functions. His mission was peculiar. "He was a man sent from God to bear witness of the light."

5. It is by no means certain that an ordinary priest, even though he was regularly consecrated, could have consecrated a High Priest, and such was Christ.

6. If John had a right to consecrate priests, he could only give what he himself had received, i. e., consecration to the Aaronic priesthood. But the law forbade any one's receiving this consecration except the sons of Aaron. Our Saviour would not therefore, have been fulfilling all righteousness—"washing in conformity with the law"—if He, a member of the tribe of Juda, had thrust himself into an office which was confined by strict legal enactment to the tribe of Levi.

7. As bro. Reed has abundantly shown, one great purpose of the Epistle to the Hebrews is to prove the superiority of Christ's priesthood to that of Aaron. One point of superiority is in the method of consecration. Christ was not made priest by the law of a carnal commandment. But God made Him priest with an oath when He swore "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." Was Melchisedec inducted into office by a son of Levi? Nay, verily. He was greater than Levi, for "as I may say Levi paid tithes to him being yet in the loins of Abraham." The greater does not receive authority from the less. Bro. H. is derogating from the dignity of Christ's priesthood in making it in any sense derivative from the Aaronic. His distinction between the appointment and the consecration is of no avail. Aaron and Christ received their appointments from the same source. "No man taketh this honor nnto himself bnt he that is called of God as was Aaron." The very point of contrast is in the method of consecration. Aaron was not called but inducted into office by the law of a carnal commandment.

8. This brings me to an argument ad hominem. The very reason that Aaron's priesthood was inferior in being made after the law of a carnal commandment is that this "carnal commandment had in it a "remembrance of sin." Let bro. H. study the ceremony recorded in Exodus and Leviticus, and tell us if in every step there is not a recognition of the fact that Aaron and his sons were sinners, and that before they could minister at the altar they must cleanse away their pollntion. What was the meaning of the washing, the sin-offering, the burnt-offering and the ram of consecration? Was not this ceremony peculiarly appropriate to sinners? Did Christ receive this consecration in full, or even in part? If so, how about His taking part in ceremonial appointment? Let me say in conclusion that I was fully aware that many objections might be made to the "feeble services" I attempted to render to the pnblic, and am surprised that bro. H. did not present more formidable ones. But where is the theory against which objections may not be raised? The only merit to which I lay claim is that of staying in the frying pan instead of jumping into the fire.

DO BAPTISTS BAPTIZE?

Some of our Baptist brethren do not seem well informed in the literature of baptism. We infer this from the fact that the position taken in the article, "Do Baptists Baptize?" which appeared in the Presbyterian of the 8th inst. is supposed by the Biblical Recorder to be a new discovery. The argument which supports that position our good friend does not assail. We would suggest to inquirers after truth, as a corse of study, Dale's unanswered Treatise on Baptism, and commend to their attention the following extract from his closing pages:

"1. The Baptism of Inspiration is a thoroughly changed spiritual condition of the soul, effected by the power of the Holy Ghost, through the cleansing blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, and so making it meet for reconciliation, subjection and assimilation to the one fully revealed, living and true God, Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

"2. This 'one baptism' of Inspiration is, by divine appointment, ritually symbolized as to its soul-purification by pure water, poured or sprinkled, or otherwise suitably applied to the person, together with a verbal announcement of the spiritual baptism thus symbolized.

"3. Dipping the body into water is not nor (by reason of a double impossibility found in the meaning of the word and in the divine requirement) can it be Christian baptism. That Christian baptism is a water-dipping is a novelty unheard of in the history of the church for fifteen hundred years. This idea is not merely an error as to the mode of using the water (which would, comparatively, be a trifle), but it is an error which sweeps away the substance of the baptism without leaving a vestige behind. It is a sheer and absolutely abandonment of the baptism of inspiration, which is a baptism into Christ."

This result (a nullification of the theory which says that "dipping into water is Christian baptism") has not been sought, nor is it announced with any feelings of triumph or gladness of heart as against the friends of this theory, but it is declared as a result demanded by the concurrent and unanimous testimony of heathen writers, Jewish writers, inspired writers and early Christian writers through a continuous historic period of more than one thousand years."

We regard this great work of Dale as the end of controversy on the baptismal question. It only remains for others to put the results of his labors in shape for popular reading. When this is done and the attention of scholars biased by the theory is compelled to follow the investigations of Dale, few of them will venture to espouse the theory of a water-dipping.

When Dale's first volume made its appearance he was villified in no measured terms as a pedant, pretender, obscure village pastor, lunatic, presumptuous, audacious upstart, and ignoramus. In answer to all this he contented himself with referring such critics to the Quaker who said to the cursing sailor, "That's right, friend, spit it all out. Thee can never go to heaven with such trash on thy stomach."

THE LAW.

Law is a rule of action prescribed by a superior which an inferior is bound to obey. The universe is governed by law. There are the fixed and established laws of nature by which the material world is governed. According to these fixed laws, God causes his sun to rise upon the good and the evil, and sendeth rain upon the just and the unjust. Under the operation of these laws summer and winter, seed time and harvest, cold and heat, will continne until the end of the world. God governs matter by laws adapted to matter. In the material world there is but little departnre from the fixed laws of natnre, consequently everything in the material world is moving in the sphere for which it was intended, and answering in a high degree the pnrpose for which it was created. Hence the sun, moon and stars move generation after generation in their respective orbits, without rushing out of their own into the orbits of other planets. God governs mind by laws adapted to mind. But since the fall there is an innate depravity underlying the human mind that leads the inhabitants of this earth to disregard the authority and trample under foot the laws by which God governs his intelligent creatures. This leads to much confusion and disorder. It frequently results in the battle of the warrior, which is accompanied with confused mind and garments rolled in blood. A profound thinker has said that the law has her seat in the bosom of God, and her voice is the harmouy of the universe; wherever her voice is heard and her commands obeyed there is harmony; but wherever her voice is not heard and her commands not obeyed there is confusion. An apostle says the law is good if a man use it lawfully. It is lawful to use the law as a rule of life—for it is written "to the law and the testimony, if they speak and act not according to this rule it is because there is no truth in them." The law is intended to convince us of sin, for by the law is the knowledge of sin. It is also designed to lead us to Christ, whose blood cleanseth from all sin. For the Apostle says the law is a school-master to bring us to Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.

The following is a letter addressed to brother passing through the dark waters of affliction, and is so applicable, as comfort, to all under similar circumstances, that we give the benefit of it to our readers.

DEAR SIR: Not long since I heard of your great loss and sore affliction. I offer you my true sympathy, and mourn with you as a fellow-sufferer, who has cried to God out of those very depths where all of His billows seem to go over us. I know the sharpness of the pang and can weigh much of the loss, that has no estimate. Wife! Mother! what words linger so sweetly on the lips? What relation wields so much power over life and happiness? Here in this distress seems to be the lowest depths of earthly sorrow. Still, as to the parting, it is in all cases only a matter of time: for there are no bonds on earth that will not, sooner or later, be broken, but the union with Christ, our life, from whom, thanks be to God, neither things present or to come, or even death can separate. But dark as the night may be, the day cometh. He that soweth in tears shall reap in joy. God in mercy has so formed us that the heart lives again after such crushing blows. When the roar of the waves has ceased and the eyes are not dimmed with tears, and grace that was under the shadow of grief shines out again, we can judge more justly of our state, and shall find that in our faithfulness, and out of covenant love, He has called us into fellowship with His Son Jesus Christ, to suffer with Him, that we may reign with Him. We begin to find, too, that He is filling our hearts with joy that cannot be told and is full of glory; the joy of knowing the riches of His inheritance in the saints, the power of His resurrection, and the hope of our calling. We are often brought to grief that we may be able to comfort those who grieve. I, however, know I can put forth no thoughts that have not been already present in your mind; and it may not be fit for me to point yon the way, who know so much better, where are the springs of consolation. Yet suffer these words by way of remembrance. Every sacrifice must be tried by fire. The flesh, like dross, dims and tarnishes, by its earthiness, all that is spiritnal. Every tried heart knows to its grief how self urges to retire from the world, within our own thoughts; to wrap our sorrows about us and sit apart to mourn and meditate and pray. Too often we give way to its pleadings, thinking we do right to nurse our grief, and that by so doing we live a more holy life. We forget that religion does not consist in high mental states and deep moral feeling, but in submission and obedience; in seeking to make the world better, not retiring from it; in meeting and putting down difficulties, not shunning them; in battling for God and His truth, where the struggle is the hardest, and this for the most part, is in our own hearts; in acting in full sympathy with Him who came to seek and to save that which is lost. Often too onr peace is ruined when the longings of the flesh move us to judge the promises, when on the contrary, we should judge the providence by the promise; for those eighteen on whom the tower of Siloam fell, were not the greatest of all sinners.

So it was that Jacob had settled it in his mind that he should go down in sorrow to the grave, to his beloved son. Turning his back upon the bright promise, he was looking directly upon the dark affliction, so full of gloom.

Yet as often since with others, what he took to be only evil, proved to be his greatest good. Job would surely have had ground to donbt his integrity and follow the counsel of his unwise comforters, if he had judged the thonghts of God towards him, by the sad events of his life. But behind a frowning providence he saw a smiling face. Resignation under affliction would not be possible, if not seen as coming from the hand of God. A general providence, even if we thought that God had retired from His works and left them to the workings of settled laws, is indeed enough to awaken praise, gratitude and love in onr hearts; yet in present affliction, it may not meet our wants. To be submissive under our trials we must assent to His ordering each single event; and not the bare event only, but the time and circumstances in which they shall cross our path. To be quiet however because we cannot help ourselves, is fatalism, not piety. Therefore we must recognize the bottom truth, that everything is ordered with a design, which springs from wisdom, goodness and mercy. This fills the cup of comfort. Human depravity makes the purpose of God an excuse for not obeying, when the wrong doer says: "Who has resisted His will?" But the pious heart leaves God to His work, and is glad in it as His work. That He is able or not, to clear up the design, effects not the benefit. He trusts God still. He has to do rather with his Father's heart, than his Father's hand, and makes His will the rnle of duty. He consults that it is God's right to order and his privilege to obey. The union of resignation and obedience in the same heart is the test of piety. Happy is the man in whom they are joined. He can rejoice in tribulation, and find heaven in obedience.

May the "God of comfort and Father of mercies grant you the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness;" giving yon grace to hold fast yonr confidence of hope which has great recompense of reward. May He guide His little orphans that their feet slip not in the way; keep their eyes from tears, and their souls from death and set them at last as jewels in His own crown.

Thanks be given to God, you have the solid comfort that all is well. From what I have heard there seems to be no room for painful grief, but to the eye of faith, a fit occasion for the purest joy. Far more highly favored than all the Christless, your heart claims kindness and mutual happiness with a glorified spirit and a diadem in the hand of God. Dwell earnestly on what is revealed of the holy, happy, changeless state of these who die in the Lord, and fill your mind with right thoughts of the wisdom, goodness, faithfulness and love of Him who has prepared the mansions for His people; then try the heart if it will indulge even a wish that, she so dear to you, would lay down her crown of life, leave the golden streets and the holy fellowship and the glorious presence, and come back to this dark world, where satan and sin distribnte discord, anguish and death; where every pathway of life leads throngh a vale of tears. Rather would the heart sigh as Bunyan, when he glimpsed the bright throng in their white robes, with crowns and harps of gold "Oh! that I were there!" God grant us and all dear to us, an abundant entrance into the kingdom of light.

Yours with much condolence.

HOW SHALL THE TARES BE KEPT OUT?

In the last number of the N. C. Presbyterian appeared an admirable article signed S. H. C., on THE TARES. The writer shows how dangerous a thing it is to receive unconverted persons into the church. The effect in the first place, on the man himself, is to place him at the greatest possible disadvantage for the saving of his soul. And in the second place the effect on the church is deleterious in the extreme, corrupting and degrading it, retarding its work, weakening its testimony, dishonoring religion and ruining souls. The inference drawn is that church sessions and pastors should be more careful in receiving members.

It is precisely on this point that I wish to hear again from S. H. C. He says do what we will, we cannot have a perfect church, for there will be tares among the wheat down to the end. And he also says that we cannot read men's hearts, and that bnt a small portion of their lives is open to our inspection. Yet he says we must guard against the evil as far as possible. Here, precisely, I want light. Will S. H. C. take up this point and give us what light he can? He makes one suggestion only, but it may be a good one, viz.: to wait long enough after a protracted meeting for proving those who profess conversion. I am not snre that this is warranted by Apostolic example, or that it would avail much. On the whole the subject is to me as difficult as it is confessedly important, and as a pastor I shall thankfully receive instruction from any qnarter. How are we to proceed when one declares that he believes and has repented and hopes he is regenerate? Can we demand anything more than a not incredible profession? And is not the responsibility after all necessarily upon the candidate himself?

Of course to receive such on a profession that is not rendered incredible by bad conduct of any sort, will, in many cases, involve church discipline afterwards, for the false professor's life and conduct will be apt to betray him ere very long. And is not this just the only course to be pursued? Must we not receive all who declare that they are the Lord's, and then discipline them if they make evident their need of it? Is not this implied in our Saviour's language in the parable: "Let both grow together?"

THE SOLITARY SEA.

O solitary, shining sea,
That ripples in the sun,
O gray, and melancholy sea,
O'er which the shadows run;

O ever solitary sea,
Of which we all have found
Somewhat to dream or say, the type
Of things without a bound;

Love, long as life, and strong as death,
Faith, humble and sublime,
Eternity, whose large depths hold
The wrecks of this small Time;

Unchanging, everlasting sea!
To spirits soothed and calm
Thy restless moan of other year
Becomes an endless psalm.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

An old woman of eighty wished to become a Christian. But there was difficulty in the way. So she asked several friends to come with the minister and talk with her. She admitted the truth of all they said, but something held her back.

Said the minister:—why not give yourself now, within ten minutes?"

O, she could not!

"Why not?"

She wanted time, she said; it was too sudden. Ten minutes! O no; she must have time to think about it.

"You are old," said the minister; "how long have yon been thinking about it already?"

She paused a moment, and then said slowly:—"Fifty years."

"Fifty years!" "oried the minister; "and yet you want more time! Isn't fifty years enough?"

That was a new way of looking at it. Fifty years, indeed!

"What shall I do?" she eagerly asked.

"Do nothing," was the answer; "but leave all with God. Let us pray to him to lift the burden."

So they prayed. And suddenly, when she no longer pleaded for time, light came through the darkness, the burden rolled away, and, like a little child, the old woman entered the kingdom.—Congregationalist.

At a meeting of the ministers of the various Nonconformist churches in Rochester and Chatham, England, it has been unanimously resolved that none of the ministers should officiate at a funeral on Sabbath except when by medical authority immediate interment is declared necessary on sanitary grounds. It was also decided that in no circumstances should the ministers officiate at weddings on Sabbath.

A revised ritual has been introduced in the synagogue service of the ancient Jewish community of Bonn. All prayers relating to the restoration of the Jewish State in Palestine, the gathering together of the Jews and their return to the Holy Land, have been expunged from the Prayer-book. In consequence of these innovations, a number of Jews have seceded from the congregation, and formed themselves into a separate congregation.

We learn through a private letter, and by public statements also, that a great religious awakening is in progress in the City of Mexico. It originated in the Presbyterian mission under the charge of the Rev. M. N. Hutchinson, and all the Protestant churches in the city are stated to be enlisted in earnest work. A number of prominent citizens are among the converts from Romanism. The renewal of personal consecration on the part of the preachers, both native and foreign, seems to have been the starting point of the movement, which is full of promise, and already so rich in fruits that Mr. Hutchinson has had to come to the United States in person in order to procure additional funds for the proper prosecution of the work.—Congregationalist.

It is stated that the common notion that "music cnres madness" has been tested by a series of experiments at the Blackwell's Island Insane Asylum, and its fallacy pretty thoroughly demonstrated. Representatives of the various types of lunacy have been subjected to the influence of music, but, as a rule, no stimulating effect upon the mind could be detected. The impression made seemed to be merely sensnous, and was shown in a quickening of the circnlation, or in producing a desire to dance. The melancholic patients appeared to experience no emotion whatever nnder the tones. The effect upon the maniacal varied, and was not satisfactorily determined.

Diphtheria is becoming formidable in some parts of the Continent. For the last two years it has been committing great ravages in Hungary. In Kun-Telegyhaza, which has only 20,000 inhabitants, there has been recently a severe outbreak—2,136 persons have been attacked, and of these 927 have succumbed to the dreadful disease. Lately it has been making itself felt in Vienna, and it has just attacked the family of the Italian Ambassador. Count Robilant. Three cases have already occurred in his household.

Gordon Pasha, the Governor-General of the Egyptian Soudan, in the course of the last four months has seized not fewer than thirty-eight slave caravans. Every non-registered slave is declared at once irrevocably free.

The exposition of the body of St. Francis Xavier, says an Indian paper, commenced on the 3rd ult. The procession set out from the cathedral and entered the church of Bom Jesus at 9 o'clock in the morning, and was composed of about fifty confraternities bearing silver and gold crosses, four hundred priests, and an enormous number of clerics in minor orders, winding up with Bishop Barboro, of Hyderabad; Bishop Bonjean, of Jaffna and Ceylon; and Bishop Meurin, of Bombay; and was presided over by the Archbishop. The new Governor-General, who had been installed the day previous, followed next, accompanied by a host of officials in grand uniforms. The procession then entered by the side of the chapel and brought out the body of the saint and placed it in front of the high altar, after which a Pontifical Mass by the Archbishop commenced, which terminated at 12 o'clock with the Papal blessing. The whole scene was very picturesque. The military and police had hard work to preserve order, as the crush of Portuguese Catholics was simply indescribable. On the body being exposed by the prelates named above, the artillery fired a salute of twenty-one guns, and the church bells were set ringing throughout the town. The body is much shrunken and shrivelled. About 15,000 persons were in and about the church. Pilgrims from all parts of India were at Goa, and the town was wonderfully crowded by all sorts and conditions of men.

OUR LEADER.

This dear Master is our Leader on the road. That rare quality belongs to our Guide, that he can be present with every party of pilgrims at the same time. If we imagine that He has gone on and left us, or has forgotten us, the assuring voice is heard, "Lo! I am with you always." See how kindly He lifts that infirm old pilgrim over the chasms, and how gently he picks up that feeble child and carries it in His arms! When that careless brother stumbled and fell, how quickly He set him on his feet, and said, "Walk circumspectly, not as the fool, but as the wise." We have even seen Him carrying along the poor brother who was horribly wounded by a bad fall, until he was strong enough to walk again. As the wounded man was carried by us, we heard him humming over to himself these words:—"He restoreth my soul; He knoweth my frame, and remembers that I am his dust.—T. L. Cuyler.

THE RELIABLE MAN.

Of all the qualities that combine to form a good character, there is not one more important than reliability. Most emphatically is this trne of the character of a good business man. The world itself embraces both truth and honesty, and the reliable man must necessarily be truthful and honest. We see so much all around us that exhibits the absence of this crowning quality, that we are tempted in our bilious moods to deny its very existence. Bnt there are, nevertheless, reliable men, men to be depended upon, to be trusted, in whom you may repose confidence, whose word is as good as their bond, and whose promise is performance. If any one of yon know such a man, make him your friend. You can only do so, however, by assimilating his character. The reliable man is a man of good jndgment. He does not jump at conclusions. He is not a frivolous man. He is thoughtful. He turns over a subject in his mind, and looks at it all round. He is not a partial or one-sided man. He sees through a thing. He is apt to be a very reticent man. He does not have to talk, a great deal. He is a moderate man not only in habits of body, but also of mind. He is not a passionate man; if so by nature, he has overcome it by grace. He is a sincere man, not a plotter or schemer. What he says may be relied on. He is a trustworthy man. You feel safe with your property or the administration of affairs in his hands. He is a brave man, for his conclusions are logically deduced from the snre basis of truth, and he does not fear to maintain them. He is a good man, for no one can be thoroughly honest and trnthful without being good. Is such a quality attainable? Most assuredly so. It is not born—it is made. Character may be formed; of course, then, its component parts may be moulded to that formation.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1879.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

The stated season observed as the Week of Prayer for 1879 is past. Have we prayed? Has God heard and answered in the outpouring of His spirit? It is not to be denied that there was a lack of unanimity as to the observance of the season. Many churches did not regard observance as the best thing to be done, while others entered heartily into it. In Richmond, Va., so much interest was manifested in the exercises during the week of prayer that prayer meetings were continued during the week following, with interest so greatly increased that a proposition from the Young Men's Christian Association to the ministers of the city for continuance yet another week was agreed to, as with one voice and with hearty earnestness (says the Central Presbyterian) by the ministers representing Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Lutheran, Christian and Presbyterian churches. "A spirit of grace and supplication" seemed to be poured out, and many are looking for a great blessing.

But there does not seem to be anything like a general revival of religion; still the people are praying, and God may be withholding the blessing that our faith may be tried. Have we really prayed? The gift of His Holy Spirit is always agreeable to God's will. Have we, in the name of Christ, with confession of our sins and thankful acknowledgment of His mercies, asked God for this blessing? or, have we, day by day, gone through a mere heartless routine, expecting that a round of specified service would meet God's favor? Intelligent Christians may have performed this mummery, but they did it not ignorantly, and deceived not themselves while they mocked their God. No doubt exists in our minds that there was very much earnestness and sincerity of devotion during the week of prayer, and that even now there is an intense longing for the hand of God to be outstretched for our deliverance from the pall of spiritual gloom which seems to have settled down upon us. Should we not, however, be doing as well as praying? Our claim on God is that through Christ we are His children by adoption. We may go to Him as children to a Father who pitieth us, but go with the greater confidence when we go as obedient children, doing His will. Are we not prone to overlook the fact that work is necessary as well as prayer? We are to use the natural powers that have been bestowed upon us, and God will assuredly come forward with His effectual aid at the point where we are powerless to proceed. No soul will fail to be revived that throws itself upon God for light and guidance, with the earnest purpose to walk in the path which He opens up, and to do the work which He shall present. No church composed of members so consecrated can fail of securing God's abundant blessing in its own spiritual welfare, and in the awakening and saving of sinners.

THE BISHOP AGAIN.

We are told that considerable excitement prevails in Petersburg, Va., in consequence of a lecture delivered by Bishop Keene on Roman Catholicism, and that the various Protestant ministers are in a great flutter, &c. All of which sounds to us very like a canard, gotten up to glorify the Bishop by making it appear that he was about to slay Protestantism with one fell swoop of his trenchant sword. The Bishop knows full well he can make no perverts from among intelligent Protestants. We imagine he is trying as in this city to gather in the colored people and especially to get their children. It can do no harm certainly for Protestant ministers occasionally to point out to their congregations the errors and absurdities of Rome, but this will never reach the negroes. In the newspaper just started here, the Africo-American Presbyterian edited by a colored minister, and for circulation among the colored people, we have a more certain and effective means of coping with the Bishop. We heartily hope that this paper will be abundantly supported. It is at present we feel sure in good hands, and can reach an element of our population utterly beyond reach by other means.

Here is what that paper says about the designs of the Romish Church:

"The (Roman) Catholic Church does not want our matured people for permanent use. That Church understands clearly that if one pours water on a goose's back it will run off, but if it be poured on a gosling's it will soak in. Her object is to bring the children under her influence. If she can cajole and hoodwink the people sufficiently to get the children into the schools, there will be no uneasiness on the part of the Catholic Church as to the future control of the colored people of the South, both politically and religiously. To show in part the reason for alarm in this matter, we quote from the report of President E. P. Tenny, who is good authority on this subject. Nearly a year ago he reported that "Rome spends $600,000 a year upon the freedmen and counts 150,000 of them in her schools. She has nearly 10,000 young men in her higher schools and seminaries, with 750 professors, chiefly Jesuits. There are 500,000 scholars in papal schools of lower grade. There are seven religious orders of men and thirty-six of women, to whom this work is committed."

BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.

Let every one of our ministers and ruling elders, and as many of our church members as will, supply themselves with the Book of Church Order, as prepared by the Presbyterian Publishing Company. It is now in the form in which it is to be submitted to our Presbyteries this spring for ratification or rejection. Every delegate to Presbytery should go prepared to vote intelligently on the question of its adoption, for great results for good or evil to our Church may depend on the conclusion of this matter.

Single copies may be had at 15 cents, two copies for 25 cents and four copies for 50 cts., of J. L. Shotwell, Agent, 1001 Main street, Richmond, Va.

DR. BAIRD'S RESTORATION.

We wrote last week that we should not again refer to the affairs of Dr. E. T. Baird unless to report his full restoration to the Gospel ministry. We have now the pleasure, as will be seen from the following, which we got from the Richmond State of 24th instant:

East Hanover Presbytery held a session yesterday evening in the Second Presbyterian church and again to-day, when it disposed of the case of Dr. E. T. Baird. The following is the action of the body:

Whereas, the Presbytery finds in the paper submitted by Dr. Baird, with the addendum made thereto by him, and the statement contained in the report of the committee of conference, a distinct and penitent acknowledgment of the moral wrong done by him and an expression of penitent sorrow for the great injury to the cause of Christ and to our beloved Church resulting therefrom; and whereas numerous testimonials have been presented from persons of various denominations expressing confidence in Dr. Baird and tending to show that the sentiments of the religious public are strongly in his favor; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Presbytery does now remove the sentence of suspension from Dr. E. T. Baird, and restore him to the office of the Gospel ministry.

The resolution was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes.—Revs. Armstrong, Read, Staples, Campbell, Witherspoon, Scott, Rose, Anderson, Bishop, and Ruling Elders Miller, Stiles, Holt, Haw, Cone and Donnan—15.

Noes.—Revs. Hoge, Preston, Smith, Newton, and Ruling Elders Brooke and Ould—6.

And now we do most heartily rejoice. We believe the best, the only proper course, treasuring the wisdom acquired by a sad experience, is to let the past, so far as is possible, be blotted from remembrance. There's nothing pleasing, certainly, in the retrospect.

We welcome Dr. Baird back into the line of work, hard work, for Christ and His cause, and doubt not, if spared, many years of usefulness are before him.

Since the above was set up a kind friend and brother has sent us the Dispatch containing Dr. Baird's letter and the full report of the Conference Committee. Our readers will be glad to have them we are sure, and as our columns are now closed against them, we will publish next week.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT REASONS.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions say with regard to the sending of Rev. John W. Dabney and his wife to Campinas to reinforce the mission there:

There were a number of reasons to make this measure almost an absolute necessity. The exigencies of the mission itself made the case exceedingly urgent. Further postponement would have brought the best interests of this important work into imminent peril. Mr. Dabney, it will be remembered, had spent several years at Campinas, had made himself thoroughly acquainted with the language and character of the people, but had spent eighteen or twenty months in this country recruiting his health and completing his theological studies. He is not only ready and desirous to return to his work, but he has already waited six months to ascertain whether the committee would be able to send him back. His circumstances are such that he can wait no longer, and if not sent now he must seek a pastoral charge in this country, and thus all the advantages of his previous experience and knowledge of the language must be thrown away.

The only hesitancy on the part of the committee arose from fear that the receipts of the Treasury for the remaining three months of the ecclesiastical year might not be sufficient to meet the exigency of the case. They have adventured and we trust the Church will sustain them.

REV. A. F. DICKSON AT COLLEGE.

A minister of the Northern Church, who graduated by the side of Rev. A. F. Dickson at Yale College in 1845, gives his impressions regarding him at that time:

His two, perhaps, leading characteristics while in College were fervor and force—fervor in his Christian character and in all his public addresses, and force in essays and in debate. He was a strong debater, and in that stood perhaps among the most able men of the class. He possessed a certain readiness of speech that always ensured a welcome when he arose in the class prayer-meeting, and scarcely less in discussion, from which he never shrank. Into discussion he entered with a heartiness that gave some an impression that he was somewhat ambitious, an element of character, however, which bespoke if not success at least unflinching devotion in whatever he might undertake in his subsequent career.

While Mr. D. was always accessible and even genial to those more intimate, there was still a kind of reserve at times which some were disposed to account hauteur; but knowing him somewhat intimately as I did in our Christian associations, I came to esteem him highly, for there was such a nobleness of spirit in him. He won my regard, and the impressions I still retain of him are to me now very precious reminiscences, and will be cherished I hope in heaven, where, we cannot doubt, he is now "in the joy of his Lord."

HEALTH NOTES.

Rev. L. C. Vass, who has been quite sick for some days past, is now able to walk out. Rev. T. J. Allison has been indisposed, but is much improved and hopes to fill his regular appointments hereafter.

We learn that Mrs. Vass, mother of our brother named above, is in a very low state of health. She is ninety-four years of age.

TO THE CHURCHES OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Churches needing aid, in supporting their ministers, will forward their applications to the undersigned before the 15th of February next.

In your applications state (1) what part of your minister's time you desire, (2) what amount is raised by the church, and whether it is all that could reasonably be expected, (3) what amount of aid is needed, and (4) how long has your church been receiving aid.

Applications not in the hands of the Agent by the time mentioned above are not likely to be successful.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Christian Observer, in introducing an article which was written by the editor of this paper at this office, takes occasion to say that "an editorial writer for the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN furnishes that paper," &c. We may not be exact as to the words, but we are sufficiently so. It does not concern the public who wrote the article, but why all this circumlocution? Why not have written, as usual in such cases: "The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN says". We will explain. Some person (we borrow the style) who gets up news and writes editorials for the Observer found himself behind the time, and so constructed the circumlocutory gauze as a veil to hide the deficiency. The gauze was woven nicely enough, but was rather thin. We warn our contemporary that an indefinite continuance might prove provoking. The present matter is so far down among the small things of life that it isn't worth a tingle of fresh warm blood.

Anna Dickinson, a strong-minded woman, originally a lecturer, then a player played-out, has again taken the rostrum and undertakes to convince the people that the stage is more benign in its influence than the pulpit. Her argument seems to be that the stage is a more effective preacher of righteousness than the pulpit because it draws larger crowds. Heavy logic, that! As one of our contemporaries intimates, without so saying, a dog fight on that principle would be a valuable conservator of public morals, and a public capital execution tremendous. Isn't it about time on the programme for Exit Anna?

A writer in the Evangelist recommends that candidates for the Gospel ministry should be taken through a brief course of elementary law. The suggestion has some weight. He says that indifference to the rules of evidence is very noticeable in some ministers—not that they cannot prove; but that not appreciating the importance of it, they never do.

Not only does Russia find herself embarrassed by the Nihilists in her borders, but it is said that European capitalists refuse all loans until she withdraws her troops from Turkish soil and gives some guarantee that there will be no interference in Asiatic affairs.

The efforts of Father McNamara, formerly a Romish priest, to free his Irish brethren from the shackles of Roman Catholicism are meeting with success. This after the most bitter opposition and abuse. We agree heartily with the Christian Intelligencer in its remarks:

Now the time has come when an organization is necessary. We hope the existing denomination will not attempt to absorb this good man and his adherents. The moment he is interfered with, and is coaxed into any of our Protestant organizations, that moment his work loses its special power. Help him by gifts, and visits, by words of sympathy and encouragement, but leave him alone to form his Irish Christian Church. It would be a great pity to put an end to a movement so promising and desirable by depriving it of its peculiar characteristics.

A great deal of claptrap is written about prayer. One says we should never seem to tell God what he must know better than we. Which is simply absurd; for how so can we praise Him, or confess to Him, or ask a supply of our wants from Him. Again, we have seen going the rounds of the press a rebuke of those who use the name Jesus, simply, in prayer. This we are told is familiarity, that is in the highest degree irreverent, and we are asked: Would we approach an earthly monarch, or even a father, and call him by his Christian name? The point is not well taken. Christ Jesus is our brother, and no name is so precious, or goes so deeply down into the heart of a Christian, or so stirs his soul, as the name Jesus. Should it not be so? "Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."

We are trying to conduct the PRESBYTERIAN on the co-operative plan—that is, for those who want the paper published in the liveliest, freshest style to renew their subscriptions, and interest themselves in increasing our subscription list; we will do the rest. This plan is not new among the journalistic fraternity, but we have a brand-new idea to divulge further on. One of our contemporaries not long since spoke of the one new subscriber that every old subscriber was to get as rather of the mythical order—as the something they had been looking for, lo! these many years—which was always to come and never came. It is very much so. Now for our proposition: Every subscriber who receives his paper in a wrapper may know thereby that his is the only copy of the PRESBYTERIAN taken at that post office. In any such case it would be highly gratifying to us, and confer, so to speak, additional honor upon that post office to have, through the efforts of the lone subscriber, one or many new subscribers added to our list. It's worth trying, and if we can add even one hundred names to our list by this method, we can and will put our contemporary to shame for his disparagement of one-subscriber efforts. Will not our friends try it?

Sustentation Committee of Fayetteville Presbytery.

This committee will meet on Thursday, the 13th of February, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M., in the lecture room of Fayetteville Presbyterian church. It consists of Rev. D. Fairley, Rev. M. McQueen, and Elders B. Fuller, Jos. A. McArthur, Dr. Hugh A. McSwain, with the chairman. Churches requiring aid in supporting their ministers during the current year will please forward their applications to the chairman before the time above mentioned. Those applications should state what part of a minister's time is wanted, what sum is raised by the church, and whether it is in proportion to its ability, and what amount of aid is desired.

THE COLORED METHODIST CHURCH.

A few weeks ago the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church convened in the town of Washington. A special invitation was sent to several white ministers and laymen to be present on the night when the fraternal greetings were to be read to the Conference. Your correspondent was among those invited and learned something of colored Methodism which may be interesting to your readers.

There are three distinct branches of colored Methodists: 1st. The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. 2nd. The African Methodist Episcopal Church. 3rd. The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. Such are their full titles. The first is generally known as the Northern Colored Methodist Church, the third as the Southern Colored Methodist Church, and the second as the African Methodist Church.

The Northern Church claims to have been organized in 1796, the African in 1816, the Southern since the war. This last was set apart from the Southern white Methodist church, and their Bishops, Bebee, Holsey, Miles and Lane, ordained by their white brethren.

The strength of these three branches of colored Methodism is as follows:

Northern (or A. M. E. Z.), 200,000 communicants, 18 Annual Conferences, 7 Bishops.

African (or A. M. E.), 200,000 communicants, 14,000 itinerant and 3,168 local preachers.

Southern (or Col. M. E.), 100,000 communicants, 15,000 preachers, 4 bishops, making a total of 500,000 communicants, 18,668 preachers (exclusive of those of the large Northern branch unreported).

These three bodies are looking towards organic union, and in all probability will be one church in a few years. Bishop Bebee presided at this Annual Conference. He lives near this town and has an excellent reputation, both among white and black. He is a man of fine sterling sense and not without natural oratory. He and his church are worthy of the confidence and support of the Christian public. He is doing a good work, and doing it in a good way.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, at her home, St. Pauls, Robeson county, on the 1st of January, 1879, Agnes Moorhead, the beloved wife of Rev. J. Evans, aged 35 years.

Without warning the summons came to her. She was during the day in her usual health, when at 7 o'clock P. M. she received a paralytic stroke which at once deprived her of speech and hearing. Notwithstanding the most vigorous efforts of an experienced physician, her consciousness also soon faded away and at 11 o'clock P. M. she ceased to breathe.

Seldom has any community received such a shock as this gave to her many loving friends here and in her native land. Endowed by her Creator with a superior mind, a graceful person, and a peculiarly affectionate disposition, combined with a candor and truthfulness that we have never seen surpassed, and a wisdom and thoughtfulness very marked, she secured even while still very young the respect and affection of all who knew her. But early in life genuine piety began to exercise upon her its refining and and elevating influence—and turning away from the frivolities and gayeties of the world that charm so many, she gave the riches of her warm young heart and vigorous earnest life to the service of her Saviour. In that little Sabbath school on the banks of the Ottawa, where, regardless of rain and storm, and piercing cold, she was always at her post, her loving, earnest and prayerful labors will never be forgotten by her fellow-teachers or the class she served so faithfully. And still less will her constant and self-sacrificing efforts for the spiritual welfare of her brothers and sisters (she was the eldest of the family) be ever forgotten by them.

On her marriage she removed to Sherbrooke, where Mr. Evans, in obedience to the call of the Presbytery of Quebec, went to plant the standard of Presbyterianism. This city, the capital of the Eastern Townships, is in the centre of a beautiful and rapidly advancing section of country, inhabited by an energetic and intelligent, but remarkably godless people. A difficult and exhausting work was this, and under it the young pastor would have sunk (naturally buoyant and hopeful though he was) but for the faith, patience and unflinching perseverance of his brave and self-sacrificing help-meet. Five years of such labor and struggle brought the effort to a successful issue, but ere this the labor and exposure had laid the pastor on a bed of sickness from which many never expected him to rise. But a wife's loving constant care, words of cheer, and unfaltering trust in a covenant-keeping God, tended more than all else on earth to sustain him through those long weary winter months. With summer came returning health, and then, (in obedience to the physician's order to seek a warmer clime) a tearful farewell to that enterprize so dear to their hearts and to the friends that labor and self-sacrifice had won.

At Smyrna, Robeson county, N. C., where they found at once employment and a kindly welcome, the deceased soon secured the affection and respect of all classes of the community. The sorrowing, the suffering, the destitute and the young ever found in her, ready sympathy and efficient assistance. So, too, the colored people there will long remember her labors for them in the Sabbath school and her earnest efforts in every way to awaken and strengthen in them desires for a pure and holy life.

The last six years of her life were spent in St. Pauls. Though soon after coming here prostrated by a severe attack of "meningitis" which left her for months an invalid and permanently impaired her eye sight, yet she went steadily forward in her works of usefulness. Realizing, when at the worst, that she could serve God as truly by bearing His will as by doing it, she unfolded to all around that sublimest of spectacles—"how to suffer and be strong." As gradually she recovered from this she began to devote much of her attention to the education of her children—a daughter and two sons. Though now unable to read, yet from her accurate knowledge of the text books usually employed she conducted for several years their education with much success—not merely instructing them, but in the highest sense of the word educating them—training their minds to reason, awakening in them a love of knowledge, but especially laboring to eradicate from their minds all inclination towards that which is sinful and low, and to cultivate in them high and holy aspirations.

And not alone in the domestic circle was her influence felt. Mingling as much as her strength would permit in free and loving intercourse with the people of her husband's charge, she diffused wherever she went a spirit of Christian charity, harmony and happiness. Gentle and loving, yet with that spirituality and elevation which intimate communion with God imparts, what was sinful and frivolous shrunk from her presence, while her presence evoked what was best in all she met.

Though unexpected in the form and at the time in which she received the call, the summons did not come unexpected to her. For years she counted little on her life on earth and was growing ever more and more into that eternal life which God imparts to His own. She "walked with God, and she was not for God took" her.

Of the bereavement that her husband and children have sustained we will not trust ourselves to speak; or of the terrible blank in that home lately so happy, so joyous. But we pray that that God who has promised to be "a present help in time of need" will be their consolation and strength and enable them in time to realize that "All things will work together for good to them that love God."

Her precious mortal remains were interred at St. Pauls church (where a year or two ago she expressed her wish to be laid), in the midst of that field of labor that lay so near heart, and of the friends who appreciated her worth so justly, loved her so truly and tenderly and endeavored so constantly and faithfully in every way to contribute to her happiness.

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ:
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run
Rest in thy Saviour's joy."

ST. PAULS, Jan. 23, 1879. J. E.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

We have had intelligence from Matamoras as late as the 21st of December. A letter from Mr. Graybill, published in our present issue, giving an account of a preaching tour that he had recently made along the banks of the Rio Grande, will be read with much interest. During this tour he received to the communion of the Church by baptism nine persons, the fruits of the labors of Messrs. Leandro and Chamberlain who had previously visited the same region of country to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ. It has been determined by the Mission that Mr. and Mrs. Hall shall take up their residence at Brownsville, so to assume the charge of the Mexican Church there, and she to have the care of the girls' school in the same place, whilst Mr. Graybill is to continue in Matamoras and be assisted by Messrs. Carro and Leandro.

We have a letter from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, of the Pernambuco Mission, as late as the 11th of December. He mentions several very encouraging facts in connection with his work. Four persons had recently been received to the membership of the Church, making the whole number seventeen, whilst others were expected to be added at an early day. He also mentions as an item of great interest, that a number of young persons in two separate villages not far from Pernambuco had banded themselves together for religious worship on the Sabbath and for studying the Scriptures, being moved thereto by reading the Word of God, copies of which had been circulated among them. Mr. Smith immediately sent his colporteur to assist and guide these young people in these inquiries after the truth. An attempt was made to break up these meetings, but the chief of police interfered and protected them in their right to hold such meetings.

The letter from Mr. Blackford, published in our present number, in relation to matters in the city of Maranhaon, deserves the prayerful consideration of all who love the cause of Christ.

We have letters from Campinas as late as the 3d of December. One of these gives an account of a pleasant interview between Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, of the Northern Presbyterian Mission, and the Emperor of Brazil, in relation to the interests of Protestant Missions in that part of the world. The number of pupils in the two departments of the Institute at Campinas had increased to one hundred and seventy-nine. Mr. Lane had just returned from a visit to the Church at Penha; and all the members of the Mission were reported as in good health.

From Hangchow we have no intelligence later than the 4th of November. The missionaries there at that time were all well.

From Soochow we have a letter as late as the 3d of December. Encouraging accounts are given in relation to the improvement of Miss Safford's health, who was still in Japan, but was expected back to Soochow about the 1st of January. Mr. Davis was in Shanghai on the 5th of December, and announces his expectation of being united in marriage, the 6th inst., to Miss Schmucker, of the Northern Presbyterian Mission. Miss S. is spoken of as a most estimable person, and will be received by our missionaries at Soochow with great cordiality.

Miss Ronzone writes under date of the 11th of December. She speakes of her School going on smoothly and prosperously. Four of her pupils, and one of them her niece, had made application to be received to the communion of the Church. Rev. Mr. Turin, of the Waldensian Church, had resumed his weekly religious instructions in the school.—Missionary.

The Woman's Board of Missions held a very large, spirited and suggestive convention in Boston last week. One of the happy features of it was the announcement of the special gift of $25,000 in aid of a woman's department for a college in Turkey.

SCOTCH PRESBYTERIANISM IN 1878.

The ecclesiastical politics of Scotland have not during the past year presented any very remarkable features. The Disestablishment movement has been languishing, though random shots have been sometimes exchanged between assailants and defenders. The smart epigrams of Dr. Hutton and the pompous platitudes of Dr. Phin have helped to keep alive the hopes of the respective combatants. The final result of the campaign is hardly doubted by those who have any keen sense of justice, and can discern the drift of passing events. That Church and State will be separated in this country and over the world is already a matter of certainty with our best thinkers. But, judging from the progress of the necessary movement in Scotland, the work of ecclesiastical liberation cannot be said to be in the immediate future. In the present conservative temper of the nation, ecclesiastical reform of any serious character is not to be expected. Yet, public opinion is surely, if slowly, maturing on a subject that more than any other may in good time occupy the attention of our statesmen. Recent legislation has done nothing to fortify the position of the Established Church of Scotland. The efforts that Church is making though means of the spontaneous liberality of her members is doing more to prolong her existence than anything the State has done or can do for her support. Yet it may turn out that when she has proved herself able to stand alone, like other churches at her side, she will be better disposed to part with those public endowments which afford a maintenance as invidious as it is unnecessary.

The unestablished Presbyterian churches in Scotland during the past year have been considerably agitated by questions of a doctrinal complexion. In the United Presbyterian church a party has for some time demanded a modification of the Confession of Faith, or at least an explanation of the sense in which some of the doctrines may be legitimately held. At the last Synod of that church, an important committee that had been appointed to consider the subject, proposed for adoption a declaratory statement, intended to relieve oppressed or tender consciences from certain interpretations of the Confession which many suppose to be unscriptural. This document, drawn up with great care and wisdom, is at present under the consideration of the Presbyteries of the United Presbyterian Church. Without touching any fundamental doctrine of the faith, or even meddling with the letter of the Confession, it endorses certain prevalent views of various controverted points as perfectly consistent with a loyal adherence to the venerable Westminster Standards. We do not apprehend any detriment to the cause of truth from this movement in a church which has always steadfastly maintained Evangelical principles in Scotland.

The troublesome and vexatious case of Prof. Robertson Smith has not a little disturbed the peace of the Free Church of Scotland. The critical views of the inculpated Professor have not commended themselves to any person of weight in that Church. On the contrary, they have been severely condemned by many of the best Free Church authorities, and have been formally defended by none. The spirit in which they have been propounded by their author, and apologized for by his friends, is one of the most disagreeable and dangerous features of the whole affair. We believe the Free Church will at all hazards do her duty in resisting a movement of the most perilous description. Either she or Professor Smith must yield. There seems to be no ground or means of compromise in a matter that seriously involves the character and influence of the Free Church. The traditions, the convictions, the spiritual instincts of that church must prove too strong for the rash and mischievous criticism of her youngest and least judicious professor. She must and will take her stand on those great principles that underlie all sound criticism of Scripture, and will not suffer her borders to be desolated with that critical miasma which, as the offspring and the cause of Rationalism, has wrought such spiritual havoc among the churches of Germany.

The deaths of eminent Scotchmen during the year have not been numerous. The loss of a man like Dr. Alexander Duff has been deeply lamented by all the Evangelical Churches. There never was a nobler missionary than that distinguished man, and the whole Protestant world is his debtor at this day. He died quietly at Sidmouth in February last, and was followed to his grave at Edinburgh by a great company of sincere mourners of all Christian denominations. He was a highly gifted and thoroughly devoted missionary, and his name will ever be enrolled among the greatest benefactors of British India.

Among the other Scottish names that figure in the obituary of the year we must mention Sir William Stirling Maxwell, Dr. Rob't Carruthers and Rev. George Gilfillan. Sir William Maxwell, born to great wealth and high social position, distinguished himself in literature, and was a man of varied accomplishments. He was an ornament of the House of Commons, and, had he been spurred by necessity, he might have taken a high position in political life. His death at Venice, about the beginning of the year, took most people by surprise, and was deeply regretted by men of all parties.

Dr. Carruthers, who spent most of his life as a provincial journalist, was really an accomplished literary man. His Life of Pope, and other works published by Messrs. Chambers, of Edinburgh, show a high literary taste in union with a remarkable amount of honest literary industry.

The sudden death of Rev. George Gilfillan, of Dundee, was sincerely regretted even by those whose ecclesiastical and literary views were widely different from those which he often advocated in a very unceremonious fashion. Mr. Gilfillan was a man of remarkable literary power; but his unreasonable waywardness often injured him as a critic and a public man. With more sound sense and more gravity of character he might have exercised a much higher social and literary influence than could ever be claimed for him by his warmest admirers. Yet with all his faults he is one of those writers who will hold a fair place in the literature of the Victorian age.—Weekly Review.

We agree with those who think the Carolina Farmer a first-rate Agricultural Journal. Full of capital selections. These are some we find in January number at hand: The Farmers use of his Capital; Breeding Poultry; Farm Life; Mulching; The Horse; Cabbage Worm Remedy; Too Much Land; Agricultural Education, and very many others. $1.50 a year. W. H. Bernard, publisher, Wilmington, N. C. We club with NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and furnish both for $3 a year.

The February number of The North American Review opens with an article by Senator Hoar on "The Conduct of Business in Congress," which calls attention to defects in the present system of transacting business in the national legislature, and suggests improved methods. This is followed by a paper on "The Mysteries of American Railroad Accounting," by "An Accountant," showing how the most popular railway enterprises are conducted and urging an immediate revision of the laws bearing upon railway management. "A Statesman of the Colonial Era," by Gen. Richard Taylor, describes the career of George Mason, of Virginia, and attributes to that gentleman many sayings and writings that have hitherto been credited to other men. Hon. D. H. Chamberlain writes on "Reconstruction and the Negro," and presents the results of his experiences and observations while occupying the gubernatorial chair in South Carolina. "The Empire of the Discontented" by a "Russian Nihilist," is a revelation of the abuses of the Russian rule, and of the influences at work to overthrow the government. The author is a prominent leader of the insurrectionists. "The Scientific Work of the Howgate Expedition," by O. T. Sherman, of the scientific corps, gives a very full statement, and the only one that has been presented to the public, of the scientific results of the recent government preparatory exhibition to the polar seas. "Sensationalism in the Pulpit," by Rev. Dr. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacles, New York, is a pungent criticism of the theatrical tendencies of certain preachers. The number closes with an article by Prof. T. F. Crane on "Mediæval French Literature," reviewing a class of books known to but few readers in this country.

Published at 551 Broadway, New York, and for sale by booksellers and newsdealers generally, at 50 cents per copy.

The Eclectic Magazine for February is before us. The steel-engraved portrait this time is of the Marquis of Lorne. The table of contents is: The Greatness of England; Prince Bismarck; Pictures from Venice; Lost Literature; French Home Life, IV. In the Country; The Sun's Long Streamers; The Old and the New Ideals of Women's Education; Nuptura, a poem; Civilization and Noise; Notes on Afghanistan and her People; Observation and Memory; Two Modern Japanese Stories; A Sad Story; Literary Notices; Foreign Literary Notes; Science and Art, and Varieties. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Broad street, New York. Terms $5 per year; single number 45 cents. The Eclectic and any $4 magazine to one address for $8.

We have so often and so unmeasuredly commended the American Agriculturist that here we merely commend the February number as up to the highest standard. $1 50 per annum. Orange Judd & Co., 245 Broadway, New York. Clubbed with Presbyterian. See third page.

Blackwood's Magazine for January. Contents: The Elector's Catechism; John Colligate, Part X; The Haven of Carmel; A Medium of Last Century, Part I; Heathen; Contemporary Literature; Journalists and Magazine Writers; The Novels of Alphonse Daudet; The Afghan War and its Authors. Leonard Scott Publishing Co., New York. $4 a year.

What more can the children want than just such a publication as Wide Awake? Mrs. Farman, the editor, understands the child-mind and nature, and D. Lothrop & Co. of Boston, for $2 a year, furnish them a monthly feast. Some of the contents of February number are: Aunt Ruth's Valentine; Kiss Me, Katie, a poem; The Dogberry Bunch; Don Quixote, Jr.; Planting a Fussy; Sunshine in Winter; and these not half. Besides these they give us Natural History Supplement with numerous pictures, by Boz.

Rev. W. C. Young of Chicago has been invited by the Prytania street Presbyterian church to become its pastor.

The Presbyterian church in Leesburg, Va., has been enlarged and its attractiveness and comfort very much increased.

Rev. A. F. Laird's post office address is changed from Mountain Grove to Letcher, Bath county, Va., his field of labor remaining the same.

W. H. Darden formerly a candidate for the ministry under charge of Wilmington Presbytery was at the last session of the Presbytery commended to the Presbytery of San Francisco. He has been received under its care by the Presbytery last named.

Rev. Dr. Wm. Brown writes to the Central Presbyterian an account of his travels en route to Florida, and his agreeable stoppages by the way. He has arrived at Bay View. We trust the trip will result in restoring or greatly improving his health.

Rev. F. A. Thompson entered upon the duties in the pastorate of the Presbyterian church at Spring Hill, Tenn., a few Sabbaths since. He was the founder of the church, and returns to it from Franklin, where he has been ministering for five years past. Rev. Robert Gray retires from the pastorate with the kind wishes of the people.

The Foreign Mission Board of the Baptist Church has requested Rev. George B. Taylor to return to this country and spend a few months in collecting funds for the Italian mission. Besides awakening a deep interest in the cause North and South, it is hoped that Dr. Taylor's health may be improved by a change of climate and labor.—Religious Herald.

Rev. W. S. P. Bryan lately held a sacramental meeting at Beverly, Va. Three additional deacons have been elected. Two persons made a profession of religion at the "Dutch Settlement," an outpost of the Mingo Church. A building is to be erected for the Hunttonsville church. It will cost about $2,000 and will be a neat structure.

Rev. A. J. Witherspoon, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel of New Orleans, makes a very encouraging report. The Christians and business men favor it in a very substantial manner and the seamen resort to it in large numbers for rest, entertainment or instruction. Sometimes 300 or 400 are gathered there at one time. The chaplain is much beloved in his work. The chaplain has been quite ill but is better.

Chesapeake Presbytery on 8th inst., declined to approve the request of the Second church Petersburg for the removal of Rev. S. K. Winn from the church at Culpepper C. H. to the Petersburg church named above. The following resolutions were adopted:

1st. The reasons for the translation do not seem to us sufficient.

2d. All the causes that led to Mr. W.'s settlement at Culpepper continue with undiminished force.

3d. Many other reasons have since arisen why the relation should not be dissolved.

At the solemn communion service held in the First Presbyterian church, in this city (Louisville) on last Sabbath, there were eleven additions to the communion of the church, seven by certificate and four by examination. The daily meetings commenced on last Tuesday night were well attended in spite of the inclemency of the weather. They will be continued through this week and as many longer as is deemed advisable. The pastor elect, the Rev. E. O. Guerrant, will be assisted by the Rev. J. M. Evans, of Augusta, Ky.—Christian Observer.

Rev. J. W. Neil, pastor of the Presbyterian church of this city, last Sunday made a report to his congregation showing the results attendant upon his labors for the period of six years past past, in which time the church has been under his charge. During the year 1878 there have been added to the communion of the church 41 persons. Of these were by profession of faith and 30 by letter. Funds raised during the year $2,500. For the six years of his pastorate 170 accessions to the church were reported. Of these 100 were by letter and 70 on professions of faith. The number of baptisms administered, 71, and the total collections during that period, $15,000. Mr. Neil's pastoral visits will reach an average slightly above 500 per annum, a labor number of which have been to strangers and invalids. A movement is now on foot to improve the church building. It is calculated that the sum of $5,000 will finish the church and render it not only a comfortable but an attractive an imposing structure. It is believed that this amount will soon be obtained, when the work will be begun.—Daily Express, San Antonio.

Rev. A. T. Graybill writes to the Texas Presbyterian: I wrote to you about a month ago, giving you some account of a preaching tour that Mr. Chamberlain and I took up the Rio Grande. Leandro and I have just returned from another. Although the weather was exceedingly inclement, large congregations attended at the ranch of San Tuan, of which I spoke in my last letter. Ten (10) persons were baptized there on profession of their faith, among them the owner of the ranch and his wife. We felt that the power of the Lord was present. We believe that the Lord will make that a centre from which He will extend the kingdom in that vicinity. We also had preaching in two ranches on the Texas side of the river, where many are interested. We expected to extend our tour much farther but on account of the excessively bad weather, we deferred until our next monthly visit. Everywhere we hear of people desiring to know the truth. Let the people of the Lord pray for the work of the Gospel on the border that "the Word may have free course and be glorified."

NORTHERN.

Gleanings from our exchanges:

The Presbyterian church at St. Helena, Cal., has had an accession of forty persons, thirty-six on confession of faith in Christ.

The death of Rev. Wm. B. Sibbett, a member of the Presbytery of West Virginia, is announced. It occurred at his residence in Burnsville on the 11th of January, but no particulars are given.

We regret to announce that early on Monday morning the lecture-room and Sunday school room of the First Presbyterian Church at Newark, N. J., were burned out, and the rear of the church was also damaged. Loss $20,000.

The Emmanuel Congregational Church at Boston Highland was burned on last Monday. Loss $20,000.

The Rev. Dr. H. N. Brinsmade, D. D., a member of the Presbytery of Newark, died at his residence in Newark, N. J., on Saturday, the 18th inst., in the 80th year of his age. He passed the greater part of his ministry in Newark and its vicinity, and was greatly beloved by all classes of people for his purity of character and his long and useful work as a minister of Jesus Christ.

The Old South Church, Boston, has been supposed to be wealthy, but it proves to be poor. It worships in a half million dollar house in the Back Bay, but has been obliged to withdraw the aid of a small sum a year hitherto granted to the Chambers Street Chapel. As a result of this the latter fears that it cannot go on with its work, and the pastor, Rev. F. B. Allen, has been obliged to resign. It is rather a sad collapse. A council has been called to the rescue.

We cordially recommend Messrs. Mott & Campen to our city friends as dealers in good meats, and advise our friends in the country to see them or write to them when offering cattle for sale.

SECULAR NEWS.

The Burnside army bill is dead.

Judge James D. Halyburton, of Virginia, died on the 26th inst.

It is proposed to construct a floating dock in the harbor of Wilmington.

The members of the committee favoring the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department have completed a very voluminous report.

At a meeting of the citizens of Wilmington, held on the 25th inst., committees of the Chamber of Commerce, Produce Exchange, Board of Aldermen, Board of Trade, City Council, and citizens at large, were appointed to visit Raleigh and oppose the proposed extension of the Raleigh & Augusta Air Line Railroad from Sanford to Charlotte. A memorial for the repeal of the merchant's privilege tax was adopted at the same meeting.

In the State Senate the bill to remit the privilege tax was tabled, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table, which disposes of the matter.

The bill of both houses of the Legislature to extend the time for redeeming land sold for taxes was tabled on second reading.

An illicit distiller was captured in Chatham county recently, and his establishment broken up and property carried off. In Virginia five distilleries were captured and several arrests made.

The National Association of the Veterans of the Mexican War will meet in Baltimore, on the 22d of February, when a national organization is to be effected, and the Cape Fear section should be represented.

RAVEN ALPACAS.—In connection with Petty & Jones' advertisement, which appears in to-day's paper, we would remind our lady readers that a black dress can be worn at all seasons and on all occasions, and therefore there is great economy in such purchases.

WORTHY OF ATTENTION.

The following, written from Chapel Hill to the Raleigh Observer, January 18, 1878, proclaims its own importance:

MESSRS. EDITORS: Permit me to urge your farmer readers to avail themselves of the advantages offered at the Experiment Station for the free testing of seeds of all kinds. Our State papers are beginning to contain numbers of advertisements of garden seeds, &c., for sale. Let our farmers send a sample paper of their purchases this spring to the Station; they will be tested for them, and they will receive a certificate reporting the quality and germinating power, and also the per centage of weed seeds mixed with them. The only expense will be a three-cent stamp. Send samples of garden seeds, grass seeds, clover seed, &c., &c.

Also let me again call attention to the free testing of chemicals at the Station. Send for circulars and directions for sampling.

Yours sincerely,
A. R. LEDOUX.

We copy the following from the Baltimore Sun, a marked copy of which was sent to us:

TEA-GROWING IN THE SOUTH.—Mr. M. Gillett Gill, of the firm of Messrs. Martin Gillett & Co., of Baltimore, will leave for the tea districts of the South to-day, for the purpose of inquiring into the practicability of the growth and manufacture of tea in this country. He bears with him the following complimentary letter from Wm. G. Le Duc, commissioner of agriculture:

"To the Growers of Tea Plants in the South: The bearer of this, Mr. M. Gillett Gill, of the firm of Messrs. Martin Gillett & Co., Baltimore, has had great experience in the manipulation of tea, not only in China and Japan, but last spring successfully manufactured tea of a superior quality from leaves grown in Washington and, South Carolina. Mr. Gill visits the tea districts of the South for the purpose of inquiring into the practicability of its growth and manufacture, and will cheerfully give valuable information to all interested in the growth of the plant. I trust this voluntary visit of Mr. Gill in the interest of American tea will be of advantage to those who have devoted their attention to this most important industry."

Among the places in the South where tea plants are grown from shrubs sent from Washington are Society Hill, Georgetown, Charleston, Newberry county, and Columbia, S. C., Windsor, N. C., Central Georgia, Nashville, Tenn., Lake City, Fla., and near other points in the belt of Southern States. Their value has never been utilized, and the intention of the visit is to investigate with a view of showing that as good tea can be grown in the South as in China.

PRO-RE-NATA MEETING OF MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Presbytery met, and was constituted with prayer by Moderator.

Present Rev. S. H. Chester, Moderator, Rev. Dr. Miller, Rev. E. H. Harding, and Ruling Elders, C. Scott, from the First and J. B. Rankin from the Second church, Charlotte. J. B. Rankin was elected clerk.

Dr. Miller stated the object of the meeting to be to change the time for the spring sessions of Mecklenburg Presbytery, and gave as a reason for the change the fact that Concord Presbytery was to meet in the same neighborhood on the same day, and moved that the meeting of Mecklenburg be changed to Friday before the 1st Sabbath in May at 11 o'clock, which motion was unanimously carried.

Adjourned with prayer to meet at Castanea Grove church, on Friday before the 1st Sabbath in May, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

J. B. RANKIN, Clerk pro tem.

In Concord, N. C., Jan. 8th, 1879, Miss MARY LOU, daughter of Mr. R. W., and Mrs. Ann Allison.

In the death of this young lady, strong and tender ties have been severed, and a whole community feels the pang of sorrow.

A beautiful light has gone out in a Christian home and the Church has lost one of its most useful and devoted members.

To a character marked by simplicity, purity and elevation, were added the richer and more beautiful charms of divine grace as its crown and glory.

With her religion was a principle to shape and govern conduct; a life to be lived and those who knew her most intimately most highly honored the noble inspiration of her conduct and life.

Her life was a lovely morning and gave promise of a splendid day, but alas! while the freshness and beauty of morning still lingered the deep shadow fell.

"She died in beauty! like a rose
Blown from its parent stem
She died in beauty! like a pearl
Dropped from a diadem.

She lives in glory! like the stars
Bright jewels of the night;
She lives in glory like the sun
When at meridian height."

L. McK.

In Concord, N. C., Jan. 12th, 1879, ROBERT, only son of Capt. S. E., and Mrs. Esther White, of Fort Mill, S. C.

"It is well with the child." "Safe in the arms of Jesus." Out of the reach of all suffering, of all temptation and of all sin.

"Gone, but not lost,
A treasure but removed."

L. McK.

On the 18th of January, 1879, in Yanceyville, N. C., Dr. N. M. ROAN, in the 76th year of his age.

Dr. Roan was for many years an earnest and devoted ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church. He had been in declining health for several months previous to his last illness, but was, about Nov. 1st, attacked with acute pneumonia.

Through a long and painful season of sickness, though receiving every attention which medical aid and the tender devotion of his own family could suggest, he continued slowly to decline until all hope of his recovery was gone, yet through it all his resignation to the divine will, his patience under suffering, and his humble faith and hope in Christ, became more and more marked. He retained his mental faculties to the very last, giving minute directions about all his earthly matters, and often gathered his family around him to pray for them and give them his parting counsels. He waited the Master's will, with a quiet composure and unshaken trust that made his chamber a sanctuary of peace and disarmed death of all its terrors. His dying testimony to the preciousness of Christ as a Saviour, will always be a source of comfort to the mourning household of which he was the loved and honored head. Dr. Roan had spent almost his professional life where at last he died. He was skillful as a physician; dignified, courteous and genial as a man; affectionate and kind as a husband and parent; and as a ruling elder was zealous, wise, faithful and exemplary; ever abounding in the work of the Church and a living example to the flock. He has left the community, the Church and his own family to mourn his loss, but he has exchanged the scenes of earth for the glories of heaven; the Church on earth for the Church above and the couch of lingering sickness for the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

"How blest the righteous when he dies!"

H. T. D.

Near Duplin Road, N. C., in the Rockfish congregation, December 11th, 1878, Mrs. CATHARINE CARR, wife of Barnet Carr.

She was a member of the Rockfish church from her youth and leaves an aged husband, with whom she has lived nearly 59 years, and many friends and relations to mourn her loss. She was one of eight Boney brothers and sisters among whom there had been no death for 59 years. She had nine children, forty-six grand-children, and twenty-five great-grandchildren.

CATARRH
Is a terrible disease. Its fearful effects are corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. Thousands, not knowing the great danger in neglecting this disease, die with consumption. In a few years or months it may rapidly develop, and quick consumption announce it is too late.
CONSUMPTION The terror of humanity that yearly carries thousands to an untimely grave, not sparing the young, the talented, nor the beautiful.
ASTHMA which makes life so miserable its victims almost wish for death.
Minister's Sore Throat, Catarrhal Deafness, and BRONCHITIS the advance guard heralding the near approach of consumption.—For these and all Pulmonary Diseases, Dr. M. W. Case's Treatment by the use of his
CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANTS IS PLEASANT, THOROUGH, AND SUCCESSFUL. SATISFACTION always GUARANTEED.
Balsams and cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar that the mere breathing vaporizes them into a dense smoke. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. As the oils and balsams condense on the air passages and lungs, their capacity is wonderfully enlarged and the hollow chest soon becomes rounded and full.
HOME TREATMENT sent to any part of the United States or Canada, to be returned if not satisfactory.
To consumptives beyond the possibility of cure the Inhalants always give great relief, and often cure cases considered hopeless. CATARRH is readily cured by breathing the vapor and forcing it into the diseased cavities of the head and out of the nose, and is the only method by which this terrible and almost universal disease can be permanently cured. For terms, call or write.

FOR THE FAMILY.

If Only Mothers Knew.

BY HELEN RICH.

If only mothers knew, she said,
How hungry children are for love,
Above each virgin little bed
A mother's lips would prove,
How sweet are kisses that are given
Between a rosy mouth and heaven.

If only my mamma would kneel,
As your dear mother, every night,
Beside her little girl, to feel
If all the wraps are folded tight,
And hold my hands her elbow fair
Between my cheeks and her soft hair:

And looking in my dreaming eyes
As if she saw some lovely thing;
And smiling in such fond surprise
On all my hopes of life that spring
Like flowers beneath her tender gaze.
I could not stray in evil ways.

I would not wound the gentle breast
That held me warm within its fold;
My mother's love would still be best,
However sad, or plain, or old;
And even though the world forsake,
I'd love her for her love's dear sake.

The Little Brown Tag.

BY ELEANOR KIRK.

She would run away. You see, she didn't know any better, and I suppose couldn't understand why a little girl could not go where she pleased. There was so much more room out of doors than there was in the house, and Nellie though not three years old, was very fond of blue sky and sunshine. Then, the sparrows never came into the house, and Nellie had an idea that the birds and gay-tinted butterflies had fluttered down from heaven for her especial pleasure. The neighbors sometimes called her "The Little Brown," and papa frequently called her his "little Brown bird," because she was so small and had such funny ways with her. Now, Nellie had large grounds to play in, but she imagined that the high fences kept a good many of the birds and butterflies out.

To be sure she had dolls, and all the playthings she asked for, but nothing was half so nice as the great out doors. So it happened that whenever this baby girl felt like it, and got a chance, she was sure to run away. Mamma and nurse could'nt be watching all the time, as there were more little Browns besides Nellie to be taken care of. At last mamma hit upon a plan that she thought might be of some use. She took a pasteboard card and wrote on it "Nellie Brown, No. —— Washington Avenue, Brooklyn," and every morning when Nellie was dressed this card was fastened securely to her back. For a whole week this little bundle of mischief seemed perfectly contented at home but one beautiful summer afternoon Miss Nellie strolled down into the garden. The coachman had neglected to close the back gate, and out she went.

Oh! what fun this was! Nellie's flaxen curls PITT——stood out straight as she bounded down the street. Where was she going? Nowhere in particular, but everywhere. She felt as if all the air and all the sky were hers, and she could do as she pleased. She had been brought back so many times that she hardly stopped running till she reached one of the entrances to Fort Greene. She sauntered in till she came to a seat under a tree, and there fell fast asleep—of course she did—for the "little Brown bird" was all tired out.

The first thing she knew she was awakened by a rough hand on her shoulder, and a rough voice said, "What are you doing here, little girl?" Then Nellie rubbed her sleepy eyes and looked up to see who it was. There stood a horrible man, so dirty, ragged and wicked looking that it is no wonder the child began to cry. "Come along with me," he said. "I'll give you some candy and some nice ice cream in a minute."

Then Nellie caught sight of a policeman. She had been taught that little girls always had a friend in a policeman, and when she saw his blue coat and brass buttons she screamed just as loud as she could. Oh! how that police did run. You would have laughed to see him pick Nellie up in his arms; but the tramp didn't laugh, I can tell you. I'll tell you what he did do: he ran as fast as his legs would carry him.

"Now, little girl, where do you live?" said the officer.

"Look on my back!" said Nellie, and then he put her down on a seat and examined the little Brown Tag. Of course she got home all right, and the policeman laughed all the way there. I suppose 'twas funny; but Nellie has never run away since.

Paganini.

The violin is a wonderful instrument in the hands of a master. In its power of expression, its purity and fineness of tone, it ranks next to the cultivated human voice. There have been many famous performers on this instrument, but Paganini stands alone the most wonderful violinist the world has ever heard. And he had won this fame before he was sixteen years old.

Nicholas Paganini was born at Genoa, Italy, February 18, 1784. When he was only four years only his father put a violin into his hands, and made him practice upon it from morning till night. Sitting at his parent's feet on a little stool, Paganini obediently scraped away, learning his scales and intervals. He entered into the work cheerfully, and took great interest in his studies, but this did not lessen his father's rigor. The slightest fault was punished severely. Sometimes, food was denied the little fellow, in punishment for a mistake which any learner might have made. The delicate, sensitive constitution of the child was injured beyond repair by such treatment.

His mother, also ambitious for her son, worked upon his imagination and excited him to ever-renewed exertions by telling him that an angel had appeared to her in a vision, and had assured her that he should outstrip all competition as a performer on the violin.

Even at this early age the bent of Paganini's mind was toward the extraordinary,—that is, he did not merely imitate those who before his time had played the violin, but struck out new ways for himself, making his instrument a greater puzzle to the unlearned than ever it had been before; and he astonished his parents, and received their hearty plaudits when, in departing from the common methods, he produced entirely new effects. His musical instinct seemed to have been only sharpened and strengthened by the close application imposed upon him.

Soon, the musical knowledge of the elder Paganini became insufficient for the growing abilities of his son, and other teachers were procured.

At eight years of age the little Nicholas performed in the churches, and at private musical parties, "upon a violin that looked nearly as large as himself." He also composed, at this time, his first "Violin Sonata." A year afterward he made what was considered his first appearance, or debut, in the great theater of Genoa, at the request of two noted singers,—Marchesi and Albertinotti.

Paganini's father took him, about this time, to see the celebrated composer, Rolla, who lived at Parma, hoping to obtain for the boy the benefit of Rolla's instruction for a little while. But the composer was sick, and could not see his visitors. The room in which they were seated was next to the sick man's bed-chamber, and it so happened that he had left his violin there, together with the copy of a new work he had just finished. Little Nicholas, at his father's request, took up the violin to see what the music was like. He began at the beginning and executed the entire work at sight without a single mistake, and so well that the sick composer arose from his bed that he might see what master-hand had given him so agreeable a surprise. Rolla, on hearing the object of their visit assured the father that he could add nothing to the young artist's acquirements, and recommended other noted teachers.

Nicholas and his father then went about the country through the principal cities of Lombard, after which they returned to Genoa, where the youthful performer was again subjected to those daily toils which had been forced upon him before with such heartless rigor; but this bondage was not to be prolonged.

At fourteen he was allowed to go on a short tour with an elder brother, and at fifteen he ran away and began to travel on his own account. Relieved from the control of his too exacting father, his mind reacted from its long slavery, and he fell into bad ways of living. But after a while his affection for his father led him to return home. Having saved a sum of money equal to about fifteen hundred dollars, he now offered a portion of it to his parents. But his exacting father demanded the whole, and Paganini, to keep peace, gave up the greater part of the hard-earned money.

The young man now began another tour, visiting many parts of Italy, and everywhere meeting with unbounded success. But I am very sorry to say that he allowed his great popularity to turn his head, so that he became very arrogant, head-strong, and, in various ways, led an unworthy life. Intemperance soon was added to his infirmities, and he was even imprisoned for a time on account of troubles caused by his wild excesses.

Paganini possessed a generous and sympathetic nature, as the following anecdote plainly proves: One day, while walking in the streets of Vienna, Paganini saw a poor boy playing upon a violin, and, on entering into conversation with him, learned that he maintained his mother and a number of little brothers and sisters by what he picked up as a traveling musician. Paganini at once gave him all the money he had about him; and then, taking the violin, began to play, and, when a great crowd had gathered and become spell-bound by his wonderful playing, he pulled off his hat and made a collection, which he gave to the poor boy amid the acclamations of the multitude

There are four strings on a violin, as every one knows, and ordinary players find it necessary to use them all; but Paganini astonished the world by his performances on only one string,—the fourth, or largest. Upon this he could produce three perfect octaves, including all the harmonic sounds, and from it he brought forth the sweetest melodies.

After traveling through many countries, creating the greatest wonder and admiration wherever he went, he returned to his native land. He suffered all his life from ill-health, and although he had become a very wealthy man, his last days were sad enough; for he was greatly troubled with law-suits and ill-health.

As one of his biographers says: the precious flame of life was too dearly expended on a perfection that allowed nothing else to be perfected. In becoming the absolute master of his instrument, he became its slave. But the success of his life's purpose was complete. He accomplished his one object, and history declares him to have been the greatest of all violinists, past or present. He died at Nice on the 27th of May 1840, leaving a fortune equal to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars.—James H. Flint, St. Nicholas.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Irish Wit.

There are two kinds of Irish wit—the intentional and the unintentional. Of this latter there is an absolute limitless supply, afforded by the redundancy of metaphor and illustrations common to the national mind, and productive of absurdities and hyperboles delightful to study. Take the peroration, for instance, of a clergyman describing the joyful death of the Christian: "My brethren, he leaps into the very arms of death and makes his hollow jaws ring with hallelujahs" And the destiny of the wicked: "When death with his quiver full of arrows, mows them down with the besom of destruction." A poor-law guardian in the north of Ireland very lately surpassed these flowers of rhetoric when he addressed his audience: "Mr Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board: The eyes of Europe are upon us. The apple of discord has been flung into our midst, and if it be not nipped in the bud it will burst into a conflagration which will deluge the world!" At all times the richness of Irish phraseology borders on the grotesque An English squire would be amazed at receiving the good wishes expressed once to our knowledge to an Irish one: 'Long life to your honor forever, and long may you live in splender;' or a petition addressed to the writer's father, couched in these words: "As I am shortly going to make my exit from this vale of tears, I hope your honor will send me two-and-sixpence by return of post" A school of poor children having read in their chapter in the Bible the denunciations against hypocrites, who "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," were afterwards examined by the benevolent patroness, Lady E——, as to their recollection of the chapter "What in particular was the sin of the Pharisees, children?" asked the lady. "Aiting camels, my lady," was the prompt reply.

Robinson Crusoe in Persian.

About a quarter of a century ago certain Anglo-Indian gentlemen at Calcutta formed themselves into a society for the promotion of vernacular literature in Lower Bengal, and one of their first steps was to employ a qualified person to translate De Foe's work into Bengali. Here, however, a difficulty occurred. Some of the members had adopted the idea that the natives would never enter heartily into the spirit of Crusoe's adventures unless they were adapted to the Hindoo intellect. It was gravely proposed that several of the main incidents should be modified to suit dwellers on the shore of the Bay of Bengal. Crusoe himself was to be the offspring of American parents, who had mercantile houses at Calcutta and Dacca. Their son was to embark from the former city, and after taking a preliminary trip or two to Rangoon and the Straits Settlements, was to be wrecked, conveniently, on one of the Nicobar or Andaman Islands. These places being then entirely in the possession of savages, and no ships ever touching at them except to be wrecked, the hero of the tale might be supposed to remain there unnoticed for eight-and-twenty years, until Will Atkins and his mutinous companions could be represented by some loafers or runaway English sailors from a merchantman bound from Madras or Melbourne. Fortunately this extraordinary attempt at revision was resisted by the good sense of a majority of the society. They reasoned that the story of the island, the savages, the plantation, the tent and the man Friday was such as to come home to men of any nation or language capable of taking pleasure at all in literary work; and so De Foe was translated into Bengali without Bowdler. The event proved that the majority were right. Other well known works in a Bengali dress, such as the "Exiles of Siberia," and Lamb's "Tales of Shakespeare," have had no chance against De Foe. Natives of Bengal, who, with the exception of the Mahommedans from Chittagong and Noacolly, are not given to seafaring ways, and rarely purchase any book except any almanac, have taken keen pleasure in Crusoe's adventures, and the work, we believe, has gone through more than one edition.

Popular Errors Regarding Papyrus.

In Adams' "Roman Antiquities" the Egyptian papyrus plant is described as about ten cubits high, and as having several coats or skins, one above another like an onion, which coats were peeled off with a pin in the process of paper making. In Smith's "Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities," it is said that the papyrus tree grows in swamps to the height of ten feet or more, and paper was prepared from the thin coats or pellicles which surround the plant. Liddell & Scott's Greek Lexicon says that paper was made of the inner bark of the papyrus. And similarly other works of high character, encyclopedias and the like, give a false account of this interesting plant.

Calling attention to these misstatements in the Library Journal, Mr. Ezra Abbott, of Harvard University, says: "The papyrus plant (Cyperus papyrus of Linnæus, or Papyrus antiquorum, Willd) belongs to the family of Cyperaceæ or Sedges; it is an endogenous plant, with a triangular stem; and to talk about its "inner bark" and "layers" like the peel of an onion is a simple absurdity. One might as well speak of "the inner bark" of a stalk of Indian corn or of a bulrush. The error has originated from ignorance or forgetfulness of the elements of botany, and the consequent misinterpretation of the passage in Pliny (Hist. Nat. xiii. 11-13, al 21-27), which is our chief source of information about the ancient manufacture of paper from this plant. One of the words which Pliny uses to describe the very thin strips into which the cellular substance of the stem was sliced in making the paper is philyra, which strictly denotes the inner bark of the linden tree, also employed as a writing material. Hence the papyrus has been conceived of as an exogenous plant with its outer and inner bark, and has actually been called a 'tree." The botanists of course have not made such a mistake

Mr. Abbott points out a still more absurd mistake in the English translation of Guhl & Koener's "Life of the Greeks and Romans," which says: "The stalk . . . was cut longitudinally, after which the outer bark was first taken off; the remaining layers of bark, about twenty in number (philyræ), were carefully severed with a pin; and, afterward, the single strips plaited crosswise; by means of pressing and permeating the whole with lime water the necessary consistency of the material was obtained." The word mistranslated lime water is leimwasser, which means glue water.

How Sir Walter Scott Saved the One Pound Notes.

The Scotch resisted the destruction of their favorite currency with the fiery zeal with which, a century before, the Irish had refused to receive 'Wood's halfpenney." Every man with Scotch blood in his veins or Scotch brogue on his tongue was ready to believe that the measure would ruin Scotland. Few Scotchmen, however, had either the skill or the knowledge which would have enabled them to explain their views upon the subject. Either from ignorance or indifference Melville had assented to the obnoxious scheme. The fifty Scottish members represented, it must be recollected, Lord Melville. How was it possible for Scotland to make herself heard except through Lord Melville? The answer came from a quarter which no one could disregard. A proposal to stop £1 notes roused the patriotism of the "Wizard of the North." Scott was under obligations to the Scotch backers for the consideration which they had shown him during his distress. His strong Scotch prejudices were moved by what he thought an injustice to Scotland, and he probably longed for sterner work than "Woodstock" —work which would carry him out of his troubles and compel him to forget his own embarrassments. These various considerations induced him for the moment to throw aside the novel, and adopt the character of "Malachi Malagrowther,' a Scotch tradesman. "Malachi Malagrowther" had no great pretensions to economical knowledge, but he had an inexhaustable fund of humour, and he was a Scotchman to the backbone. He complained that he had discovered a deliberate design on the part of England to affront Scotland; and all his fellow countrymen believed him. He saw a confirmation of his suspicions in the suppression of the Board of Customs in Edinburgh, and its consolidation with the London Board. He declared that the substitution of sovereigns for notes would fill Scotland with a new race of highwaymen. Arguments of this character would have little weight in a grave assembly of politicians; but were exactly suited to feed the flame which was burning from one end of Scotland to the other. It was in vain that Croker, the Secretary of the Admiralty, the ablest literary man in Lord Liverpool's Administration, writing under the name of the "Bradwardine Waverley," endeavored to reply to "Malachi Malagrowther." It was possible to answer "Malachi Malagrowther's" arguments; it was impossible to resist his humor. The Ministry had to abandon the intention which they had formed of extending to Scotland their scheme of suppressing small notes in England. In the same three months in which the great reverse had fallen on him, and in which he had learned for the first time the fatal nature of his wife's illness, Scott had added a new leaf to his laurel crown, and had won his great political triumph. Single handed he had encountered the Ministry, and single-handed he had beaten them"—Spencer Walpole's History of England.

Revolution in Venezuela.

Mr. Bryan, of Duplin, has introduced a bill to canal Goshen swamp.

Diplomatic intercourse has been resumed between Hayti and France.

Senator McEachern, of Robeson, advocates draining Big Swamp in that county.

The insurgents in the French colony of New Caledonia have been cooped up and captured.

An official report received at Madrid states that cholera is increasingly prevalent in Asia Minor.

J. D. Stanley, of Wilmington, has invented a machine to tighten bands on cotton bales while they are being compressed.

Sherman says the bill introduced into the U. S. Senate to pay arrearages of pensions will take $150,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Davidson College has applied for incorporation as a town, with Rev. W. P. Williams as mayor until a mayor is regularly elected.

Gov. Z. B. Vance was elected U. S. Senator from North Carolina on Wednesday last. Call has been elected from Florida, Vest from Missouri, Voorhes from Indiana, from Illinois Logan, from Michigan Matt. Carpenter, from New York Conkling, and Cameron from Pennsylvania.

Mr. C. V. Pridgen, of Pender county, took the steamboat for Wilmington, at a point about 25 miles above the city on Thursday night last. He was apparently in health and cheerful spirits on retiring at 12 P. M., but was found dead in bed next morning. His death, it is supposed, was from heart disease.

The U. S. Senate passed unanimously the bill for refunding the National debt. The bill to amend the patent laws also passed. The Committee on Education and Labor recommend the appropriation of $250,000 as a perpetual fund to aid in the education of the blind in the United States through the American Printing House for the Blind.

In the United States Circuit Court at Jacksonville, Fla., on the 28d inst., Judge Settle sentenced the Brevard County Canvassing Board, convicted of making false returns of the election. Lee, the county clerk, was sentenced to three years, and Wright and Johns, Sheriff and Justice of the Peace, respectively, to one year each in the Albany penitentiary. Lee is also State Senator from Brevard county. All the other election cases have been continued to the May term of the court.

The trial of the Arlington case was begun in the U. S. Circuit Court at Alexandria, Va., on the 22d inst. A jury was empanelled, and the plaintiffs proved ownership and possession of the estate by the late G. W. P. Custis, and its devise by him to his grandson, G. W. C. Lee the plaintiff in the case, its occupation by the Government and the service of suits of ejectment. The probate of the will of Mr. Custis was also introduced. The defendant intimated the intention to prove the title of the Government by the certificates issued by the District Tax Commissioner, under an act of Congress for the sale of property in the insurrectionary districts in default of the payment of taxes.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE,

MECKLENBURG CO. N. C.,

1878–'79.

THE NEXT COLLEGIATE YEAR BEGINS ON THURSDAY, September 12th, 1878, and ends June 12th, 1879. It is divided by a recess of about ten days, embracing Christmas and New Year's-day, into two Terms.

The necessary expenses for the entire year, exclusive of clothing, traveling expenses, and pocket money, vary from $225 to $250.

There are three fully organized Courses of Instruction:

1. The CLASSICAL COURSE, occupying four years.

2. The SCIENTIFIC COURSE, occupying three years

3. The ECLECTIC COURSE, designed for those who do not wish to take a regular course but to pursue special studies.

Applicants for any class will be received at any time during the year.

Davidson College is on the Railroad, midway between Charlotte and Statesville.

Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY.

There is no comparison between it and the common slow acting porous plaster. It is in every way superior to all other external remedies including liniments and the so-called electrical appliances. It contains new medicinal elements which in combination with rubber, possess the most extraordinary pain relieving, strengthening and curative properties. Any Physician in your own locality will confirm the above statement. For Lame Back, Rheumatism, Female Weakness, Stubborn and Neglected Colds and Coughs, diseased Kidneys, Whooping cough, affections of the heart, and all ills for which porous plasters are used, it is simply the best known remedy. Ask for Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster and take no other. Sold by all druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent on receipt of price, by Seabury & Johnson, 21 Platt Street New York.

PULVERMACHER'S ELECTRIC BELTS AND BANDS

Are self-applicable to any part of the body, for the speedy and effectual cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Female Complaints, Nervousness, General Ill-Health, Wasting Decay, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Spinal Diseases, Indigestion, And other chronic ailments.

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.

[Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 21, 1878.]

"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and blood; secondly, for its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt be not quite in the right place, it can be very easily readjusted so as to cover the parts affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfection, has been hailed with delight, not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment, and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession, who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."

PULVERMACHER'S ELECTRIC BELTS AND BANDS

are indorsed and approved by the most eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, and by well-known writers, who refer to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands, in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

PIETY THE MAINSPRING OF A MINISTER'S USEFULNESS.

MR. EDITOR—We hear a great deal—and we think rightly—of talents and learning as important in the Christian ministry. We regard a thorough theological education as indispensable in this sacred profession, and that Presbyteries make a great mistake and incur hazardous risks in licensing and ordaining as ministers of the Gospel those who are not intellectually qualified for this high office. Years ago we maintained these views in several articles on this subject furnished to another paper, nor have we any disposition to take back one word, or to modify one sentiment then presented.

Now these talented ministers are the ones wisely sought for by churches for pastors and teachers, and it is all right when this inquiry is secondary to the inquiry for exemplary piety. We have seen men in the ministry whose talents and learning were in high reputation, but whose piety was less prominent; men who had cultivated their minds instead of their hearts; who had rejoiced in their strength to run the race of race of competition in intellectual pursuits more than to "run with patience the race set before them" as ministers; who have dazzled rather than edified; have been admired rather than followed in the way of Christ's steps; have stood erect and tall among men, but have not soared heavenward in the fervor of a holy life, and who, if so happy as to arrive in glory, will be found sitting, not by the side of Paul, but among "the least in the kingdom of heaven."

We have also seen the Gospel minister who had talents fitted to command respect, and attainment the result of conscientious industry, but whose pretensions were modest and whose retiring disposition forbade the sounding of the trumpet of popular applause before him. The thoughtless man of the world who takes a seat in his church, from curiosity perhaps, goes away thinking him quite a common preacher because he "does not play well on an instrument"—in other words, is not eloquent. And yet there are some facts respecting this preacher deserving notice. Let the fastidious hearer, fond of display, judge and pronounce upon him as he pleases; there are conversions of sinners from the errors of their ways occurring in his congregation, it may be, every week. Almost every season for the administration of the Lord's Supper finds one, two, five and perhaps ten, "confessing Christ before men." Hundreds sit down to the table from which he dispenses the memorials of a Saviour's love. A church of plain, exemplary, prosperous Christians has grown up and is increasing under his ministry, and exerts a good influence upon those around it. You see an attentive assembly in the sanctuary. A thoughtful silence is observed by them as they retire to their homes Sabbath after Sabbath. The deportment of such as you meet during the week is marked with thoughtfulness and sobriety, and the moral habits of those among them who make no profession of religion are manifestly influenced by the same powerful cause. Putting these and other like things together you ask, What is the secret? You will know in that great day of revelations, when He who searches the heart and all hidden things discloses the secrets of that minister's study and closet, and by the light of that day introduces you into the sacred and now unknown interior of his character. Men of the world know little about those "princes who have power with God and prevail."

Take another case, and we are glad to know there are some few such: A man who stands confessedly high in the catalogue of great and learned men, and whose piety equals, perhaps exceeds his talents and learning, and whose influence and usefulness are in proportion. After estimating properly the instrumentality of his talents and learning, we undertake to say still that his piety is the mainspring of his usefulness. Are his reasonings cogent? It is because he puts forth in them "the wisdom that comes from above." Are his conceptions of truth clear and powerful? it is because he is taught by the Spirit, and because God's high thoughts, set before him in the word of inspiration, and cleared to his mind by the teachings of divine grace, are the matter of his conception. Is he eloquent? it is because "his lips have been touched as with a live coal from off the altar." Is he successful in winning souls to Christ? it is not so much because he is a man of talents and learning and eloquence—though these are all important—as that he is a man of humble piety, and this is indispensable, to whose instrumentality this is to be attributed. It is on the wings of the heavenly Dove that he rises, and with the strength of faith that he soars towards heaven.

These things, then, we regard as true: A minister may be what is called a great man, and yet not be a very useful man, not even a pious man. A minister may be a man of ordinary talents and attainments and yet be an eminently holy and useful man. And a minister may outstrip thousands in attainments and usefulness, from the primary cause, that piety outstripped both their talents and his.

Ministers, then, are not to be estimated mainly on the ground that they are admired by men of the world as talented and learned. Once a man said to his friend, "Why did you take me to hear your Dr. —— to-day? He is a very ordinary preacher, and his sermon mere common place." A few days passed, and it appeared that the underrated preacher of that day was instrumental in the awakening and conversion of six or eight persons, who were listening to Dr. —— at the same time with this same captious remarker. The estimation of a preacher by his ability or lack of ability to hold the man of the world entranced for an hour with admiration of his talents solely, is injustice to the sacred office, and to Him who has sent ministers to be His ambassadors. It hinders also the efficiency of the truth on the hearer who makes such estimation—renders his attendance on the means of grace profitless, and tempts the devil to "catch the word sown in his heart"—till he has spent the Sabbath of his life, thrown away all the precious offers of salvation and only fitted himself to die a death of hopelessness and horror.

Once more: A minister's worth cannot be fairly estimated from his appearance on the Sabbath and in the pulpit. What is he out of it? On every other day of the week—in his social intercourse, in his use of opportunities to do his people good by private counsels, in his labors in the lecture room and prayer meeting, and in his use of special providences as occasions and means of instruction? Does he preach out of the pulpit as well as in it, and with the emphasis that a holy life gives? Does his "daily walk and conversation" furnish a commentary to help his people understand what he preaches on the Sabbath? There are numberless occasions in which a minister may be viewed and estimated; where he is not and cannot be the great man; where retired, unostentatious, industrious, affectionate usefulness is to be exercised, which will be seen and known only by his Omniscient Lord, and by the family circle in which he takes his seat for an hour; or perhaps only by some individual on whose head he presses some solemn truth of God's word. Robert McCheyne once rode by a furnace in full blast after dark. A parishioner at work ran out to speak to speak to him, and after a brief salutation, turning his attention to the blazing furnace, while the dim forms of the laborers were seen flitting between the darkness and the light, said, "John, what does that put you in mind of?" and rode off. It was an arrow of conviction to John, and, by the blessing of God, resulted in his being an active, useful Christian. In instances such as these—and there are thousands of them occurring in every minister's life—the faithfulness of Christian affection, and this earnest desire to perform duty and to do good are to be exercised; the discretion and judgment of one wise to lead souls in the way to heaven; the instructiveness of one who has drunk deep of the fountain of divine wisdom, "the Scriptures of Truth." Who thinks of a minister under such circumstances as a great man? He is greater in his simplicity and humble faithfulness as a teacher seated in the lecture room teaching a Bible class, or in the pastoral visit catechising the children, than Cæsar or Napoleon on his throne. The impression of his counsels of Christian tenderness, and his solemn warnings, give no opportunity for the hearer to think of the man. It is true greatness which causes him to think of God, truth, heaven, hell, eternity, and to feel, repent, believe and secure everlasting life.

The estimate of ministerial character and worth, then, is to be made principally by the entire devotedness and holy life he manifests in his Master's service, as seen in his whole manner of "watching for souls," and for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. He whose holiness before God has been the mainspring of his usefulness, elevating every talent, making sacred every attainment, and who has laid down all his honors from men at the foot of the Cross of Christ—his crown at last will be the brightest, his harp of praise loudest and sweetest, and his joy the liveliest, while he stands before the everlasting throne.

DO BAPTISTS BAPTIZE?

This question we answered in the negative, and the Biblical Recorder doesn't like it. We are not surprised, for in the Recorder of July 4, 1877, the Rev. Dr. Pritchard wrote: "The mode is essential to the ordinance, and nothing but immersion is baptism; therefore, persons poured upon or sprinkled are not baptized at all." This view and ours do not precisely coincide. We might pause to ask whether a person poured upon or sprinkled until immersion is effected would be baptized? Such a baptism would satisfy the definition.

But though the Recorder does not like our view, no attempt is made to meet it by direct argument. In its issue of January 22, it reproduces from the columns of the Examiner and Chronicle of the 2d inst., "for the benefit of J. W. P., the correspondent of the N. C. Presbyterian, and a few other Pedo-Baptist brethren," an extract from Plumptre's Exposition of Acts in the New Testament, commentary edited by Bishop Ellicott. Both these expositors are cited as maintaining that immersion had clearly been practiced by John, and was involved in the original meaning of the word. The symbolic meaning of the act required immersion, in order that it might be clearly manifested, and Rom. vi. 4, and 1 Pet. iii., 22, seem almost of necessity to imply the more complete mode. The swimming baths of Bethesda and Siloam, or the so-called fountains of the Virgin, near the Temple enclosure, or the bathing places within the Tower of Antonia, may well have helped to make the process easy"—in the case of the 3,000 of Acts ii, 41.

If such be the opinion of Plumptre and Ellicott, what then? There are others equally, and even more eminent, who maintain that John did not immerse; that dipping is not involved in the original meaning of the word; that the symbolic meaning of the rite does not require immersion; and that the dipping of 3,000 persons in the city of Jerusalem in the course of one afternoon, necessarily in the city reservoirs, and with the consent of a Christ-hating people, is an irrational supposition.

We have not the work from which this extract is taken, and therefore, not the means of verifying it, but we will presume that it is accurate. For what purpose is this testimony adduced?

By the citation of such testimony, the Recorder, can propose nothing more than to raise a presumption in favor of the opinions cited. This presumption rests upon the fact that "Drs. Ellicott and Plumptre are both learned Pedo-Baptists." Doubtless, the Recorder does not presume them right because they are Pedo-Baptists. The force of the presumption then rests in their learning. Then, because they are learned it is to be presumed that their pedo-baptism is scriptural. What value does the Recorder put upon this presumption based on the learning of his witnesses? And, again, the writer has Ellicott's commentaries upon the minor Epistles of Paul, and in these it appears that Ellicott holds to baptismal regeneration. In commenting upon Gal. iii, 27, the phrase "baptized into Christ," he writes: "The meaning of eis, with baptidzo, appears twofold; (a) 'unto,' object, purpose," and illustrates by Acts ii. 38. Turning to Acts ii. 38 we hear Peter preaching to the 3,000: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. Ellicott, therefore, believes with the followers of Alexander Campbell that baptism is unto, in order to,—for the remission of sins,—Eph. v. 26, and Titus iii. 5.—the 'washing of water' and 'the washing of regeneration,' he translates, 'laver of water, and regeneration.' He says: "The reference to baptism is clear and distinct (in both places), and the meaning of lontron (lavacrum, the containing vessel), indisputable." Now, I repeat, does the Recorder think the learning of Bishop Ellicott raises a strong presumption in favor of baptism for the purpose of the remission of sin, and if the Recorder does not think the presumption worth much, why should we?

If extent of learning, and skill and success as a dialectician, do create a strong presumption in favor of one's opinions, should not the mind of the Biblical Recorder, at least, be prepossessed with the opinions of a Bishop nearer home—the REV. H. B. PRATT.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

THE GREENSBORO CHURCH.

The city of Greensboro takes its name from the brave General Nathaniel Greene, the leader of the American troops at the battle of Guilford Court House, which was fought on the 15th of March, 1781. It has been the county seat of Guilford county since 1808. Previous to this time the court house was at Martinsville, five miles northwest of the present town.

In 1820, when the little village contained only about eighteen or twenty families, the Rev. Wm. D. Paisley opened a male academy. As this was in the neighborhood of Dr. David Caldwell's academy, the new institution had the advantage of being the successor of one of the most renowned schools in North Carolina.

As there was then no resident minister and no stated preaching in the village Mr. Paisley began preaching in the academy. After four years of labor a Presbyterian church was organized October 3, 1824, with twelve members, the Rev. John Witherspoon of Hillsboro presiding. Wm. R. D. Lindsay was elected Ruling Elder and five persons chosen trustees. But the church continued feeble in numbers for several years. In 1831, however, a pleasing change was effected. God visited this little flock with his blessing, and twenty-six members were added to its roll. Having thus gained additional strength, the following year (1832) a vigorous and successful effort was made to erect a house of worship. The lot—the site of the present church—was given by Mr. Jesse H. Lindsay, and so earnest were they that it was ready for use by August of the same year. At the same time Christopher Moring, Silas C. Lindsley, Wm. H. Cumming and G. D. Jordan were added to the session. The church now numbered thirty-eight members, and gave one hundred and fifty dollars to Mr. Paisley for his services half his time. Besides officiating as stated supply of the church, Mr. Paisley continued his school. The following year (1833) the Sabbath school was organized under Mr. Wm. H. Cumming, one of the elders, as superintendent.

In 1836 Mr. Paisley's school was superseded by the Caldwell Institute, under the care of the Orange Presbytery. This institute was conducted by the Rev. Alex. Wilson, D. D., a teacher of great eminence in his profession, the Rev. John A. Grotter, a distinguished mathematician and excellent scholar, with other efficient teachers. About the same time the Hon. Jno. M. Morehead established Edgeworth Female Seminary. Caldwell Institute ran a career of about ten years and Edgeworth thirty years. The pupils of both these schools generally attended the Presbyterian church, and Dr. Wilson and Mr. Grotter rendered valuable services to Mr. Paisley in conducting the services of the house of God.

In 1839 Mr. Wm. S. Rankin became an elder, and in 1842 Watson W. Wharton, Dr. D. C. Mebane and Dr. D. P. Weir were added to the list of the session.

The Rev. John A. Grotter was elected pastor of the Greensboro church Oct. 33, 1843, and having accepted the call was installed April 7th, 1844. From this time his connection with Caldwell Institute ceased, and his whole time was devoted to the care of his church. Its membership now amounted to seventy-two. In 1849 Ralph Gorrell, and Jesse H. Lindsey became ruling elders and James Sloan, Robert G. Lindsay, Andrew Weatherly, Milton Rose and Fenner Walker, deacons—the first in this church.

Mr. Grotter was an attractive and effective preacher, full of energy and zeal, and he taxed his powers to the utmost. After eight years of labor symptoms of declining health became visible. Wasting away under the influence of pulmonary consumption his useful life was closed in the utmost Christian composure, and unqualified resignation to the divine will, on the 21st of January, 1853. During the eight years of Mr. Grotter's pastorate the membership went up from seventy-two to one hundred and thirty-four, almost doubled. It was also during the period of his service (1846) that the present church building, capable of seating about five hundred persons, was erected. From and after 1851 the salary of the pastor was $1,000.

The Rev. John M. Sherwood, a native of Guilford county, who had just left the Theological Seminary, assisted Mr. Grotter from July 1st, 1852, and continued to supply the church until July 1st, 1854. At the latter date Mr. Sherwood went to Washington, Beaufort county, N. C., where he was ordained and installed pastor of that church, in December, 1854, Drs. Phillips, Wilson and Lacy officiating.

In 1853 the church called the Rev. J. Henry Smith, Principal of the Samuel Davies Institute, Halifax, Va., and upon his declining, a call was made out July 26, 1854, for Rev. J. Jones Smyth, of Fayetteville Presbytery. As Mr. Smyth could not come at once, the church employed the Rev. Martin McQueen, a licentiate of Fayetteville Presbytery, for a time. Mr. Smyth was installed June 27th, 1855, Dr. Caruthers and Rev. C. K. Caldwell conducting the services. This pastorate continued only a few years, and was dissolved by the Presbytery Nov. 13, 1858, Mr. Smyth leaving Greensboro in Feb. 1859, to take charge of the church in Shelbyville, Indiana.

Left again without a pastor, the congregation again turned their eyes towards their former favorite, and Feb. 11, 1859, elected the Rev. J. Henry Smith, then the pastor of the church in Charlottesville, Va. Mr. Smith accepted this invitation, and reached Greensboro April 20, 1859. Orange Presbytery received him in June 1859, and installed him the 24th of July following, Dr. James Phillips, Rev. C. K. Caldwell and Rev. A. Currie performing the appointed services. This relation still continues, and has proved a blessing to the church.

A brief resume will show the progress of this church:

During Mr. Paisley's ministry the church was in a formative state, struggling into a vigorous life.

During the eight years of Mr. Grotter's pastorate, 112 members were added, or an average of 14 a year.

In the seven years of Mr. Sherwood's, Mr. McQueen's and Mr. J. Jones Smytho's service 116 were added, or an average of 16 4-7 a year.

During the 18½ years of Dr. J. Henry Smith's pastorate 463 members have been added, or an average of 25 a year.

The Elders of this church now are Jesse H. Lindsay, John C. Wharton, Charles J. Yates, Lyndon Swain and Junius I. Scales.

Deacons—James Sloan, Robert G. Lindsay, Andrew Weatherly, Robert P. Dick, W. S. Moore, and Wm. B. Bogart.

The Sabbath School teachers and pupils number about 200.

This account is mainly an abridgment of a history of Greensboro Church, prepared by Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D.

DO YOU HEAR THAT?

A New Orleans paper tells us of a printer who, when his fellow-workmen went out to drink beer, put in the bank the exact amount he would have spent if he had gone with them to drink. He did this for five years. He then looked up his bank account, and found that he had laid up five hundred and twenty-one dollars and eighty-six cents. Think about his success. In five years he had not lost a day because of sickness. Three out of five of his fellow workmen had in the meantime become drunkards. The water drinker bought out the printing office, and in twenty years from the time he began to put up his money, he laid aside a good many thousand dollars. The story teaches a lesson which every little boy should lay to heart.

A CHEERFUL HEART.

A merry or cheerful countenance was always one of the things which Jeremy Taylor said his enemies and persecutors could not take away from him. There are some persons who spend their lives in this world as they would spend their lives if shut up in a dungeon. Everything is made gloomy and forbidding. They go mourning and complaining from day to day that they have so little, and are constantly anxious lest what little they have should escape out of their hands. They look always upon the dark side, and can never enjoy the good that is present for the evil that is to come. This is not religion. Religion makes the heart cheerful; and when its large and benevolent principles are exercised, men will be happy in spite of themselves. The industrious bee does not complain that there are so many poisonous flowers and thorny branches in his road, but buzzes on, selecting the honey where he can find it, and passing quietly by the places where it is not. There is enough in this world to complain about and find fault with, if men have the disposition. We often travel on a hard and uneven road; but with a cheerful spirit, we may walk therein with comfort, and come to the end of our journey in peace.

I WILL COME.

"It may be in the evening,
When the work of the day is done,
And you have time to sit in the twilight
And watch the setting sun;
While the long bright day dies slowly
Over the sea,
And the hour grows quiet and holy
With thoughts of me;
While you hear the village children
Passing along the street,
Among the thronging footsteps
May come the sound of my feet.
Therefore I tell you: Watch
By the light of the evening star,
When the room is growing dusky
As the clouds afar;
Let the door be on the latch
In your home,
For it may be through the gloaming
I will come.

"It may be when the midnight
Is heavy upon the land,
And the black waves lying dumbly
Along the sand:
When the moonless night draws close,
And the lights are out in the house;
When the fires burn low and red.
And the watch is ticking lonely
Beside the bed:
Though you sleep, tired out on the couch,
Still your heart must wake and watch
In the dark room;
For it may be that at midnight
I will come.

It may be at the cock-crow
When the night is dying slowly
In the sky,
And the sea looks calm and holy,
Waiting for the dawn
Or the golden sun
Which draweth nigh;
When the mist are on the valleys, shading
The river chill,
And the morning star is fading, fading,
Over the hill;
Behold I say unto you: Watch;
Let the door be on the latch
In your home;
In the chill before the dawning,
Between the night and morning
I may come.

"It may be in the morning
When the sun is bright and strong,
And the dew is glittering sharply
Over the little lawn;
When the waves are laughing loudly
Along the shore.
And the little birds are singing sweetly
About the door;
With the long day's work before you,
You rise up with the sun,
And the neighbors come in to talk a little
Of all that must be done,
And remember that I may be the next
To come in at the door,
To call you from your busy work
For evermore.
As you work your heart must watch,
For the door is on the latch
In your room,
And it may be in the morning
I will come.

So I am watching quietly
Every day,
Whenever the sun shines brightly
I rise and say:
"Surely it is the shining of His face,"
And look unto the gates of His high place
Beyond the sea;
For I know he is coming shortly
To summon me;
And when a shadow falls across the window
Of my room.
When I am working my appointed task,
I lift my head to watch the door and ask
If He is come.
And the angel answers sweetly,
In my home,
"Only a few more shadows,
And He will come."

IN BATTLE.

Soldiers are agreed that, however brave a man may be, his feelings during the first quarter of an hour under fire are extremely disagreeable. Much of the reputation which Frenchmen won for that reckless valor called furia francese came from the utter inability of their young troops to stand steady during that first quarter of an hour under a rain of bullets, so that they would charge forward impetuously and break through the enemy's lines with their bayonets. This was all very well in the days of fighting at close range; but in these times, when regiments advance in open order, throwing out skirmishers by twos over a line which may extend for miles, a man has only to fire and obey the bugle about advancing or retreating. Ten minutes after the engagement has begun the field is generally so clouded with smoke that the soldiers cannot see how to take aim, and commence firing at random. Then it is that the men of good grit settle down to their work coolly. The first attack of nervousness caused by the whistle of bullets passes off, the shock occasioned by the fall of a comrade close to one's side is mastered, and that "tightness" of heart and dryness of throat, which are but the physical symptoms of the instinct of self-preservation, give place to a buoyancy of spirits and a desire to move forward. The bugle soon gratifies this wish by sounding an advance, and officers loom through the fog with an encouraging cry of "Forward." Probably a similar encouragement is being vouchsafed to the opposite forces at the self-same moment, for the tendency of two armies, during the first hour of battle, is always to march up on each other. Meanwhile the artillery batteries, placed at some distance behind the infantry lines, pound away ceaselessly, and the shells fly with a shrieking noise over the heads of the skirmishers. This is rather encouraging, for it familiarizes the men with that abominable whizz, which resembles nothing so much as the voice of the screech-owl, and it makes them think that the enemy have not got clever gunners. The fog of war begins when the infantry columns get within full range of the artillery. This may happen by accident, through the temporary moving up of a brigade or regiment to a part of the field where the iron hail is pouring; or it may be the result of precise aiming, when the artillery, being stationed on an eminence, command a full view of the enemy's positions. In such a case, the infantry, which is exposed, must be marched out of range with all possible expedition; for a single shell falling into the midst of a masked company is enough to knock it into disorder. But if six, ten or twenty shells fall in rapid succession, ploughing up the earth with a sloshing noise, throwing up clouds of choking, blinding dust, and strewing the ground with dead, then the men are apt to take fright, and will be pretty sure to do so if they feel that their officers are disconcerted. And now may occur one of the most critical moments of a battle—for it may chance that two regiments, or, what is worse, two brigades—get entangled; that is to say, a body of men moving off one part of the field to get out of fire, and to turn the enemy's positions if they can, may encounter another body coming in another direction. Both corps are acting under orders from their respective generals; and these generals may be two or three miles off, while the commander-in-chief is even further away. So the men come to a stand-still and get "clubbed," while their colonels or brigadiers are hastily conferring as to what had best be done; and if the gunners on the other side take a prompt advantage of the situation to limber their places round and fire away, there is nothing for it but to charge forward at a double (if there are reserves behind), or to retreat, which always disheartens the men. Many a battle has been lost or won on such a touch as this. That of Gravelotte, for instance, was carried by sheer force of intrepid numbers—regiment after regiment being sent up the slopes, through a raking fire of mitrailleuses and artillery, till the French gunners were fairly overwhelmed and driven from their pieces by German rifle-stocks. It was splendid fighting, but the carnage was horrible.

A grand moment in a battle is when the infantry, after moving forward continuously, find themselves on a part of the ground occupied by the enemy in the early part of the day. This does not always mean that the enemy have been routed, for they may have taken up new positions from strategical reasons; but the former conclusion is very often the correct one, and attendant circumstances help to show the soldier whether his side has got the advantage. If the ground be strewn profusely with rival dead, if gun carriages are lying about dismounted, if wagons of ammunition and stores have been abandoned—above all, if the enemy no longer return the fire of the advancing force—then the soldier knows that his own army corps at least has prevailed in one part of the field. Perhaps, however, the battle may be raging fiercely in other parts, and sometimes the sound of cannonading miles away may be heard by the soldiers of a particular corps for hours after they have performed their own share of duty by carrying everything before them.

When a corps have secured a position which they have orders to hold, the men stack their arms and proceed to an active forage for provisions and drink among the effects of the enemy. This never lasts long if a corps has its commissariat in order, for when soldiers have slaked their thirst and eaten something they are somewhat inclined to lie down on their backs; besides, in modern warfare parties are immediately told off with pickaxes and spades to throw up earthworks. Unless the methods of warring should be altered the soldiers of the future will all have shovels of some kind slung about them. As it is, a good general will entrench a position with surprising speed, so that in less than an hour after the enemy have forsaken a spot the advancing corps will have brought up its artillery, placed its batteries into position, and opened a lively cannonade to support the other corps. The sooner this is done the better, for a beaten army has been known to rally and return en masse to reattack a position which they had forsaken. This may give rise to a flank movement of the victorious forces, whose unengaged wings, bearing up to the assistance of the corps which has entrenched itself, cut the enemy's army in two and drives whole regiments forward to be made prisoners. If an entrenched corps be not reattacked its men may generally conclude that the enemy are being worsted all down the line, and numerous signs soon come to confirm this. Aides-de-camp scamper up with good news and orders to "stay where you are," the firing of musketry ceases, that of the cannon grows rarer and is soon one-sided, till the mounted officers, who are scanning the distance through their telescopes, begin to report that the enemy are in full retreat. By this time the day is on the wane, and in the evening air, sky rockets are sent up to show what positions the different corps of the victorious army have taken up—happy when these pale, twinkling lights start up at points which form a complete semi-circle or triangle, thereby denoting that the furthermost posts of the enemy have been occupied. Now tents are pitched and camp-fires lit; the regiments, paraded by companies, answer to the call of the muster roll; and, while the wounded are being cared for and the slain marked down, while the horses are being picketed, and the soup is cooking in the big iron pots, the soldiers talk with elation of the day's work, and rejoice to know that the telegraph wires have already flashed home the news that they have done their duty.—M. in Scottish-American Journal.

THE TWO STRONG ARMS.

A great scholar in Germany, who was anxious to find the right way to heaven, but for all his learning could not succeed, went one day to church. On his way he met a poor old man, to whom he wished "Good-morning." The poor man thanked him, but added, he did not exactly remember ever having a bad one. "Well, then, I wish you much luck." "I thank you, sir; but to tell the truth, I never yet have had bad luck." The scholar did not know what to make of the man, so he requested him to explain his meaning. "With pleasure," said the poor man. "I have never yet had a sorrowful morning; for if I am hungry, I praise God; if I am cold, I praise God; if it rain or snow, thunder or lighten—let the weather be what it may, I praise God; and am always joyful. And I have never had a bad week. I resign myself to my dear Lord and Saviour, and am sure He does nothing wrong. What He permits whether sweet or sour, joy or grief, I know is all for the best, and accept it with thanks and joy. 'All things work together for good to them that love God.'"

STATISTICS OF PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.—A conference is to be held in Edinburgh on the 14th and 15th ult., to consider this subject in its various aspects. The Churches to be represented are the Established Church of Scotland, Free Church of Scotland, United Presbyterian Church, Presbyterian Church of Ireland, Presbyterian Church of England, and the Statistical Committee of the General Presbyterian Council. Amongst the representatives are Professor Charteris, Rev. Dr. Scott, Rev. Mr. Park, Professor Leone Levi, Rev. Dr. MacEwan, Professor Blaikie, Messrs. Maclagin and Wood.

It is stated that, in consequence of the recent secessions of Anglican clergy to the Church of Rome, the Vatican is considering in what way it can secure a wider field of action for the Roman Catholic Church in England without offending against the existing laws. Instructions on this subject have, it is said, been sent to Cardinal Manning.

The Porte has refused to accept the repeatedly tendered resignation of the Armenian Patriarch, and has promised him to ameliorate the position of the Armenian Christians.

The Pope has sold the remaining ship of his navy, the Immaculate Conception, stationed at Toulon. The admiral and two captains who were aboard are superannuated.

During a recent Sabbath morning's service in the synagogue of Babrujisk, Russia, a band of roughs entered the building and violently attacked the congregants. The military were called in, but instead of restoring order they took an active part in the onslaught. The Jews defended themselves with great courage and a conflict ensued which lasted until midday. Six Jews were killed and thirty-seven wounded, while of their antagonists thirty-seven were also wounded. The leaders of the riot, being summoned before the magistrate, gave as an "apology" that they thought the Jews would not defend themselves on their Sabbath!

The bazaar which was held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle last week, in commemoration of Mr. Spurgeon's twenty-fifth ministerial anniversary, was concluded on Friday evening, and resulted in a total of nearly £2800. With the contributions of about £3000 already received, the result of £5000, which it was hoped to accomplish, was thus considerably exceeded; but as at least £6000 are needed to permanently endow the almshouses which Mr. Spurgeon's church supports, it was decided to reopen the bazaar for three further days this week, there being still a large surplus of goods for disposal. Mr. Spurgeon is better in health, and will leave for the south of France almost immediately. He will not preach again until his return. The reverend gentleman on Wednesday published the first sermon of a twenty-fifth volume, having issued a sermon a week for twenty-four years, making 1450 in all. On Wednesday night the aggregate of sales at the bazaar reached the sum of £3060. It is expected that the entire proceeds of the movement will reach over £6500.

The Jewish papers of Paris proclaim Gambetta to be an orthodox Jew and Lord Beaconsfield a heretic, though born in the faith.

MISCELLANY.

Gleaned from our exchanges:

THE KING OF SIAM.—That mighty potentate, the King of Siam, out-Mormons the Mormons by having 600 commissioned wives and 2,400 wives by brevet, all of them living in one vast palace in Bangkok. And the best of it is he gets along most amiably with the whole crowd, all the members of which are said to have much regard for him. The King of Siam must be a most remarkable person, and he is also said to be so advanced in his ideas that he did not go into mourning over the recent death of the sacred white elephant, though the demise of these creatures used to plunge the entire court in profound grief.

"Take your seats for Jerusalem," or its equivalent in Arabic, will soon be heard at Jaffa, for at least there seems to be a chance for a railway between these two places. The French company which obtained a firman several years ago for its construction has just sent out four engineers to go over the last survey, and if possible shorten the line it proposed, with a view of immediately breaking ground. Travelers say that the line will not only be a great comfort, but that something of the kind is rendered absolutely necessary by the wretched state of the road as maintained by the government. The journey from Jaffa to Jerusalem occupies ten hours on horseback. All merchandise is carried either on camels or mules. Ten thousand strangers, including the Eastern pilgrims now annually visit Jerusalem; and some improvement in the mode of traveling has long been felt. This France has the honor of supplying, as she has already that of constructing the first carriage road between Beyrout and Damascus.

OUR DANGER.

Not long since two of our ministers were conversing and the question of salary came up. One of them said: "I do not know what I shall do. My salary is already such that I am obliged to practice the closest economy, and I foresee a reduction. I do not know how I shall live unless I quit the regular work of the ministry and go into business." The reply of the other was to the same effect. Since then we have heard from a letter written by one of our most useful and successful ministers, in which he expressed the same fear. He is warmly attached to his people, and they express an equally warm affection for him. And yet a pastoral charge of long duration, which has been largely blessed through its whole course, is now in danger of disruption because the minister is not supported. A letter from a member of another church says there is grief and trouble in that congregation. They love their minister and are proud of him. Old and young, rich and poor, join in one sentiment and opinion. But his salary, never large, is falling into arrears and falling off till his people say they fear he will find it impossible to live on it. Another letter from a member of another church says that their pastor's salary has been reduced once in view of the hard times. This was by agreement between him and the church. It was thought that as all necessaries of life are cheaper than formerly he could live on less than they had been paying. But now there comes another decrease in the laborer's hire. There is a deficiency in the payment of the reduced amount promised. There is trouble in that church. They are fearing that poverty and straitness—the absolute want of means to live—will drive their pastor away.

These cases have not been hunted up. They have come to our knowledge in the ordinary course of conversations and correspondence on other matters.

An examination of the minutes of the General Assembly will show that the average of ministers' salaries are so small as to lead other men to wonder how they live. And it is a well known fact that the smaller salaries are seldom paid in full, and what is paid comes in after long delay.

These facts have brought to our mind a question that, though an old one, was never more urgent than now:

"How shall these difficulties and dangers be met?" They must be met and the dangers must be put away or harm and loss irretrievable will come upon the church. And let us take occasion here to say that the interest of the pastors in this question is less than the interest of the church. To the minister it is a question, first of support, and then of ministerial or secular work. For there is hardly a man in the ranks of the ministry who could not command living wages elsewhere. To the church it is a question of advance or decline; of increased or failing usefulness, influence and members. And in its final issue it is a question of life and death to many a feeble congregation, and perhaps to some that have thought they were strong.

On whom rests the responsibility that is indicated by these considerations? The answer to this question will answer in a general way the other as to the way of meeting the danger. Some leave all such things for other shoulders to bear. These, doubtless, will say "the officers of the church have control. They and the ministers must see to it. We have no responsibility and we will take none." Others, it may be, will say, "The ministers ought not to be expected to press the question of their own support. It belongs to the officers—elders and deacons of the congregation." And yet others still will say, "The officers have done their duty. It rests upon the people." In various degrees and in different localities each one of these answers has an element of truth. But the average case is the one we want. In that case the people are well informed as to their duty to support the gospel, and they know of God's ordaining that they who preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel. The opportunity is given them to subscribe and pay, and it is before them for the year round. Some subscribe and pay to the full extent of ability and duty. Some pay nothing, and some—the larger number—pay less than the measure of duty. And this is done in full view of the needs and claims of the cause of Christ. There can be no doubt that the chief responsibility is with these two classes. But what help does this give in answering "How shall we avert the danger that threatens us?" We answer: 1st, it shows where the fault is, and that the remedy must be sought through repairing the wrong, and 2d, it shows to whom the appeal should be made.

At the outset of any such appeal we are met with the statement that there is so little money in circulation that the people are really unable to pay more. Now we are not disposed to deny that there is great straitness over all the land. And we readily admit that any church which did its full duty in better days is now perhaps unable to pay as much as it formerly did.

But where this has not been done, where the church has paid less than it ought, this answer will not suffice. Let us take the cases of the brethren referred to in the opening paragraph of this article. There is hardly a family in any of those congregations that does not live more expensively than the pastor's family. And if they would consent to cut off expenses till the scales were evenly balanced between their style of living and his, there need be no fear of broken ties. The pastoral relation would stand and be stronger than ever, and prove a blessing to both minister and people.

Does some one say in reply, "We are economizing already more than we ever did before, and would you have us reduce our living still more in order to increase our pastor's salary?" No, not for that purpose only or even mainly, but we would have you do so in order to do your duty to God and His Gospel. Our blessed Master said, "If any man will come after me let him deny himself. What for? To render service, of course. It is clear that no man could do his duty then without self-denial. Is it not as clear to-day? And this is the form of self-denial to which we are now called—close economy for the sake of the Lord and His Gospel. Will the church hear the call? There have been times when God has required of His servants that they should face death for His sake. At all such times they who went to the stake were obliged to leave their wives and little ones to the covenanted mercy of a faithful God. They witnessed a good confession at the cost of earthly goods; of home and friends, and finally of life itself. And they went out of the world knowing that in all human probability a life of poverty and persecution awaited those they left behind. Did they do more than their duty? Did God require of them anything more than He had a right to demand? And was their faith in Him a foolish faith when it obeyed His word and left to His care those who were dearer than life itself?

Our Master has not called us to meet persecution, but He has committed His Church and its interests to our hands, and He does require that we shall count His interests dearer than all else besides, and that we shall refuse no sacrifice that may be needed to advance His kingdom and honor His name.

And our brethren in the ministry are making the sacrifice. They are enduring hardness till the burden threatens to become heavier than they can bear. We know of one minister who, with a family of eight—himself one of the number—has for years been living on a salary of about five hundred dollars. And this meager support is never promptly paid. We know another, with a family of four whose salary is less than five hundred dollars, and whose traveling expenses in meeting his appointments amount to about one-fourth of his salary. And there are many such cases. Now let any try, in imagination—the task of supporting their families on such salaries. These brethren have neither farm nor school nor store. They are giving their time to the ministry as fully as their poverty will allow. Of course they have to do much work that could be done by a day laborer. They make no complaint. They are willing to do all the good they can. But they are driven to every honest device to make ends meet. In food and clothing, in personal and family expenses they save. Everywhere that economy will avail it is practised. And often when all other expedients fail they bravely and deliberately do without things which others regard as necessaries. We might give details but this would be an invasion of the sacredness of private life. We only wish to satisfy our readers that we are not asking them to do more than their pastors are doing.

Is it necessary? Yes it is. Unless we can make up our minds to bear this straitness and uphold the Gospel through it all; we may expect God's judgment on a stingy and unfaithful church. His favor will be withdrawn and the kingdom of God will be given to a people and church, bringing forth the fruits thereof. We are in danger of great and inestimable losses. A number of our congregations are in danger of perishing outright.

If, however, the church shall meet this crisis in the spirit of true consecration to Christ, then we shall expect to see a revived church and enlarged prosperity and growth beyond all our past experience.

Bring ye all the tithes into the store house—and prove now herewith saith the Lord of Hosts if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

May the Lord give us grace to see and improve our opportunity. And may He in mercy avert our danger.

"PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA."

Mr. Rumple begins in this paper some further accounts of Presbyterian churches, ministers and schools in North Carolina. In the former sketches a large part of the material was gleaned from books and pamphlets long before the public. But these supplementary articles are composed mainly of materials never before printed, but kindly furnished by friends of the writer. While all care will be taken to prevent errors from creeping into the narrative, no doubt mistakes will sometimes be made, and the writer would be greatly obliged to any careful reader for corrections, or more authentic information, to be sent to him by letter at Salisbury, N. C. His design is to arrange these articles, interweaving them, with the former ones, into a connected account of the Presbyterian Church in North Carolina, and if the way shall be open, to publish the same in a volume at no distant day. At least the papers will be arranged, and filed away for future use. In either case it is important that no errors should be allowed to pass unchallenged into the narrative. If convinced of error he will make a public correction of his statements.

It is desirable that any inaccuracies should be made known directly to Bro. Rumple.

FRANCOIS PAUL JULES GREVY.

M. Grevy, who has just been elected to the vacancy made by the resignation of MacMahon, in the the Presidency of France, is what is known as a Conservative-Republican. He is 65 years of age and his course in politics has been manly and independent. In 1830, then only 17 years of age, he was in arms in opposition to the King, Charles X.

Disappointed in the Citizen King he espoused the cause of opposition to him. After the flight of Louis Phillippe in 1848, he was made a commissioner of the provisional government for his department. His popularity secured him election to the Assembly of which he became Vice-President. After Louis Napoleon's election to the presidency he opposed his policy and upon the coup d'etat retired to the practice of his profession, but in 1868 was made a member of the Corps-Legislatif. In March, 1871, he was made president of the Assembly and so continued till 1873 when he resigned. On November 12th, 1877, M. Grevy was elected president of the Chambers then just returned by the nation. He is in accord with M. Gambetta, and probably a more prudent leader.

THE SECRET OF A SUCCESSFUL CHURCH.

What is it? Some would answer, An attractive, original, eloquent preacher who "draws" well and fills the pews to overflowing. Others would say, A liberal people who have means and freely expend it to render the house of worship inviting and comfortable, and who contribute largely to benevolent causes. A third party would say, Attentive, courteous officers and ushers, who give every stray-comer or visitor a cordial welcome, and make such feel perfectly at home. Others, again, would, perhaps, give as a means a spirit of brotherhood and kindly feeling based upon a sort of justifiable clannishness. But while all of these are elements, yet the most comprehensive answer is that a successful church is a working church.

In one of Jos. Cooke's brilliant lectures we read of a gentleman who came to the pastor of a church and required a pew, saying he was willing to pay any rent that was demanded and to contribute liberally to all the causes of benevolence, &c., but desired to stipulate that his wife and daughter should not be put upon any committee, nor required to go among the poorer classes, &c.

The pastor answered, "Sir, you have come to the wrong church. This is not the one you are seeking. The Church of the Heavenly Rest is what you wish. You'll find it around the corner yonder."

The same grand law runs throughout the whole of God's universe, and that law is WORK! The body grows weak and feeble in inaction; the mind loses its powers and rusts into imbecility if not exercised; and so the soul is shriveled and stunted if idle in the Christian life. The first cry of a healthful soul is, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"—a feeling of individual responsibility in God's world of Christian effort.

Is a Christian plunged in grief and despondency? put him to some work for his Lord. Is he clouded with doubts and threatened with scepticism? give him some department of Christian effort. It is the best medicine for any trial or any trouble. As soon as a convert cherishes a hope in Christ set him at some work for his Saviour. Let the pastor study to find some sphere of Christian activity for every member of his church and teach every one that there is some particular work for him individually to do for the common cause. Thus you will have a vigorous, healthy, living, growing church, and that is what we mean by a "successful church."

DR. PLUMER AT WHITEVILLE.

Rev. Dr. W. S. Plumer, LL. D., preached at Whiteville, N. C., on Saturday and Sunday, 25th and 26th ult. The occasion was one of rare delight to the people of that village. The Doctor, notwithstanding his advanced aged, never omits an opportunity to proclaim the Glad Tidings when an opportunity presents.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

By the reverend, the Stated Clerk of the Synod of North Carolina, the reverend, the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Fayetteville,—well see appropriate column. Our respectful congratulations are sincerely tendered.

As a North Carolina institution, and one reflecting great credit on the honored commonwealth, and from its historic connection with the Presbyterian Church in this State, we have always not only felt an interest in, but been duly prond of the Bingham School. The annual circular has bloomed ont into a catalogue which lies before us full of interesting reading, presenting four honored names as preceptors, and 142 names as pupils,—representing twelve States, and with one student from Siam. Among the patrons are Rev. Dr. Leftwitch, Dr. Girardeau, Dr. Pratt, Dr. Woodrow, Rev. Daniel McGilvary and others,—Maj. Jas. W. Wilson, Ex-Senator Dortch, General Grimes, Governor Vance and others. Not only the number but the character of it patrons shows the popular and well deserved esteem in which this eminent school is held.

Bishop John J. Keane recently delivered a lecture in Petersburg, Va., for the benefit of the Catholic Beneficial Society. Tickets were freely sold to Protestants, and Protestant clergymen were invited to seats on the rostrum, under the assurance that nothing of a sectarian character would be introduced. "When the hall was filled and the representatives of the Reformed churches were, by special invitations, on the rostrum, under such obligations of courtesy as sealed their lips, a lecture was made of a strictly sectarian character, the object of which was to establish the claims of the Roman Catholic Church to the Churches to which these gentlemen belonged, and to present the motives and work of the Reformers, and the principles for which they struggled and suffered, in the light of a restless disloyalty and an egregious blunder." Dr. Witherspoon called this a clever sell—an exceedingly mild epithet we should say to characterize it—and the Holy Father says he is not responsible—oh, dear! Whereupon Dr. Witherspoon thus impales the Holy man:

"It is not for me to say where the responsibility rests. The card of Bishop Keane shows that he was aware several hours beforehand that invitations had been sent out based upon the accepted idea that the lecture was not to be sectarian. He says he felt regret when this fact was made known to him, showing that he knew and felt then that his lecture would not be in keeping with the expectations awakened by the complimentary invitations. He had time to alter the lecture or recall the invitations, neither of which he did. He could at least have made a statement to the audience of the sectarian character of the lecture, and have given opportunity to any one who did not wish to hear it to withdraw. Any one of the courses would have freed him from the embarrassing position in which he is now placed, and have made it easy for him to defend a course which is open to the criticism I have felt constrained to make upon it."

Yet after all what were Protestants thinking about to lend their countenance to anything of the sort? What were they to expect?

The friend who kindly furnished us the letter of condolence which was published last week desires us to correct thus: About middle of first column "Often too our peace is ruined when the longings of the flesh move us to judge the promises, when on the contrary &c" it should be "longings of the flesh move us to judge promises by the providence, when on the contrary &c. Again in latter part of the letter, "Far more highly favored than all the Christless, your heart claims kindness," this word should be "kinship," "your heart claims kinship and mutual happiness &c."

ANNUAL MEETINGS OF GREENSBOORO CHURCH.

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 27th, 1879.

Mr. Editor:—The Greensboro Presbyterian Church held on yesterday two largely attended and very interesting meetings. One at 11 A. M., to hear the pastoral annual report—of services, lectures, visits, accessions, deaths, funerals, marriages, &c., &c., during the past year—then the report of the Ladies Missionary and Church Aid Society for the year past, then the financial report, setting forth the monies contributed from the congregations, then the report of the condition, &c., of the Sabbath School by the Superintendent, then last, and by no means least, a capital and touching address by Jesse H. Lindsay, the oldest of the ruling-elders, for which the pastor and Sunday School Superintendent feel specially grateful.

At 3½ P. M., the church convened again to elect three additional ruling-elders, and five additional deacons to supply the places made vacant for the past several years by deaths and removal. The new ruling-elders elected were Judge R. P. Dick, Samuel C. Smith and Col. John A. Gilmer. Three deacons were elected, J. T. Carson, Robert M. Sloan, Jr., and Wm. R. Murray, and as it was then late in the afternoon, the meeting adjourned until Wednesday night to continue and conclude the election.

From the report in the morning, it appeared that Dr. Smith, the pastor, had preached, during the year 1878, in Greensboro 88 times, elsewhere 45 times; funeral services and discourses, 14; sermons by visiting brethren to his people, 21; 56 prayer meetings have been held; 93 conversations of a personal character and prayer with various individuals, gentlemen and ladies visiting him at his study; 50 volumes lent out from his library to persons in distress of mind or seeking instruction; visit to Sabbath School and talks to the children, 13; literary addresses, 4.

If the sermons delivered by the pastor, here and elsewhere, be added to his lectures, talks to the children and youth, &c., they amount to 214 which averages 4 per week and 6 over.

He paid 330 visits through his congregation and had religious services 106 times in the families or at the bed-side of the sick.

Fifty persons were received into the communion and fellowship of the church (9 by certificate and 41 by examination) of these, 22 were gentlemen and 28 ladies; of the 22 gentlemen, 15 were heads of families—of the 50 thirty are married persons.

He administered baptism 54 times in Greensboro, and elsewhere, (22 adults and 32 infants) 39 of these 54 were in Greensboro, (11 adults and 28 infants). There have been 15 deaths (8 adults and 7 infants). Only one of the adults was a communing member of this church.

During the year he solemnized 7 marriages.

On the 1st of January, 1879, there were on the roll of the Greensboro Presbyterian Church, 250 resident communicants, (90 gentlemen and 160 ladies) and 50 non-resident (14 gentlemen and 36 ladies). He closed with several "practical observations."

The Ladies' Missionary and Church Aid Society reported as the result of their exertions $334 11 and the deacons reported $836 22—making a total of $1,170 33, an advance upon last year or over $200. This money has been expended for Sabbath School, Foreign Missions, Sustentation, Publication, Education, Invalid Fund, Poor Fund, Contingent Fund, altering and improving pulpit, carpeting, painting, &c., &c.

There was a large turn out—the day was exceptionally beautiful and every body seemed interested in the exercises both morning and evening. V. D. M.

A CENTRE SHOT.

MR. EDITOR—A venerable old gentleman, a member of Bethesda Church, related to me this incident in the life of one of our ministers in the olden time:

Dr. —— was the minister of a church in Concord Presbytery for several years on a salary of $500. He received a call to F— salary $1,000. This he at first declined, but when it was renewed the following year he accepted it. After staying a few years in F— he returned to his old charge. Soon after his venture he was catechising in a family, and, as was customary, the servants were called in. Of an old negro man he asked:

"What is effectual calling?"

"I dunno, sir," he replied.

"Oh, yes," said the minister, "you have some idea of it. What do you think it means?"

"I dunno, sir," was the answer, "'cept it is from $500 to $1,000."

The good old minister was never tempted to leave that church again. His memory abides fresh and green, and many rise up to call him blessed. COUNTRY PASTOR.

MR. EDITOR—Please allow me to acknowledge for the "Howell Fund" $14 from various friends in Mebaneville.

We are greatly encouraged to expect success in our effort to provide a home for the family of our noble young brother.

SYNOD OF MEMPHIS.

Met in Second Presbyterian Church in Memphis January 14, ulto.

The following action was taken by Synod in reference to a communication received from Rev. J. K. Hazen, Secretary of the Committee of Publication, viz:

1. That members of Synod be requested to report their criticism of books for Sabbath-schools containing objectionable features, to the Secretary of the General Assembly's Executive Committee at Richmond, Va.

2. We cordially commend the economy and diligence with which the work is now being prosecuted, and earnestly desire to see this branch of the Church work made, as speedily as possible, an effective agency for spreading the gospel among our people. To this end we now commend to our ministers, Sabbath-school teachers and people, the Earnest Worker and Children Friend.

3. We urge upon ministers and Sabbath-school Superintendents the importance of doing all in their power to increase the circulation of the publications of the central Committee.

An overture was presented asking Synod to "organize the colored ministers, and churches composed of colored people, into a "Presbytery." The following answer was made to said Overture, "That it is not expedient to organize such a Presbytery at present.

Synod urged upon the Presbyteries the importance of calling upon all the colored churches and ministers to report to their respective Presbyteries.

The Synod by resolution, transferred all its interest in the matter of the Book Depository to the Presbytery of Memphis.

Florence Synodical Female College was warmly endorsed.

The next meeting will be held in Jackson, Tenn., Oct., 31, 1879.

DR. E. T. BAIRD'S CASE.

EAST HANOVER PRESBYTERY.

RICHMOND, VA., Jan. 23, 1879.

East Hanover Presbytery met in pro re nata session, at 11 A. M., in the Lecture-room of the Second Presbyterian church, Richmond, in accordance with the call in a circular of the Moderator, Dr. Armstrong, "for the further consideration of the case of Dr. E. T. Baird."

The Presbytery was opened with prayer by Dr. Pryor.

The judgment of the Presbytery in the case of E. T. Baird, at its last meeting, was read.

Rev. T. D. Witherspoon, D. D., in behalf of the committee, consisting of himself and Dr. Armstrong, appointed at the last meeting to confer with Dr. E. T. Baird, reported that they had full conference with him, and presented a letter from Dr. Baird, which was read and received as a report from that committee, and is as follows:

DR. BAIRD'S LETTER.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 22, 1879.

Rev. T. D. Witherspoon, D. D.:

DEAR BROTHER—As I have learned from you that there is some misunderstanding as to the statements I made before Presbytery, I deem it due to myself to place in your hands a correct statement on that subject, which you are at perfect liberty to use officially, in connection with the approaching meeting of Presbytery. My special reason for doing so is that the Presbytery may not act in ignorance of my views and feelings with regard to the whole matter. The points included in the indictment are the most important, and I suppose the only ones which can be properly taken into view; and I shall confine what I now write within the limits of that instrument.

1. I begin by repeating emphatically what I have uniformly said on every occasion when I have said or written anything, that I am not defending the propriety of the course which I adopted in conducting my official business, but simply and only my moral character. I have always condemned and repudiated, in the strongest terms, every departure from business propriety, every business irregularity, and every act in which or by which, my accounts and those of the committee were intermingled. Whatever may be the fact as to the exact state of the accounts between me and the committee the principle is the same. Morally and legally I had no more right to use one cent of the Committee's money than I had to use $100, $1,000, or $100,000.

2. I have uniformly acknowledged the impropriety of my assuming the payment of the debts due by the Committee, giving my note for them, and passing the sums thus assumed to my credit. At first, these assumptions were made by the request of parties to whom the Committee was indebted, because the Committee had no legal status; and even up to the very close of my administration, there were some who still requested me to do so. I supposed, at the time that this made the debts legally mine, and hence I acted as I did. On this point, however, I find lawyers differ. But I am well satisfied that the Committee was still bound for them morally, if not legally. The whole transaction was, therefore, wrong in principle, and I as heartily condemn it as any one can. Though the first specification of the first charge, which contained items of this character, was not sustained, I deem it due to myself to state explicitly what I have here said, relative to this point; more especially, because it was chiefly from such claims as these assumed by me, and on my failure to meet them, going back on the Committee, that all this trouble and embarrassment to it has arisen.

3. I learn that I have been understood to justify the use of my official signature in raising money for my own uses, because I constantly lent my name to the Committee as the endorser of its obligations, and often gave my personal obligation to raise money for it; and further that I defended the use of my official signature in this manner as an exchange of equivalents. I have some reason to believe it was on this ground that at least a part of the majority voted to sustain the second specification of the first charge. I think that I distinctly and solemnly repudiated any such position, in my defence before Presbytery; and I now desire to add that, in my opinion there are no circumstances under which it could be done without a violation of moral right and the laws of God. I find no instance, however, in which I used my official signature in borrowing money for myself, or for purposes not official. All the items of the second specification of the first charge, where the money was borrowed, Mr. Sleight has testified were used for official purposes, except one, and that he testifies was used to pay paper bills for the printing office, at a time when that office was entitled to a credit of $4,347.60. In other words the said money was borrowed to pay the claims in part of the printing office against the Committee. In all these instances, as Mr. Sleight further testifies, these notes bore heavy interest, and hence I ordered them to be put on my account, that I might pay the interest. Having thus a personal responsibility for their payment, I treated them as my own in all respects, checking against them, etc. Every such transaction was wrong in principle; and I wish to repudiate any expression of mine which may have been understood as approving of it, or as claiming a right to do it. On the other hand, if in any instance it is so that I used my official signature in the manner indicated, as the Presbytery has judged, I would most earnestly and solemnly repudiate and deplore it.

4. The financial statements of the annual reports were prepared by me from facts and statements furnished me by the Business Agent and the Treasurer. The statements for the General Assembly of 1876 were prepared by these officers with unusual care, as I believe. Besides the Annual Report there was a book prepared of all the debts of the Committee, and of all known amounts due by others to the Committee. Those debts the payment of which I had assumed I deemed and treated in my mind and in all my actions, as no longer the Committees but mine; and with the resources of which I then supposed myself to have at command, and the aid promised me by others of my family, I had no doubt at that time of my ability to meet them without causing the Committee embarrassment or trouble in the least degree. I therefore, did not consider or treat them as debts of the Committee, and never thought of revising the figures as given me by the Business Agent and Treasurer; and hence I prepared the Annual Report for the Committee according to the statements furnished by them. While I fully recognize the responsibility which rested on me to make known to the Committee and through the Committee to the Assembly the exact state of its business, I cannot confess that I intentionally practiced any concealment, or that I made any representation which at the time I did not believe to be true.

5. In looking back over my official course, I am free to say that all these irregularities were wrong in moral principle; and it is with penitence, humiliation and sorrow that I acknowledge that I did things that have brought down on me and on the Church such troubles. During the sorrowful months of estrangement and poverty which I have passed, the heaviest burden of my heart has been the sad fact that through my follies and short-comings such calamities have befallen the interests of the Church, and that through me Jesus Christ has been wounded in the house of his friends. I expect to bear this burden with me as long as I live, and to carry it with me to the grave.

6. I distinctly and solemnly declare that, whatever may be the appearance of my conduct to others, I never designed, desired or expected to wrong or defraud any one—much less the Church of God. Had the Presbytery passed its vote originally as an exemplary censure, and on account of the offence created—severe as its judgment was—I should have taken no appeal, or any other adverse action.

This letter is designed for Dr. Armstrong as well as yourself; but is addressed to you because from you I learned that it was needed.

I am, dear brother, yours truly, etc.

E. T. BAIRD.

Dr. Witherspoon moved that, in view, of this paper and other facts in the case, the Presbytery do now restore Dr. E. T. Baird to the office of the ministry.

During the consideration of this motion certain testimonials in reference to the sentiment of the Christian public, in the hands of the committee of conference were called for and read.

Judge Ould called the attention of the Presbytery to certain statements in the published defence of Dr. Baird, and in the postscript thereto, whereupon a committee was appointed to confer with Dr. Baird in reference to the matters mentioned by Judge Ould, consisting of Ruling Elders Robert Stiles, John Donan, and James R. Holt.

Rev. Dr. Pryor and Ruling Elder J. W. Friend obtained leave of absence from the remaining sessions of Presbytery.

The Presbytery then took a recess till 7:30 P. M.

The Presbytery was called to order at 7:30 P. M.

Major Robert Stiles presented a report from the committee appointed to confer with Dr. Baird, which was received, and is as follows:

To the Reverend the Presbytery of East Hanover:

Your committee beg leave to report that they have conferred with Dr. Baird, with the following result:

1. In regard to the statement concerning Judge Ould, on page 179 of Dr. Baird's published speech, the latter admits that the word "falsely" ought not to have been used by him as applicable to Judge Ould's testimony (it occurs in the sixteenth line of the page), and he willingly recalls this word, stating, in addition, that he never believed that Judge Ould intentionally testified to anything he did not believe to be true.

Dr. Baird also states that he did not intend to characterize Judge Ould's testimony as a slander, or charge the Judge himself with designedly originating a slander, as might appear to be the meaning of a few lines lower down, that what he meant to say was simply Judge Ould's testimony, as it appeared in the papers, was not correct, and that newspaper slanders had grown out of it; that his only ground of complaint against Judge Ould was that he did not correct his statement after its incorrectness was called to his attention, and he was referred to evidence which Dr. Baird then regarded, and now regards, as demonstrating the incorrectness of his testimony as published in the papers; that Judge Ould's failure to make this correction was the more remarkable, as he did publish a card in which he referred to other parts of Dr. Baird's published letter, but made no mention of this point, which Dr. Baird regarded as vital to his reputation. Dr. Baird stated that he desired to limit the paragraph referred to, to this single ground of complaint.

The Doctor says that his printed speech is greatly condensed from that delivered in Presbytery, but contains little, if any, new matter, save the "Postscript," which upon its face purports to be an addendum, since the meeting of Presbytery. The statement concerning Judge Ould was certainly in the speech as delivered, though Dr. Baird is not certain whether he mentioned him by name.

2. As to the reference to Dr. Hoge the Committee of Publication, and the Presbytery, in paragraph IV., on page 212, of his published speech, Dr. Baird states that he had no intention of reflecting upon Dr. Hoge, and in view of the statements made by him upon the floor of Presbytery to-day, would most heartily repudiate any and all such reflections. Nor did he mean in the paragraph to intimate that the Committee or the Presbytery prosecuted him to secure the sum of money referred to, or that either body, or any member of either, was influenced by any mercenary motive; that if the paragraph in question bears such a construction, or so far as it bears it, he desires to recall it; that as to the Committee, or their part in the prosecution or trial of his case, the views which he had uniformly expressed, and the only exceptions he had ever taken to them or to their conduct as his judges, are contained in his letter from New York, to be found on page 226 of the printed record containing his speech.

Dr. Baird added, that as to both these paragraphs of his speech, and any other paragraphs or portions in which injustice may have been done to any one, he had no hesitation in saying he regretted their publication, and that he asked the forgiveness of any and every one whom he may have thus injured in the excitement arising from his circumstances. He also stated that he should embrace the earliest fit opportunity to make publicly such statements as the above, and such others as seemed to be called for by justice and fairness under the circumstances.

Your committee, recognizing the somewhat vague and therefore broad scope of their instructions and duties, beg leave to submit as an addendum to their report a paragraph written and signed by Dr. Baird [given below], in which he states succinctly what he intended to convey by the paper submitted yesterday as a part of the report of the original committee of conference, of which the Moderator was chairman.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

ROBERT. STILES, Chairman.

The explanatory paragraph referred to in this report, and presented with it is as follows:

What I intend to convey by the letter addressed to Dr. Witherspoon was the acknowledgement that I have done things which I now see to have been morally wrong, and to express my penitence and sorrow therefor, especially in view of the great injury to the cause of religion resulting therefrom; what I mean to deny in that paper is that I designed or desired to do wrong to the Church or any one. E. T. BAIRD.

The motion of Dr. Witherspoon for the restoration of Dr. Baird to the ministry being before the Presbytery, Dr. Preston offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That the case of Dr. E. T. Baird, as presented before the Presbytery, in the confession submitted through its committee, be referred to the Synod of Virginia for advice upon these two points.

1st. Whether under all the circumstances the confession presented is sufficient.

2nd. Whether the sentiment of the Christian public demands Dr. Baird's restoration to the ministry.

This resolution was lost, but ordered to be recorded.

Presbytery adjourned till 9:30 A. M. to-morrow; and was closed with prayer by Rev. Dr. Hoge.

On the second day the Presbytery restored Dr. Baird by a vote of 15 to 6 as we recorded last week.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

There were lately five accessions to the Kent Street Presbyterian church, of which Rev. J. R. Graham is pastor.

The Presbyterians of Lawrenceburg have bought a lot costing about eight hundred dollars, with intent to build a church.

Rev R. H. Nall, it is reported, has been invited to supply a church in New Orleans. He is now pastor of the Presbyterian church in Greenville, S. C.

Rev. Lucien Holmes a native of the Cape Fear section of our State and well-known and highly respected here, takes charge of the Episcopal church at Monroe, N. C.

Reports come that a number of persons have connected themselves with Loudoun St., Presbyterian church in Winchester, Va. Rev. Mr. Fleming is helping the pastor.

Rev. Robert Gray has been invited as temporary supply to the church at Gallatin, Tenn. Correspondents will address him at that place.—South Western Presbyterian.

The address of Rev. Wm. McCarty till latter part of March will be No. 2,815 State Street, St. Louis, Mo. He is about to retire from Shawneetown, Mo., where he has been living.

A new church is to be organized from the First church, in South Nashville. Rev. T. M. McConnell has left McMinnville, Tenn., to take charge of it. His address is changed to Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Kerr has been appointed Professor, ad interim, to the Tuskaloosa institute. Dr. Kerr is President of the Chamberlain-Hunt Academy under the care of Mississippi Presbytery. In consequence of the yellow fever the exercises of the Academy were not resumed last fall, but it will be re-opened next October.

THIRD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH RICHMOND, VA.—On a recent Sabbath the following brethren were ordained and installed over this congregation—Elders, Messrs. Charles D. Larus and Richardson W. Haw. Deacons, Dr. James W. Bryant and Messrs. William T. Yarborough, William C. Crump and James W. Sinton. On last Sabbath two persons were added to the church upon certificate.—Central Presbyterian.

"From a brief statement of church work made by the pastor last Sunday morning after service, we were gratified to learn that the Presbyterian church here has during this recent Christmas and New Year season contributed nearly $300, outside of its regular contributions, to benevolent enterprises at home and abroad, thereby 'abounding in good works,' as is commanded. 'There is that giveth and yet increaseth.'"—Exchange.

Rev. Evander McNair, D. D., has resigned the charge of the Presbyterian church at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, which is now a vacant congregation. He has served this church since the fall of 1866. The congregation were then in a scattered condition; he re-organized them and labored quite successfully among them till last year. Mr. McNair has grown old in the Master's service, but he is not weary of it.—Christian Observer.

The Presbyterian church of Greenville, S. C., recently issued a printed semi-annual statement of its financial receipts and expenditures for 1878, for distribution in the congregation. In its recapitulation we find that its members and attendants have contributed for the following purposes, the amounts named: Foreign Missions $93 85; Sustentation $25 65; Relief disabled ministers, etc., $23 65; Education $22 60; Evangelistic work $20 10; Publication $15 60; Education Colored Ministry $8 10; Yellow Fever Sufferers $28 95; Church Expenses $409 57; Pastor's Salary $1,200 00; Church Indebtedness $1,243 12; Repairs School House $219 65; Total $2,310 84.—Greenville Express.

The First Church, Louisville.—The interest in the meetings in Dr. Guerrant's church has continued steadily to increase. The Rev. J. M. Evans, of Augusta, Ky., arrived last Wednesday to aid the pastor, and preached a very earnest, powerful sermon that night. On Thursday, the chapel at Seventh and Chestnut streets was found too small to hold the people anxious to be present, and the meeting was moved to the church. Large congregations, earnest, serious, and prayerful, have attended every night. Last Sunday night, the old First Church was crowded, as it has never been but once before for many years. Up to last Sabbath twenty-three persons had been received into the Church—six of them on profession of faith. The prayer meetings every afternoon, are precious seasons, and are attended from day to day by increasing numbers'.—Christian Observer.

Rev. J. G. Law, Evangelist of the Presbytery of South Carolina, gives an interesting account of his labors in the Southern Presbyterian. During the last four months of last year there were special outpourings of God's Spirit. He says: The result of four months' continuous labor was most gratifying and refreshing. Little flocks were multiplied. The people of God were revived and comforted. The number of souls added to the various churches was seventy-two. At Rehoboth church there were fifteen accessions; Traveller's Rest received six; Bethel, four; Mt. Zion seven; Midway, twenty-three; Belton, eight. Other churches received smaller numbers. Among those who were gathered into the fold at Midway was an old maiden lady in her ninetieth year. She was a child of the covenant, baptized in infancy, watched over by the "Good Shepherd" during all the days of her long pilgrimage, and at the eleventh hour she hears the gentle Shepherd's voice, comes into the fold, and with all her faculties in tact, receives the bread and wine from the hands of God's ordained servant. Our God is faithful to his covenant promises.

NORTHERN.

Rev. David V. Smoock of the Presbytery of ... city died recently.

During the year about one hundred and twenty-five member were added to the Second Presbyterian church, New Albany, Ind.

The debt of Rev. Dr. Ganse's church (First Presbyterian of St. Louis) has been paid by subscription. The indebtedness was $15 000.

Now that such a sad fate has come upon Bishop Purcell of Cincinnati, O., Cardinal McCloskey has forbidden any of the clergy under his jurisdiction from receiving money deposits from any one. It is high time.

The Center Church, New Haven, Conn., Dr. E. A. Noble pastor, gave $14,809 for benevolent objects last year, besides $1,985 for the Moody and Sankey meetings. Two members of the church left valuable legacies; Mrs. Caroline L. Street $37,000, and Dr. E. T. Foote $1,000. The membership is 585.

Fourteen persons were lately added to the Presbyterian church at Osceola, Pa.; twelve to Central Presbyterian church at Erie, Pa.,; ... to the Presbyterian church at Millersburg, ... thirteen to the church at Humboldt, Kansas; forty-two at Mt. Carmel, O.; eleven at New ...ville, N. Y.; and twenty-seven at Mansfield, O.

The late Hon. Alexander DeWitt of Oxford, Mass., left to the Congregational church there, of which he was a member, a legacy of $4,000; and also $1,000 each to the American Bible Society, American Home Missionary Society, the Seaman's Friend Society, and the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers.

The Presbyterians of New York city have done a good work in the last year, in reducing the indebtedness on their churches. A year ago a strong committee was appointed by the Presbytery, with directions to examine into the subject and take such action as might seem necessary. This committee acting with full powers raised by subscription the sum of $155,000. Of this they have disbursed $142 500, inducing twenty-five churches to raise the sum of $99,- ... and thus freeing these churches entirely from debt. At the same time several of the Presbyterian congregations of the city, which did not need the assistance of the committee, took measures to relieve themselves of debt, and thus far amounting to $167,000 were removed. In this quiet way more than $400,000 of the obligations resting upon the churches in New York city have been discharged during the past year. A good work.—Presbyterian.

SECULAR NEWS.

The plague has broken out in Russia, and the deaths are reported as ninety per cent. of those attacked; and one case in a village means that the disease will run riot. It is said to have been imported from Turkey by returning Cossacks. The Governments of Continental Europe are alarmed, and it is even said that Germany will, if necessary, employ an army in enforcement of quarantine. At last accounts, physicians to the Czar recommend that Russian towns be burnt to suppress the plague. It is supposed to be none other than the "Black Death," which depopulated London in 1663.

A large meeting of citizens of Raleigh was held on 20th instant, in favor of extension of the Raleigh and Augusta Air Line Railroad to Charlotte.

M. Gambetta has been elected President of the French Chamber of Deputies.

Measures are being taken to prevent the spread of cattle disease in England, and it is probable that importations from America will be forbidden.

The Louisiana Lottery will be suppressed. A bill repealing its charter has passed the Louisiana Legislature.

Judge Ashe has so far recovered as to take his seat on the Bench of the Supreme Court; which is pleasant news.

Strong hopes are said to be entertained that W. J. Hale, Sr., will revive the Fayetteville Gazette. Hardly, we think. Mr. Hale would be a great accession to the journalistic force of the State.

Mr. Lamb, of Duplin, advocates the cutting of a canal through Angola Bay, in Pender, Duplin and New Hanover counties. We somehow think this a good idea. By the bye, is this Major Young's raging canawl?

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

TO THE CHURCHES OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Churches needing aid, in supporting their ministers, will forward their applications to the undersigned before the 15th of February next. In your applications state (1) what part of your minister's time you desire, (2) what amount is raised by the church, and whether it is all that could reasonably be expected (3) what amount of aid is needed, and (4) how long has the church been receiving aid.

Applications not in the hands of the Agent by the time mentioned above are not likely to be successful.

Sustentation Committee of Fayetteville Presbytery.

This committee will meet on Thursday, the 13th of February, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M., in the lecture room of Fayetteville Presbyterian church. It consists of Rev. D. Fairley, Rev. M. McQueen, and Elders B. Fuller, Jos. A. McArthur, Dr. Hugh A. McSwain, with the chairman. Churches requiring aid in supporting their ministers during the current year will please forward their applications to the chairman before the time above mentioned. Those applications should state what part of a minister's time is wanted, what sum is raised by the church, and whether it is in proportion to its ability, and what amount of aid is desired.

STOCKHOLDERS, PLEASE NOTICE.

In purchasing the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN from the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN COMPANY I agreed to furnish the paper during the years 1877 and 1878, to such of the stockholders in that Company as were receiving the paper on stock, and who should remit the postage for those years.

Due notice of this arrangement was given at the time. On the 1st of January, 1879, the contract was fulfilled.

I trust that all who have been thus receiving the paper will enter as regular subscribers and remit promptly the amount of subscription.

JOHN MCLAURIN.

IN MEMORIAM.

The session of Laurinburg Church enters upon record the following tribute to the memory of Col. Murdock McKinnon, one of the founders of this church and the senior member of this body, who departed this life on the 28th of January, 1879, in the peace of the Gospel.

The session recognizes the most wise and holy providence of God in the event which has called our brother and fellow-laborer from our midst, and would bow in humble resignation to the will of Him who is the sovereign Disposer of all events, and who doeth all things well.

We record our appreciation of the character of our departed fellow-laborer, and bear our testimony to the noble Christian virtues and excellencies which adorned his life. He was eminently a Bible Christian, thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the Gospel. Endowed naturally with a strong, comprehensive and well-balanced mind, with a sound, clear judgment and great tenacity of purpose, he applied his powers to the study of God's Word, and spent his life in the practice of its precepts. In matters pertaining to the doctrines and duties of religion, his was a broad and profound intelligence, while his long life was a beautiful exemplification of Christian consistency and practical piety. As was his life so also was his end. He peacefully passed away in the exercise of an unwavering faith in Christ, and in the enjoyment of a full assurance of hope. We believe that he fell asleep without fear of death, and that he was filled with that perfect love which casteth out all fear.

As a Ruling-Elder, he was wise and discreet, ever watchful of the purity and well-being of the church, and never shrinking from any labor that duty required at his hands. His opinions were always well matured, and were worthy of a serious and weighty consideration.

In view of the departure of this beloved father and brother, the Session adopts the following resolutions:

1. That we are admonished of the shortness of our time, and are called to greater diligence and earnestness in doing the work committed to our hands.

2. That the example of our departed brother, in the faithful study of God's Word, and in practical piety, as well as in the deep and earnest interest he ever manifested in the cause of Christ, is worthy of our imitation.

3. That a page of our records be left blank, as sacred to his memory, and that his name and the date of his death, be inscribed on the same.

4. That a copy of this paper be sent to the family of the departed, with the assurance of the heartfelt sympathy and condolence of Session in their sorrow and bereavement; also, that a copy be furnished the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

At the residence of her son, Rev. L. C Vass, in Newbern, N. C., on Saturday, January 25th 1879, Mrs ELIZABETH B. VASS, in the 94th year of her age.

Ripe for heaven, after a long and useful life, she rests and rejoices with her loved Redeemer.

At Ayre Mount, near Hillsboro, N. C., on the 25th of January, JOHN U. KIRLLAND in the 78th year of his age.

The subject of this notice was greatly beloved and revered in the community in which, with two intervals, his life was passed. By family connection and business relations he was intimately associated with the representative men of the State of the past generation. He received a liberal education in the city of Edinburgh and his vigorous and well-trained mind was conspicuous in his intercourse in life. His knowledge of men and business, was singularly accurate and varied. No one engaged to the same extent in public affairs has left a better reputation for probity and capacity. Genial in his temper and in his attachments, he will be affectionately remembered by numerous relatives and friends. At the early age of eighteen years, he found hope in Christ, under the ministrations of the Lord's eminent servant, Thomas Chalmers, and was received into the membership of the Tron church. It is pleasant to know that this hope was with him his support and solace during the last months of his earthly pilgrimage, impressively reminding those, whose privilege it was to be near him, of the precious words, divinely inspired "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast and which entereth into that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus."

"Mark the perfect man and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace." J. H. F.

CATARRH
Is a terrible disease. Its fearful effects are corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. Thousands, not knowing the great danger in neglecting this disease, die with consumption. In a few years or months it may rapidly develop, and quick consumption announce it is too late.
CONSUMPTION The terror of humanity that yearly carries thousands to an untimely grave, not sparing the young, the talented, nor the beautiful.
ASTHMA which makes life so miserable its victims almost wish for death.
Minister's Sore Throat, Catarrhal Deafness, and BRONCHITIS the advance guard heralding the near approach of consumption.—For these and all Pulmonary Diseases, Dr. M. W. Case's Treatment by the use of his
CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANTS IS PLEASANT, THOROUGH, AND SUCCESSFUL. SATISFACTION always GUARANTEED.
Balsams and cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar that the mere breathing vaporizes them into a dense smoke. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. As the oils and balsams condense on the air passages and lungs, their capacity is wonderfully enlarged and the hollow chest soon becomes rounded and full.
HOME TREATMENT sent to any part of the United States or Canada, to be returned if not satisfactory.
To consumptives beyond the possibility of cure the Inhalants always give great relief, and often cure cases considered hopeless. CATARRH is readily cured by breathing the vapor and forcing it into the diseased cavities of the head and out of the nose, and is the the only method by which this terrible and almost universal disease can be permanently cured. For terms, call or write.

A Morning Prayer.

Saviour, hear me when I pray.
Help me walk with thee to-day;
Help me love thee more and more,
Serve thee better than before.

Bless, oh, bless me, Saviour now,
As before thy throne I bow;
Guide, oh, guide me through the day,
Lead, oh, lead me in the way.

Fill, oh, fill me with thy love.
Help me seek for aid above;
May my heart be wholly thine,
Not for now; but for all time.

Let me feel thy presence near,
All this day my heart to cheer;
All this day, through every hour,
Let me feel thy keeping power.

May my heart within me burn,
As my thoughts to thee shall turn;
May to-day my influence be
Strong to lead some soul to thee.

When this day's work all is done,
Set to-night is this day's sun,
May I have it thus to say,
Christ was with me all this day.

—Christian Secretary.

Besieged by a Rhinoceros.

"Baas, baas! spoor groed one-horn skellum!" Such was the, to me, rather unintelligible announcement with which my friend M——'s bush-boy came rushing in just about sunrise one morning, as we were sitting over our breakfast at the door of the house,—one of those regular old Dutch-built farm-houses, that one hardly ever sees now-a-days, except in South Africa. But he meant by it was, "Boss, boss! the trail of a big rhinoceros rascal!"

"Where?" cried M——, jumping up; for he was a keen sportsman, and never lost an opportunity of "potting" something.

"Out by Hollow Spring, baas;—spoor good!"

"There's a chance for you, my boy," said M——, turning to me. "Now you'll be able to see how these elephant-guns of mine do their work; I think you'll find them the right sort."

"Let me try the job by myself," cried I, eagerly; for, like all "greenhorns," I was frantic to do some unheard of feat, and win my laurels at once. "I've never shot a rhinoceros yet, you know."

"Can't, really, my dear boy," said M——, in the most exasperatingly indulgent tone; "when you're a little better used to the African bush, you can do what you like; but if I were to let you go alone now, the least I could expect would be a life-long remorse for having connived at a suicide. No, we'll make a party of three to visit our friend, and he'll hardly give the slip to us all, I fancy."

Accordingly, we started out that very night, Swart, the bush-boy, making the third of our party; but I suppose the rhinoceros was too modest to face so many visitors at once, for although we kept watch till sunrise, there was no sign of him. The next night was just the same; and at last I got so mad at the idea of losing my chance,—the first I had ever had with the big game,—that in spite of what M—— had said, I made up my mind to try my luck single-handed.

I should have told you that the Hollow Spring frequented by my four-footed friend, lay about eight miles from the house, in a deep gully, one side of which went up into a steep hog-backed ridge, topped by a big knuckle of rock that overlooked the spring at a range of fifty yards —as pretty a "stand" as any sportsman could wish. So, when night came, I stole out of the house with one of M——'s vaunted "elephant-guns,"—a piece carrying a five-ounce "explosive ball," steel-tipped, and holding enough fulminating powder to blow out the spine of a megatherium. To guard against the recoil of such a charge, the stock was fitted with a thick pad; so, with gun and ammunition together, I had quite enough to carry for an eight-mile tramp through the bush.

I dare say there are ugly thickets in South America and Central Asia; but Africa beats them both. Imagine a forest of fish-hooks, relieved by an occasional patch of penknives, and you have it exactly. There's one horrid spiky thing, called by the Dutch "Wache-em-betje," which the English have corrupted into "wait-a-bit," and it does make you wait a bit, if it once gets hold of you. I've known a fellow to be laid up for a fortnight with a gash from one. So you may think that with masses of this nice stuff all around me, I had to pick my way gingerly enough.

When I got to the place, lo! and behold, the pad of my gun had fallen off! To go back and look for it would have been like hunting for a needle in a hay-stack; so I filled my handkerchief with wild grass, and tucked it in under the shoulder of my jacket as a substitute, and then I took my post behind the rock, and waited.

The full moon was just rising over the trees (a glorious sight, I can tell you), when I heard a distant tramping, like the tread of an elephant, only quicker; for a full-grown rhinoceros, clumsy as he looks, can be active enough at times, as you'd soon find if you stood a charge from him when his temper's up. So I had not long to wait before there came a thick snort, and the great brown barrel of a body loomed out in the streak of moonlight, just over the spring. I hardly stopped to take aim, before I pulled trigger.

The next few seconds were a blank; and then I awoke to the consciousness that my shoulder was aching as if it were broken, and that something was grunting savagely a few yards off; and then I saw the huge snout and great white tusks coming right at me! I don't think any acrobat could have been quicker than I was in clutching a projecting bough, and swinging up into the tree overhead; and I'd hardly got there when the brute came bang against the trunk, almost shaking me off again. For a minute or two, my heart was in my mouth, for he thumped against the tree till I really thought he would have it down; and when he found he couldn't, he stamped the earth in a fury, and tore it up with his horn in a horribly suggestive way that made my flesh creep.

Here I was, then, in the crisis of a regular "adventure," such as I had always longed for; but somehow, now that I was in it, it didn't seem so very delightful. It's one thing to read of adventures in an easy-chair after dinner, and another to act them for yourself all night on a hard bough, with thousands of mosquitos pitching into you, and a mad rhinoceros galloping about underneath.

The likeness between my situation and some of those recorded by Captain Mayne Reid set me overhauling my recollections of that veracious author, in the hope of an idea; but the more I thought, the more the Captain failed me. Basil, when followed up a tree by a bear, got his brothers to throw him up a rope, and slid down; but I had no brothers, and no rope. Ben Brace, when "treed" by the lion, lassoed his dropped musket, and slew the king of beasts therewith; but I had no lasso, and couldn't have used it if I had. Somebody else, blockaded by a "grizzly," waited till bruin fell asleep, and then slipped away; but my rhinoceros seemed distressingly wide-awake, and even if he had dozed, the experiment would have not commended itself to my fancy. In short, the most masterly stratagem I could devise was to stay still where I was, and I did so.

That night was the longest I ever spent, and no mistake. Toward morning, Master Rhino frequently took a brief leave of absence into the bush, as if to tempt me down; but I heard him tramping in the distance, and wasn't to be caught. Day was just dawning, and I was beginning to wonder how much longer I could stand the thirst that was parching me up, when suddenly I heard a shot among the bushes, so close that it made me start. Then the boughs parted, and I saw M——'s jolly face looking up at me, with a grin from ear to ear.

"Fairly treed, eh, my boy? Well, I've raised the siege for you, and yonder lies the enemy. Your bullet's run down his side, under the skin, without exploding; so I suppose you must have hit him slantwise. Better luck next time. Anyhow, I'm glad to find you alive; but I fancy you wont go out alone again in a hurry!"

And, to tell the truth, I didn't, for a pretty long while after that day.

David Ker, St. Nicholas for February.

Manufacture of Artificial Flowers.

The work of making artificial flowers is generally assigned to women and girls, with an occasional man for the heavier and more laborious duties in connection. The material in the most extensive use for the purpose, is a fine cotton cambric or lawn, though silk, velvet, plush, satin and paper are all employed according to the indications apparent in the flowers to be simulated; or it may be, suggestions of some caprice of the mode for the season. As a rule the stuffs used are white, and the tinting given, and shading applied as required by the blossoms made; time and labor are sometimes economized by the use of tinted cambric, and the shading is done before the petals are put together in form, with the delicate touches of the artist's brush as the finish.

In the manufacture of artificial flowers there is very little of the elaborate machinery seen, which now enters into almost every pursuit embraced in trade, in mechanical productions. The cutting out of the flowers is done with finely tempered and sharpened pinking irons —the cambric being spread in many folds, and the cutting instrument being driven through by a heavy mallet. This portion of the work is done by men, and the pinking irons are shaped to almost every flower known in botany. The flowers so cut are then transferred to the female operatives, to be arranged, mounted on stems, and otherwise prepared for branching—which is the last operation attended to in the work.

The making of the leaves of artificial flowers is somewhat different from that of the blossoms. The materials employed are the same but of stouter body; the greens are dyed in the cloth, the substantial tints of nature, and the veining, shading and other needful finish comes in as the art work, given after the cutting out is done. Both wax and varnish enter into the preparation of artificial leaves, and the effect of the beautiful grayish tinge which rests over natural foliage as a veil of light gauze is secured through the use of fecule, in impalpable powder.

Until of late years artificial flowers were branched upon wire—this, as now, being wrapped or covered with fine green or brownish tissue paper; now, however, more artistic suggestion employs stems of India rubber or waxed muslin, for all flowers and plants that have softly hanging or drooping stems, with the succulent effect of the sap-filled branchlets and petioles of spring. The colors given are generally vegetable, and some of them aniline, while carmine is that in, perhaps, the most extensive request, and for certain flowers or effects, mineral pigments are required.

For the most part the grasses are natural, presenting the dry tints of nature; saffron with picric gives the yellow richness of the ripe grasses; the fresh green is the result of coloring, and brown comes of varnish applied over grasses gone to seed.

The cherries, grapes, currants, plums and other fruits which appear in the artificial flower trade are all made of the finest and most delicate glass, colored as needful, and blown into shape, the fecule powder as a finish, is suggested by the fruit counterfeited; silk, satin and velvet, stuffed with cotton, are used for the pomaceous and the heavier of the stone fruits—the requisite tinting and shading being applied after the fruit is made; oranges, lemons, limes and the rough-skinned fruits are generally made of wax of the color of the fruit, moulded and then powdered with fecule.

The Voltaic Pencil.

There is at the present time scarcely a single branch of industry to which electricity is not lending its aid. Art, however, has thus far received but little benefit from this source, if we except the application of electricity to electro-metallurgy. We are pleased to learn, then, that an important discovery has just been made at Paris by M. Bellet, whose invention consists of a voltaic pencil, by the use of which designers and draughtsmen will be enabled to dispense entirely with the aid of the engraver. The editors of Electricite state that they have examined beautiful proofs of lithographs and etchings obtained, without the use of the graver, by the effect of a voltaic arc produced at the point of an ordinary lead pencil. Encouraged by his success the inventor has taken out patents in various countries, and a company has been formed to carry out the process, which will soon be placed before the public. At present there are being prepared models of a series of apparatus which will allow any artist, however ignorant of the mysteries of electricity, to reproduce immediately, and without the aid of any artisan, the most delicate and complicated drawings; and this, too, by a very simple process and at a very moderate price. By a slight modification of the system there may be produced: (1) Stencils analogous to those produced by the Edison pen; (2) lithographs; (3) etchings; (4) stereotypes for typographical work. The initiators of this discovery are confident that an entire revolution will take place in the process of illustrating papers by means of their electrography.—Scientific American.

A Sensible Dog.

"Sixty years ago, when I was a teacher in Kilmalcum parish," says John Fraser, "I was using whiskey bitters for my stomach's sake. One day I dipped a piece of cake in it and gave it to the dog. He grudgingly ate it, curling up his lip to avoid the taste. Ere long he became tipsy; he howled most piteously, and unnaturally looked up in my face as if for help. He began to stagger and fall like a drunken man. The appearance of his face and eyes was extraordinary. He lay on the floor and howled until the effects of the drink wore off. This was supreme folly; it was wicked. The dog never forgot the trick. Whenever afterward I went to the press for the bottle he hastened to the outside of the house. One day, the door being shut, he sprang at one bolt through a pane of glass to get outside. So much for the wisdom of the dog—infinitely surpassing foolish drinking men."

The Sand-Blast.

Does that strike you as being rather a funny subject for young folks? It may seem so, but you see the effect of the sand-blast so often that the Professor is sure you will be interested. Before knowing what the blast is, let us find out a thing or two that it does.

In the first place there's the so-called "ground glass;" then there's the frost-work on silver ware, the cutting of granite for the front of buildings, the lettering on tomb-stones, the engraving of lamp and gas globes, and many other things you know by sight. All these the sand-blast does with the greatest ease. Now, have you not changed your mind about thinking it a strange subject for the Professor to bring to your notice?

The cutting power of sand has been noticed for a long time. The glass in the windows of cottages or huts upon the sea-shore, and that in the lanterns of lighthouses, often loses its transparency on account of the sand blowing upon it.

In 1870 Gen. Benj. C. Tilghman, of Philadelphia, was granted a patent for his sand-blast. It was to do: "The cutting, boring, grinding, dressing, engraving and pulverizing of stone, metal, glass, pottery, wood, and other hard or solid substances by sand used as a projectile, when the requisite velocity has been artificially given to it by any suitable means."

The process of the blast is very simple, the sand being blown at the object to be acted upon. The sand is forced by air, steam, or other motors. When the blast is directed on common glass, that part of the latter reached by the sand looses its transparency, or becomes "ground," in about ten seconds. You have often seen glass or silver-ware frosted in one place and polished in another. You can readily understand how this is done. Suppose an object is all polished to begin with. After protecting a portion of its surface, it is placed against the sand-blast. Of course, when you take your object out again it will be frosted in all places excepting those covered up, while under the covering the polish will be found to be as bright as ever. You may very naturally think that, as this blast is so powerful, the portions you wish bright must be protected by something very hard. But this is not so. The sand cuts anything that is brittle and hard, but scarcely makes any impression on pliable substances. If, for instance, you paste a green leaf on a piece of glass, the sand will cut the glass all around the leaf, but when the latter is taken off the portion underneath it will be found as clear as ever. Dip a pointed stick in glue and write your name upon a silver teapot and put it in the way of a sand-blast. You will find that the silver is cut into frost work, and that your name, when the glue is washed off, is seen in slender lines upon the surface. Paste some of that delicate, lace-like paper you find in boxes of candy upon any hard object, and the blast will cut everything but the paper, leaving the perfect pattern on the substance you selected. The colored glass you are familiar with is ordinary window glass having a thin layer of colored glass on one side. By pasting some pretty design on the colored side, and exposing it to the blast, the colored parts around the design can be cut away, and when the pattern is removed you have the colored picture surrounded by the white ground glass. A great deal of church glass work is done in this way.

So far the Professor has spoken principally of light, fancy work. With a higher velocity the sand will cut even great slabs of granite and marble through and through. When this great force is required, steam is generally used. The sand is forced out of a nozzle-tube upon the stone, which is placed about an inch from the aperture. Names are cut upon tomb-stones by this process, the nozzle being moved about as required. Workmen cut a stencil—in rubber, perhaps—and fasten it to the face of the stone. The sand then cuts the letters deep into the marble, while the rubber protects the spaces between, and when it is removed we find the polished surface, as in the case of the leaf and lace paper. The wear of this rubber is very slight. It is said that in one case fifty slabs of marble were cut, each to the depth of a quarter of an inch, and the rubber, one sixteenth of an inch thick, did not show any wear at all. The stone work of the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia was all ornamented by the sand-blast.

Blocks of granite can be put into a lathe and turned into any form by directing the blast against them. Work that required fourteen days to be cut by hand can be done in half a day by the sand. The large blank type made of wood, and used in printing the big posters you see about the streets, may be cut by fastening the letter stencils on the ends of the blocks. The sand-blast cuts them out in a few minutes.—Christian Union.

The General Assembly of Virginia decided that the conference with the creditors of the State, which took place on the 30th ult., should be conducted by the committees on finance of both houses, acting jointly with authority to arrange the details of the conference.

Mr. Hugh Cullough, president of the Funding Association of the United States, limited; Chas. M. Fry, president of the Bank of New York; Samuel G. Ward, representing Baring Bros., left New York for Richmond on the 28th ult. to attend the legislative conference for funding the Virginia debt.

Webster's Opinion.

Some one speaking in the hearing of the late Daniel Webster of the sublime poetry of the Old Testament, the latter at once and seriously replied, "Ah, my friend, the poetry of Isaiah, and Job, and Habakkuk is grand, indeed; but when you have lived as I have, sixty-seven years, you will give more for the 14th or 17th chapter of John's gospel, or for one of the Epistles, than for all the poetry in the Bible."

BE TRUE.

We have all felt the scorpion sting of treachery, and know that a true, constant and unchanging friend is to be desired above riches, fame, and all the glittering honors of the world. A friend in adversity is like cool water in a thirsty land. A friend, true when all others forsake, when traduced, maligned, crushed,—may God avert such a trial of friendship from us!—is one of the choicest gifts from God to man.

WHAT VOICES INDICATE.

There are light, quick, surface voices that involuntarily seem to utter the saying, "I won't do to tie to." The man's words may assure you of his strength of purpose and reliability, yet his tone contradicts his speech. Then there are low, deep, strong voices, where the words seem ground out as if the man owed humanity a grudge, and meant to pay it some day. That man's opponents may tremble, and his friends may trust his strength of purpose and ability to act. There is the coarse, boisterous, dictatorial tone, invariably adopted by vulgar persons, who have not sufficient cultivation to understand their own insignificance. There is the incredulous tone, that is full of a covert sneer, or a secret "You can't fool me, sir," intonation. Then there is a whining, beseeching voice, that says "sycophant" as plainly as if it uttered the word. It cajoles and flatters you; its words say, "I love you; I admire you; you are everything that you should be." Then there is the tender, musical, compassionate voice, that occasionally goes with sharp features, but always with true benevolence.

If you are full of affectation and pretence, your voice proclaims it. If you are full of honest strength and purpose, your voice proclaims it. If you are cold and calm and firm and persistent, or fickle and foolish and deceptive, your voice will be equally truth telling. You cannot change your voice from a natural to an unnatural tone without its being known that you are so doing.

LIKE BEGETS LIKE.

"How can I best teach my children to be gentle and polite in their manners, and keep them from contracting the language and imitating the ways of the children on the street with whom they must to a greater or less extent come in contact?" The mother is the mirror in which children are fashioned. If she will uniformly use correct language, and require it in her children, if her tones are habitually gentle and sweet, and she insists on the same in them, if she is courteous in her manners to them and demands like courtesy from them, whatever roughnesses of manner or speech they may from time to time fall into from outside association will be but transient.

The Struggle for Wealth.

The greatest struggle with civilized men in this world is for wealth. This is called the prime good, the one thing needful, the great desideratum of life. So men toil for it; deceive, cheat, defraud for it; give time, strength and often good health for it. The truth is, the estimate put on wealth is too high. Its value is over-rated. It is not the best thing men can have. It does not confer peace of mind or purity of heart, heart-felt happiness or contentment, no home joy, no social blessedness, nor any of the solid and enduring enjoyments. Wealthy homes are often no happier than those of the poor. Poverty is always an evil; but a fair supply of the necessaries and comforts of life is quite as apt to confer real peace as great wealth. It is not gold nor goods, therefore, that make men really wealthy. The best wealth is of the heart, an enlightened mind, a loyal conscience, pure affections. He is the wealthiest who possesses the largest stock of wisdom, virtue and love—whose heart beats with warm sympathies for his fellow-men—who finds good in all seasons, all provinces and all men. The generous man who pities the unfortunate; the poor man who resists temptation; the wise man who orders well his life, clings closely to his family and friends; the studious man who seeks instruction in all things, are the truly wealthy men.

EDUCATIONAL.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE,
MECKLENBURG CO. N. C.,
1878—'79.

THE NEXT COLLEGIATE YEAR BEGINS ON THURSDAY, September 12th, 1878, and ends June 12th, 1879. It is divided by a recess of about ten days, embracing Christmas and New Year's-day, into two Terms.

The necessary expenses for the entire year, exclusive of clothing, travelling expenses, and pocket money, vary from $225 to $250.

There are three fully organized Courses of Instruction:

1. The CLASSICAL COURSE, occupying four years.
2. The SCIENTIFIC COURSE, occupying three years.
3. The ECLECTIC COURSE, designed for those who do not wish to take a regular course but to pursue special studies.

Applicants for any class will be received at any time during the year.

Davidson College is on the Railroad, midway between Charlotte and Statesville.

FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS—I will send you the King's Proclamation as the most interesting letter this time. It will, I donbt not, interest you all. Its reception caused great joy to our little flock. Ideas of banishment or slavery are not pleasant ones to be floating through the mind for three months. When I last wrote to you, I believe, our dear elder and first convert, Nan Inta, was in virtual confinement. He was detained there till he was taken sick. His constitution had been severely tried by several attacks of sickness, so that he was poorly prepared to stand a long strain on his nervous system, and there seemed to be but little hope of his getting well there. By the advice and consent of the King's representative, the international judge, I went to the 2d King and asked him to allow Nan Inta to be brought to our place, where he could be better treated by Dr. Cheek. I knew that he had that morning given orders to a young prince who had charge of him to allow him to go home but not to allow him to come to us. That touched me more than anything that he had done, so that I told him it would be well for him to delay proceedings a little; that all his acts were in violation of the treaty between the United States and Siam, and that I did not believe the King or the consul would consent. He seemed rather to believe he had gone too far, and became very pleasant, and kindly gave orders to allow Nan Inta to go back with me. Our letter of complaint was then nearly to Bangkok. Nan Inta, under better surroundings and good treatment, improved. But what answer would the King give? That was the absorbing question, which we could only lay daily before the King of Kings. But we were providentially prevented from long delay. With a dispatch almost unheard of, in three months our letters arrived, bringing the King's order and a copy of the correspondence kindly sent up by the consul. The first response of one of the women when she heard the news was, "Well, we don't have to be banished to Chieng Saon. I like rejoiced. It secured a signal victory, none the less remarkable because a bloodless one. It evidently took the rulers all by surprise. How such a letter could have been obtained from Bangkok in so short a time was surprising. It would have been no less so to ourselves if we had not believed in the power and willingness of God to interfere in behalf of his cause and people in answer to prayer. Some opposition was still made by the 2d King and others with him to try to prevent the judge from making the proclamation, on the ground that unworthy and wicked people would enter the church under the shield of this proclamation. I was sent for to join in the conference on the subject a day or two after the letter arrived. I had another fine opportunity of explaining to all the rulers of Chiengmai before the judge that a strict door is kept to prevent unworthy persons from entering the church and if they should by chance enter they are dismissed, and that in no case could this proclamation shield any one for violation of the laws of the land. The judge sanctioned all that I said and added more to the same effect. He said he had told them all this, but for fear they might not believe him he had sent for me to let them hear it again. It is needless to say that all their efforts were in vain. The King's letter was too explicit, and its execution could not have fallen into kinder hands than Phyo Tapi's. He has proved himself a warm friend and supporter of the Mission, and in nothing more so than in this extremity. He told the princes that the matter was settled, and told me to rest contented about it, and he would issue the proclamation in a day or two, as soon as he had leisure. He has gone beyond our original request in two particulars. We would originally have been very willing to get it without any reference to the Sabbath, and we had no idea of getting in the two neighboring provinces of Lakaun and Lampoon. Both of these have been included. Besides these it has now the prestige of the King of Siam, which it could not have had if it had been granted by the Laos princes. But it is God's prerogative to make the wrath of man to praise him. The remainder we believe he will restrain. The 2d King has been very humble and gracious since the letter came. We think the matter is finally settled now, though we do not, with many of them, apprehend that there will be a rush to go in the church. I told them all that day that they were mistaken about their fear on that point, that if the 2d King would apply that law to join the church with his many wives and other vices we could not receive him till he had renounced his sins. And of course the known opposition of some of the most influential rulers will prevent some of the good effects of the proclamation. But making allowances for all this, it is still a great point gained that any one can now become a Christian without fear of banishment or death. But still we do not forget that royal decrees cannot regenerate the soul. We wish all our young friends to understand that, in the case of themselves and others, that is a Divine work. God's Holy Spirit alone can do that. And do you all realize how willing he is to do it for you; how ready to hear your prayers for others. We ask again special prayer for our true friend, the King's representative, who really at times seems to have a saving knowledge of the truth.

The intelligent prince of whom I wrote before, who had satisfied himself that the world is not a vast plain by the difference between the opposite movements of birds and that of the sun, has still as inquisitive a mind as ever. On parting from us the other day for an absence of several months he asked with apparent earnestness for prayer that he may be led to the truth. The governor of the new province of Chieng Soan has manifested more interest in having his people taught than any Laos ruler I have met. He would give a warm welcome to his province to any missionary.

We hear, just as I am writing, that there may yet be some collision between Burmah and this country in reference to Chieng Soan. It was originally Burmese territory, and a letter has just been sent down forbidding the Laos to resettle the province as the Burmese King designs to do it himself.

Notwithstanding all the disadvantages under which we labored the mission year has been a prosperous one. Ten adults were baptized, and five children and one child of the covenant received a profession of faith. More has been done than ever towards a school. We have the nucleus of a girls' school of ten pupils, started in part to educate the children of the church and preparatory to the teachers who have been promised to carry it on on a larger scale.

But I must close for want of time. Among the other trials for the past few months we had a famine for letters. We can go quite comfortably two months without a mail. By the third one the time seems long to wait. But by and after the fourth month we turn with many a longing thought to Simonton Female College and the Bingham School and the dear children studying in them, as well as to other dear friends, concerning whom we hope to hear at least the negative news that they are still living, if we do not hear from them direct. And, as usual, of the old and the young, we ask for earnest, effectual prayer for the Laos rulers, the Laos mission and the Laos people. Your sincere friend,

DANIEL MCGILVARY.

PROCLAMATION OF RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE FOR THE LAOS.

I, Phyo Tape Phrai Chune, the royal representative of His Majesty, the supreme King of Siam, at Chiengmai, and also for the Laos States and cities of Lakaun and Lampoor, do hereby make a proclamation to the princes and rulers and officers of various grades, and the common people, in the States and cities named, that His Majesty, the King of Siam, was graciously pleased to send me a royal letter, with the royal seal, to the effect that D. E Sickles, Esq., the United States Consul, had communicated to His Excellency, the Foreign Minister of Siam, a complaint signed by Rev. D. McGilvary and Dr. M. A. Cheek, against certain parties for molesting the Christians and compelling them to observe their old religious customs. The Foreign Minister had laid the subject before His Majesty, who had most graciously listened to the said complaint, and had given the following royal command in reference to the same:

That as religious and civil duties do not conflict, any religion that is seen to be true may be embraced by any person without restraint; that the responsibility of a correct or a wrong decision rests with the individuals making it; that there is nothing in the foreign treaty, nor in the laws and customs of Siam to throw any restriction on the religious worship of any. To be more specific; if any person or persons wish to embrace the Christian religion they are freely allowed to follow their own choice, and this proclamation is designed from this time forth to remove any fear that may have existed to the contrary. It is, moreover, strictly enjoined on the princes and rulers, and the relatives and friends of those who may wish to embrace the Christian religion, that they throw no obstacles in the way, and that no creed be enforced on the Christians, nor work demanded of them which their religion forbids them to hold or to do, such as the worship and feasting of demons or departed spirits, and working on the Sabbath day. Except in case of war and other unavoidable or necessary work, and not feigned as such, they are to have the free observance of the Sabbath. No obstacle is to be thrown in the way of American citizens employing any persons needed for their service. The treaty in this respect must be observed. Whenever this proclamation is known by the princes and rulers, and officers and people, they are to beware that they violate no precept contained therein.

Proclamation made on the 11th of the 12th waxing moon, year of the tiger, and 11th year of His Majesty's reign.

Prayers and tears are the Church's arms; therewith she fights not only against her enemies, but for her friends; and to those means they have recourse.—Henry.

A resolution that is communicated is no longer within thy power: thy intentions become now the plaything of chance; he who would have his commands certainly carried out must take man by surprise.—Goethe.

When you say you will begin to take pains to-morrow, be assured that it is the same thing as if you said: "Today I will be shameless; impertinent, base; it shall be the power of others to grieve me; I will be passionate, I will be envious to-day."—Epictetus.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

EDGEWORTH FEMALE SEMINARY.

The city of Greensboro is now an enterprising and handsome town, with the Railroads offering facilities to the merchant and traveller, and with still others in contemplation. It has fine private residences, gardens of flowers and evergreens, and sumptuous hotels and other buildings with mansard roofs, and is the home of an intelligent, refined and prosperous Christian community. In former days it was a small village of a few houses, situated about five miles southeast from Martinsville—the ancient Guilford court house, where Gen. Greene was defeated by Lord Cornwallis. But Martinsville has decayed until not a house remains, and Greensboro has flourished. Here was the home of the Rev. Wm. D. Paisley, the home of the Morcheads, the Lindsays, the Gilmers, the Dicks, the Sloans, the Caldwells, the Gorrells. Here live other families, both in the town and the surrounding country, that make this one of the most pleasant Presbyterian communities in the State. And no doubt much of this is owing to the influence of the two great schools, there established, "Caldwell Institute, and Edgeworth Female Seminary. Edgeworth was not indeed an ecclesiastical school, but it was established, maintained and conducted by Presbyterians from the beginning to the close. The Hon. John M. Morehead, seeing the need of such an institution, both for his own use, and the benefit of his neighbors established and watched over it to the end of his days. And no one can estimate the amount of good accomplished by this Seminary not only for North Carolina, but for the whole South. For after Salem, Edgeworth was the next large and popular female school in the South, in its day. Four years before the foundation of this Seminary, the trustees of the town school sent to Princeton, N. J., for a first class teacher; and secured the services of Miss Mary Ann Hoye, who had once taught in the family of Dr. Archibald Alexander, and came fully endorsed by him. And nobly did she sustain the high recommendations, for she combined all the qualities necessary to manage an establishment of this kind. Together with Gov. Morehead, Miss Hoye laid the plan of Edgeworth, and it went into operation under her control. In 1840 the Seminary was opened with Miss Hoy and other excellent teachers, in charge of the literary department, and Dr. D. P. Weir and lady in charge of the domestic department. Success crowned the effort. About forty boarders, on an average, besides day scholars, were in attendance in those early years. In 1844 Miss Hoye was called from her work on earth, and a short time thereafter the Rev. Gilbert Morgan, a Presbyterian minister from New York, and highly recommended, took charge of the school. His presidency lasted from 1845 to 1849. Mr. Morgan was regarded as a good teacher, a fine grammarian and successful in teaching his pupils the art of English composition. In a knowledge of practical affairs, and the business of everyday life he was not regarded as so great a success. His pupils entertained the notion that Mr. Morgan, upon the advice of one of the girls, administered a pound of saleratus to a cow to raise her out of a ditch into which she had fallen. The girl declared that saleratus was good to "raise things," especially biscuits, and she thought it might raise a cow as well. No doubt this was a fiction. During the administration of Mr. Morgan the average number of boarders was about fifty, and the day scholars thirty. Mr. Morgan removed to Salisbury, N. C., in 1849, and five years later to Bradford's Springs, S. C.

His successor in Edgeworth was Prof. Richard Sterling, who had been professor of natural science in Hampden-Sidney College. A fine scholar himself, and a man of excellent administrative abilities, experienced in the details of the school room, he gathered around him an efficient corps of teachers of music, French, drawing, painting, the mathematics and sciences, as well as the English branches, and won for himself and his school an enviable reputation all over the South. Under him the Seminary attained its highest grade of popularity and efficiency. The general average of boarders at this time was eighty or ninety. At one time as high as one hundred and thirty boarders were there, while the day scholars amounted to about forty.

The war brought all these pleasant things to a close, and the handsome and commodious buildings, with their grounds blooming with fragrant flowers, became a hospital, and eventually fell for a time into the hands of the Federal troops.

The place was again thoroughly repaired and refitted, and in 1867 once more opened as a female seminary, under the care of the Rev. J. M. M. Caldwell, with an average number of boarders of about sixty, and forty day scholars. In 1870 Mr. Caldwell returned to Rome, Ga., and the building was no longer used as a school for girls. The property, after the death of Governor Morehead, fell into the hands of Mr. Julius A. Gray, the son-in-law of Gov Morehead. So great was the pressure of the hard times that it was not considered advisable to reopen the institution.

During its career of twenty-five years an average of ten or fifteen graduates went forth every year, say three hundred in all, into every state of the South and Southwest. Besides these hundreds of others spent one or two years there. At various times precious revivals of religion were enjoyed in the Presbyterian church, under the ministrations of Rev. John A. Grotter, Rev. J. Jones Smyth and Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., and Edgeworth always shared, often abundantly, in these seasons of refreshing. But Edgeworth is no more. About five years ago these commodious buildings caught fire, and in a few hours nothing remained but heaps of bricks and stones and ashes, amid the shrubberies and shade trees where so many women received their education, and many a pupil, now wife and mother, was saddened by the news of the destruction.

Edgeworth was one of Gov. Morehead's favorite enterprises, and he lavished the proceeds on the improvement of the place. A wise, patriotic and far-seeing public man, he loved to nurture and watch over this choice home enterprise, and make it a pleasant home for the girls that were gathered there. And no doubt, with a just pride and satisfaction he gazed from his own home near by upon the spacious buildings and fair forest grove devoted to the cause of female education. To many of the pupils, in needy circumstances, he forgave his share of their indebtedness for their education, and was satisfied with this return for all his investment of labor and capital.

Edgeworth was always under Presbyterian control, a kind of annex to the Greensboro Presbyterian church, and all its principals were Presbyterians, as was also the founder and owner.

The material for this account of Edgeworth has been supplied mainly by Mrs. Letitia H. Walker of Leaksville, N. C. J. R.

AN EXPERIENCE.

LUCIA.

Long time ago,—how long it seems!
Just in the dawn of womanhood,
Beside the portal of my heart
A lovely stranger waiting stood
I wondered then, and wonder now
He'd seek a home so dark with sin;
But Grace withdrew the iron bars
And let the waiting stranger in.

While on the threshold yet He stood,
I would have drawn the bolts once more,
For there were chambers in my heart
Which never were unveiled before;
And there were idols on the walls—
And broken idols on the floor,
And in the throne room self abode
And undisputed sceptre bare.

Could He but see all that I saw,
I thought in deep disgust He'd turn,
The spotless One. The Undefiled
Would surely such uncleanness spurn;
But no, far better than myself,
He knew each hidden dark recess:
With love I could not comprehend
He did not seem to love me less

And then I saw as step by step
Into my heart He made His way,
That in His presence, idols fell;
His blood washed all the stains away,
And with a joy I cannot tell,
I gladly every cell revealed,
Confessing all the guilt and shame,
And felt for all the pardon sealed.

The conflict o'er—the terror past,
What was there left for me, meanwhile,
But calmly, with unbroken rest,
To bask enraptured in His smile!
No sentinel I placed on guard;
No warders at the castle door;
For all was joy and peace within.
What could I ask or wish for more!

How long it was, I cannot tell,
One day I woke, my peace had flown;
His love and presence seemed a dream.
And self again was on the throne,
Old idols from many a niche
Looked down upon me as of yore;
And the old conflict was resumed
With trembling never known before
And when again He deigned to come,
Subdued I cast me at His feet
To beg for helmet sword and shield
The endless conflict still to meet.

As then I prayed, so now I pray,
Nor seek to fold my hands in rest;
For what "awaits" not here is given,
'Tis his own way and He knows best,
And I content, will bide my time,
For I have here my heaven in part,
While making ready for my Lord,
The upper chamber of my heart.
And oft he comes and sups with me,
And lets me taste his heavenly wine,
And bread, such as he says one day,
Will be in rich abundance mine

LEARNING TO SAVE.

The first thing to be learned by a boy or young man, or anybody else having the least ambition to become a useful member of society, is the habit of saving. No matter if a boy or girl has wealthy parents, each should learn to save, if for no other reason than that riches are well known to "take to themselves wings and fly away." Few are so well-to-do as to be secure against poverty and want. The children of the wealthy classes are often miserably poor, while men of large means have commenced life without other advantages than habits of industry coupled with the disposition to save. It is especially important that the children of people in moderate circumstances and of the poor should learn to take care of the money they get. A boy who is earning 2s., 3s. or more a day should manage to save a portion of it if possible. If he can lay by only 1s. a week let him save that. It doesn't amount to much, it is true, but it is worth saving; it is better saved than wasted—better saved than thrown away for tobacco, or any other worthless or useless article or object. But the best thing about it is that the boy who saves 52s. a year on a very meagre salary acquires a habit of taking care of his money which will be of the utmost importance to him. The reason why working men as a class do not get ahead faster, are not more independent, is that they have never learned to save their earnings. It does not matter a great deal whether a man receives a salary of five shillings a day, or a pound, if he gets rid of it all during the week, so that there is nothing left on Saturday night, he will not get rich very rapidly. He will never have much ahead. But the individual who receives five shillings a day and is able to save a shilling, or the one getting a pound who is careful to lay by five shillings, is laying up something for a rainy day. Young people who expect to labor with their hands for what they may have of this world's goods, who have no ambition or wish to become professional men, office-holders, or speculators, should by all means acquire habits of economy; learn to save. So surely as they do this, so surely will they be able to accumulate, so surely will they be in a situation to ask no special favors. Every man ought to learn to look out for himself and rely upon himself. Every man needs to feel that he is the peer of every other man, and he cannot do it if he is penniless. Money is power and those who have it exert a wider influence than the destitute. They are more independent. Hence it should be the ambition of every young man to acquire, and to do this he must learn to save. This is the first lesson to be learned, and the youth who cannot master it will never have anything. He will be a dependant.—Scottish-American Journal.

A BOY'S LEISURE HOURS.

What a boy does with his leisure is most important; what he gets in school is mainly drill or exercise; it is a gymnasium to him; he must eat elsewhere. What he does with his spare hours determines his destiny. Suppose he reads history every day, or scientific books; in the course of a few years he becomes learned. It matters very little what he undertakes, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Sanscrit, all disappear if he uses his spare time on them.

A boy was employed in a lawyer's office and had the daily paper to amuse himself with. He commenced to study French, and at that little desk became a fluent reader and writer of the French language. He accomplished this by laying aside the newspaper and taking up something not so amusing but far more profitable.

A coachman was often obliged to wait long hours while his mistress made calls. He determined to improve the time; he found a small volume containing the Eclogues of Virgil, but could not read it, and so purchased a Latin Grammar. Day by day he studied this, and finally mastered all its intricacies. His mistress came behind him one day as he stood by the horses waiting for her, and asked him what he was so intently reading. "Only a bit of Virgil, my lady." "What! do you read Latin?" "A little, my lady." She mentioned this to her husband, who insisted that David should have a teacher to instruct him. In a few years he became a learned man, and was a useful and beloved minister in Scotland.

A boy was hired to open and shut the gates to let the teams out of an iron mine. He sat on a log all day by the side of the gate. Sometimes an hour would pass before the teams came, and this he employed so well that there was scarcely any fact in history that escaped his attention. He began with a little book on English history that he found in the road. Having learned that thoroughly he borrowed of a minister Goldsmith's History of Greece. This good man became greatly interested in him, and loaned him books, and was often seen sitting by him on the log conversing with him about the people of ancient times.—Scottish-American Journal.

CHRIST WITH US.

We think of our Christ too much as we think of the dead heroes; as one who has lived, has wrought a mighty work, has left the world. We ought the rather constantly to think of him, not only as one who has done something for us, but as he who is now doing; not only as the one who has lived, but as he who is now living; not only as the one who has been in the world, but as he who is now in it just as utterly as when the dust of Palestine fell upon his blessed feet. We ought to think of him as a veritable, vital, vitalizing, personal presence with us.

Standing in the crypt of the Cathedral of St. Paul's in London your eye is attracted by a huge mass of porphyry, to gain which they searched the continent of Europe. They wanted something large, massive, grand. At length they came upon it in Cornwall, England. They cut it, shaped it, polished it, at last lifted it upon its plinth of Aberdeen granite and dedicated it as the tomb of their grandest man. On one side you read the inscription, "Arthur, Duke of Wellington, born May 1, 1879; died September 14, 1852." A great man was buried when they buried him. His hand had been for many a year on the helm of the British Empire. His influence remains indeed, but his personality has departed. In these difficult times confronting England, in the sense of personal presence she cannot have the Iron Duke.

Pass beyond the Channel, and in Paris take your place beneath the golden dome of the Hotel des Invalides and behold the most magnificent sepulchre in the world. You are gazing now at the burial place of Wellington's chief antagonist. Above, the dome; beneath your feet, the variegated pavement; down in the open crypt, rimmed round with the marble balustrade, the sarcophagus. Circled with wreaths of laurel are written in mosaic the principal victories of the great hero. Ranged round are the tattered flags he bore, waving, to triumph. Read that inscription—it is a sentence from the great Emperor's will written in his exile: "I desire that my ashes lie on the banks of the Seine, among the French people whom I have loved so well." But Napoleon himself has gone. His influence remains, but he is not in the world. Him neither can France have in any way of personal presence.

Go to Rome, stand for a moment under that encircling dome of the Pantheon. Raphael loved that majestic building, more majestic even than St. Peter's. It was his wish that he might be buried there. Look! There on the wall it is written, "Here is the tomb of Raphael." But Raphael is not there. You may gaze entranced, upon his Transfiguration in the Vatican, you may be touched and softened as his wonderful madonnas tell you the story of that virgin motherhood with its pains, its mysteries, its beatitudes. But Raphael was done with this world at thirty-seven. He puts color no more to canvas. Everywhere in Rome you may see something that he has done, nowhere can you see anything that he is doing. His works last, he has gone forever.

The great heroes, painters, poets, teachers—they have been; but, as to this world, they are no longer. They have gone otherwhere. They have carried their presence with them. They are memories; they are not presences.

Is the Lord Christ like these? Does he speak only to us from the pages which were traced by his followers eighteen centuries ago? Is he no more than the first of the shadows of the past, the first of memories, the first of biographies, the most perfect of human ideals? Is he only an ideal, after all? Does he reign only in virtue of a mighty tradition of human thought and feeling in his favor, which creates and supports his imaginary throne?

No, he is a present, personal, living Saviour, "Lo! I am with you alway, even to the end of the world," is not an unfulfilled promise. He is not with us merely as a thought but as a life. He gathers us up into his own being; he floods us with it. There is inspiration here certainly for any duty, for any endurance. The faith, Christ with me, can make the poorest and the hardest life, joyous, glorious. This is the faith that overcometh the world.—Christian Union.

PUTTING A GOOD FACE ON IT.

It is always interesting to observe the bearing of travellers on such occasions as the starting of a ship for sea. As a rule the men are smoking; their demeanor is that of old salts to whom "a life on the ocean wave" is one round of delight; they select their places at the dinner-table for the voyage as though they intended to be present at every meal; they critically examine the smoke-room, inquire into the arrangements of the ship, as if they were personally responsible for the success of the journey, and generally comport themselves as men to whom the trip is a mere bagatelle. The stewards are not deceived by these appearances. Perhaps experience has made them wise; perhaps the "eternal fitness of things," which has ordained that they shall spend their lives in ministering to wanderers, has made them preternaturally sharp; perhaps there is a certain mark by which "lubbers" may be known to those whose habit is to go down to the sea in ships. We know not; but one thing is certain—the lean, lithe, imp-like entities, who show the traveller his cabin and deposit his luggage in his berth, are able to tell at a glance exactly how much care their victim will want, and after what fashion it will be necessary to treat him. Their judgment is unerring; they know well the man who is "not going to let the company gain anything by him," and the poor gentleman who will leave the table at the first plunge the vessel takes, and stay in his berth till the voyage is nearly over. It is of no use to put the hat on one side of the head, thrust the hands in the pockets of a pilot jacket, and smoke a cigar before them; they know the sequel to this brilliant beginning, and evidence their knowledge by an ill-concealed grin. Not but what they often have to deal with passengers who are more than a match for them—for that they are prepared. They know that they must "weigh the wool with the yarn," that by far the majority of the ship's company will be at their mercy before the voyage is over, and that if here and there one of their charge prove a nuisance, the rest are docile and helpless enough.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Items from the London Weekly Review:

The Old Catholics are about to make a new effort to establish their ritual in Paris. A Catholic Gallican church is about to be opened by Father Hyacinthe, who now signs himself Hyacinthe Loyson, Priest. The service will be conducted in the French language. An attempt to found a French Church was made in the time of Louis Philippe, but in spite of the efforts of the famous Abbe Chatel, the undertaking failed.

The case of young Mortara, which some twenty-five years ago attracted so large a degree of public attention, may not have been forgotten. Mortara, who belonged to an Israelite family, had been secretly baptized by a maid-servant, and grave difficulties having afterwards arisen between him and his family, the Pope, Pius IX., took him under his immediate protection. He is now Canon of the Cathedral of San Giovanni in Laterano, and he has been residing for some years past in France, in the diocese of St. Die. He is one of the four regular prebendaries who officiate at the sanctuary of Mattin Court a well-known place of pilgrimage.

"The new French journal is being legally constituted; the instrument is drawn up, and the title is again changed, and definitely fixed as Le Reformateur, Journal Anti-clerical et Republican. A Reformer is better than a Demolisher. The promoters battled hard for their original single title of Anti-Clerical, but the chief Protestants declared that they should in that case withhold all support. It was also stated that schoolmasters and other important functionaries under Government would necessarily be prevented receiving it with such a title. 'Clerical' and 'Jesuit' have become politically synonymous in common language; the dictionary distinction is little heeded. The Committee of Management and Supervision is composed of all shades of Protestantism, from Orthodoxy to Rationalism; and the chief editor, whose name has not yet transpired, is expected to be a Protestant pastor, formerly a Roman Catholic. The general feeling is, that such a bold attempt should have come entirely from Roman Catholics tired of Rome, and not from Protestants at all. But the experiment is on the eve of being made; and soon it is expected that France will at length have a daily Democratic paper (sold for one son), representing the yearnings of a large mass of sensible men who wish for a better religion than that of Rome."

Six Chinese converts were baptized in Sydney by the Rev. Dr. Steel, Presbyterian minister, on 27th October last.

The Pope's newspaper at Rome calls Dr. Taylor's new Baptist church in that city an "infernal hall."

Two priests of the Old Catholic faith have recently gone over to the Roman Church in Baden.

THE ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—It may be interesting to mention that during 1878 the English Presbyterians have been steadily extending their borders. The year has, however, been mainly devoted to the work of consolidation, which was found necessary after the rapid growth of the Church during the past few years. At the same time several new churches have been erected, especially in London, and numerous preaching stations have been opened throughout the country, some of which promise ere long to develop into regular charges. In the congregations burdened with a debt, satisfactory, and, in many instances, laudable efforts have been made towards the liquidation of the same. The Church, as a whole, is in a healthy and vigorous condition, and bids fair to enter upon 1879 more hopefully perhaps, than it has embarked upon any year since the resuscitation of Presbyterianism in England.

On the evening of Friday, the 10th inst., a gathering of converts from Judaism assembled in the Montagne-street Mission Hall, to honor the invitation of Mess. Elrich to a social gathering of Hebrew Christians. The hall was crowded, and after plentiful refreshments had been enjoyed, the Rev. H. A. Stern presided. The venerable Mr. Stern was once a captive of King Theodore. This remarkable and unique gathering more resembled a meeting of Christians in the first than the nineteenth century, for there was not one but had borne persecutions more or less severe upon his acceptance of the Christian faith. Three of the speakers had suffered imprisonment, including the illustrious chairman, for their courageous witness borne to the truth as in Jesus. Fifteen differing nationalities were represented in this assembly. Most wonderful it was to behold these reconciled children of Israel, gathered from all parts of the world, meeting in this great city of London, to enjoy one evening at least of their lives in unalloyed happiness. The speakers followed each other in rapid succession, eager to proclaim their allegiance to the lowly Nazarene, and their steadfast faith to the cause for which one and all had more or less sacrificed his worldly prospects. The happy meeting closed with devout thanksgiving, and the doxology was sung by lips most certainly not trained in infancy to sing the praises of the Three in One.

MISCELLANY.

Gleaned from exchanges:

THE ORR BEQUEST.—This is a sum of money which was sunk by a gentleman named Orr about thirty years ago in order that the interest shall be divided annually about the New Year to the oldest, youngest, tallest, and shortest woman married in the Established Church of St. Cyrus during the year. The measurement took place at the manse on Monday, when five competitors put in an appearance for the four shares of £6 1s. 10d. each. Considerable difficulty was experienced in coming to a decision.

One other fact concerning the Tabernacle pastor (Spurgeon). On the 8th of January he published the first sermon of a twenty-fifth volume. For twenty-four years he has issued a sermon every week, making a total of 1,450 discourses. This fact is, so far as I know unique in the annals of the pulpit. Long may the great preacher live and carry on the many good works which he has been permitted to set on foot.

A REMARKABLE MAN.—At a temperance meeting recently held in Alabama, Colonel Lehmanonsky, who had been twenty-two years a soldier in the armies of Napoleon Bonaparte, addressed the meeting. He arose before the audience, tall, erect, and vigorous, with the glow of health in his face, and said: "You see before you a man seventy years old. I have fought two hundred battles, have fourteen wounds on my body, have lived thirty days on horseflesh, with the bark of trees for my bread, snow and ice for my drink, the canopy of heaven for my covering, without stockings or shoes on my feet, and with only a few rags for my clothing. In the desert of Egypt I have marched for days with a burning sun upon my naked head, feet blistered in the scorching sand, with my eyes, nostrils, and mouth filled with dust, and thirst so tormenting that I tore open the veins of my arms and sucked my own blood! Do you ask, how could I survive all these horrors? I answer that, next to the kind Providence of God, I owe my preservation, my health and vigor to this fact, that I never drank a drop of spiritnous liquor in my life."

The inscriptions to be placed on the pedestal of Cleopatra's Needle on the Thames embankment have now been finally decided upon. At the personal suggestion of the Queen; it has been resolved to add the names of the noble men who lost their lives in their attempt to rescue the crew of the Cleopatra during the storm in the Bay of Biscay in October, 1877. The inscriptions are as follows: —On the eastern face, "This obelisk quarried at Syene, was erected at On (Heliopolis) by the Pharaoh, Thothmes III., about 1500 B. C. Lateral inscriptions were added nearly two centuries later by Ramesa the Great. Removed during the Greek dynasty, to Alexandria, the royal city of Cleopatra. It was there erected in the eighth year of Augustus Cæsar, B. C., 23." Western face, "This obelisk, prostrate for centuries in the sands of Alexandria, was presented to the British nation A. D. 1819, by Mahommed Ali, Viceroy of Egypt; a worthy memorial of our distinguished countrymen Nelson and Abercrombie." Embankment face, "This obelisk, through the patriotic zeal of Erasmus Wilson, F. R. S., was brought from Alexandria encased in an iron cylinder; was abandoned in a storm in the Bay of Biscay; recovered, and erected on this spot by John Dixon, C. E., in the forty-second year of the reign of Queen Victoria, 1878." To face the river, "William Asken, James Gardiner, Joseph Benbow, Michael Burns, William Donald, William Paton, perished in a bold attempt to succor the crew of the obelisk ship Cleopatra during the storm, October 14th 1877."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1879.

SCEPTICISM.

There are two kinds of scepticism which the unreflecting are apt to confonnd with each other. They are however the poles apart in their origin, character and resnlts. The first is born of variety, nursed by an itching for notoriety, and is productive of flippant criticism or lond monthed blasphemy. It proclaims itself with brazen lungs and challenges notice with a still more brazen impndence. It tempts a righteons indignation to chastise it, bnt after all the bitterest chastisement is to doom it to the suffering of silence instead of the notice it courts and covets.

The other kind of scepticism is the very opposite to this. There is not even a tinctnre of vanity abont it. It jealously gnards itself from all notice, and is concealed with the shrinking sensitiveness of a malformation. The heart knoweth its own bitterness and the secret suffering is only revealed to the most intimate of friends, and then generally as the answer to questions of anxious interest, seeking the cause of an evident pain in order, if possible, to remove it.

Perhaps there is more of this real, silent, suffering donbt than of the former kind.

This world bristles all over with interrogation points and there are few perhaps, who have dived deep or soared high in the search after trnth, who have not fonnd granite at one extreme resisting their efforts, or clonds on the other enveloping their heads and clonding their vision. If only they can pierce the granite they strike the pnre waters nnturbid at their sonrce, or working and waiting in the darkness of the clonds they may at last see the snn in his glory.

But the suffering during an eclipse of faith none can appreciate save those who have waited in the dark. Duty calls some to go into the depths and to ascend the heights; where the plain voice of dnty is not heard perhaps it is wisest to be modest in snch matters and dwell in the plain.

It is well to recollect the difference however between scepticism and scepticism. We are not of those who decry or nnderrate reason, even when it is daring enough to bewilder itself by curiously approaching too near the blinding splendor, in which its Creator hides at once Himself and many of his plans and purposes. We can even feel a deep sympathy for the sceptic if he is a sincere one; who appreciates the awful results of his scepticism, blotting ont every ray of hope and leaving him in an eternal, starless night; whose scepticism is not of the flippant kind, bnt that which oppressed with donbts which it cannot solve and cannot conquer, asks in a wail of angnish, "Who will show ns any good?" Especially if he is a man to whose strong mind, deep stndy and large experience have given maturity; npon whose hair age has left its frosty foot-prints, and on whose brow the finger of care has written its unmistakable lines; for snch a sceptic we have nothing bnt deep sorrow and brotherly sympathy.

But for the modern, fashionable sceptic of the day; the yonng stripling, who with the childish tyranny of the nursery still clinging to him, affects scepticism as an indication of unusual mental vigor; who retails the profane wit of snch men as Paine and Voltaire and learnedly qnotes Hnme and Gibbon; who arrogates to himself an intellect too soaring to stoop to that faith, in the inspiration of which Newton "stepped from star to star" in his proggress towards the Infinite, and Blaize Pascal threw the radiance of his name to illnstrate and glorify the age in which he lived, and onr own noble Agazsiz read to ns "the silent poem of the nniverse"; who regrets in a mournfnl bnt boasting way that his great acnmen will not allow him the consolation of snch a "child-like faith;" for snch a man we have neither sympathy nor sorrow and disgust almost strangles pity.

PROTESTANT FRANCE.

From no other qnarter of the world do there come snch cheering indications of advance in the conrse of Evangelical Christianity as from France. Rev. Dr. Leonard W. Bacon fnrnishes to the Christian Union news which we think every Protestant will hail with pleasnre.

The snbject of discnssion now before the people of France as presented by two of the most influential organs of public opinion is, what is the "best method of resisting the encroachments of Ultramontanism."

Public opinion in France now indeed seems to be in a state of transition. A more hopefnl state exists by far than at former periods of her history, when there was a rebonnd from one extreme of nnreason to another. The hopefulness now consists in the fact that the people disgnsted with Ultramontanism are calmly looking out for a better system. It is not a movement of blind passion, bnt of cool, though not fnlly enlightened reason. The "Critique Philosophe" advocates formal renunciation of Roman Catholicism by all citizens and registration as Protestants. The latter term indeed does not seem to mean necessarily, that is in all cases, more than anti-Roman Catholics, bnt it does mean that, and so meaning avoids the qnicksand in which the Old Catholic chnrch was snnk, and plants itself on solid ground. In general, however, the movement contemplates much more than simply anti-Romanism. The pnblic mind seems to be awakened to the importance of a religion, that shall be free from the errors of doctrine as well as from the mal-practices of Popery, though the latter being more manifest first and most completely engage pnblic attention.

The Journal du Protestantism du Francaise says: "There are now on file in the Department of Worship forty-five demands, in regular form for the organization of new parishes for the Reformed Chnrch." This is an outgrowth of this upstirring of the pnblic mind. An advance wave of the Protestantism which is to bear down all before it, in regenerated France.

It is said that five members of the new Cabinet in France are Protestants—a most significant fact. Dr. Bacon says with regard to the ontlook:

A beantiful instance of what sort of results may be expected is witnessed in the case of M. Renonvier of Avignon, chief editor of the "Critique Philosophe." With M. Bonchard, with Jules Favre, with M. Laveleye, the statistician, with many another honorable names that might be mentioned, he decided, as a citizen, for patriotic motives merely, to transfer his registration from the Roman Catholic Church to the Reformed Chnrch. Bnt this act done with all seriousness, was followed by still more earnest thonght that became deepened and intensified into a religious experience, of which one of my correspondents says that it is to be compared with that of Saul of Tarsus before Damascns.

Resnlts of this sort mnst be looked for in all these forty-five new Protestant parishes in varions parts of France. Those who for merely civil and patriotic reasons have placed themselves and their families nnder the influence of the truth will certainly in many cases feel the power of the trnth in their hearts."

AGENT AT CHARLOTTE.

A. G. Brenizer, Esq., has kindly consented to act as Agent for this paper during the absence of Col. J. L. Brown at Raleigh. Onr friends in Charlotte, and those in that vicinity who find it most convenient to remit throngh Charlotte, will oblige by making a note of this.

UNPRESBYTERIAL.

A "Deist" writing to one of the Northern papers, charged that snbscription to the "doctrines of the Trinity, total depravity, election, &c.," were necessary before admission would be granted to church membership. Whereupon a correspondent of the same paper gives his experience thus:

"A number of years ago I united on confession with Dr. Hall's chnrch in this city (New York) All that was required of me, in a single interview with the pastor, was to acknowledge my trnst in the Lord Jesns Christ as a personal Saviour. I came before no session or examining committee, and was not obliged to subscribe to any dogmatic statement or belief."

We sincerely trnst that so much of this statement as we have italicised is not true. If it is, Dr. Hall is more prelate than presbyter. We trust in any event that the practice is not general.

There seems, indeed, a tendency to laxness in practice that bodes no good. The matter above referred to directly concerns the Northern Church, bnt it comes to ns that onr candidates for the ministry recommended, not as we understand by the Faculties of our seminaries, but by individnal members of the Faculties, and against the views, perhaps, of other members of the Faculties, snpply vacant churches, and sometimes fill pulpits by invitation (hundreds of miles away from their schools and their teachers,) and preach before licensure. Thns practicing lay evangelism in its most palpable, if not its most aggravated, form, utterly setting aside and ignoring our Form of Government, and treating the Presbytery with the utmost disrespect, not to say contempt.

How is this? Who will give ns the light? Who other than Presbytery can license either to preach or to lectnre, except under the eye and in reach of the ear of a preceptor? Bnt is it done? How? When? Where? Why? By what anthority? Is any man in the Church—are any men—greater than the Chnrch? We want light. We invite discnssion—not of the editor for daring to broach the subject, bnt of the snbject. We want all the information we can get, from any one and from all qnarters.

SEARCH REWARDED.

In onr explorations for news we came across the following in the Monroe Enquirer and we record it with pleasnre:

A CARD.

To the Ladies Aid Society of the Monroe Presbyterian Church:

On yesterday the 7th of Febrnary, I received your nice present, a valuable gift. You will please accept my thanks. I appreciate it as a token of yonr esteem, and as a desire to provide for my material comfort. I hope the Lord, the Great Bishop may ever give me, his nnder Bishop, grace, so to walk as to merit, your esteem; and wisdom so to divide his word of trnth as to administer nnto yonr spiritnal welfare. May snccess crown yonr labor of love. R. A. MILLER.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Is congregational singing a lost art? The cheering command is: "Praise God in His sanctnary." "Let the people praise Thee oh God,—let all the people praise Thee;" "Kings of the earth and all people; princes and all jndges of the earth. Both yonng men and maidens; old men and children." We do not know who is omitted in this connt. Yet we do know that there are many who are silent in the sanctnary? Why?

Every one who can ought to nttter vocal praise. Every one shonld read the Word of God. Bnt no one can read that does not learn how to read. Every one ought to sing God's praises. Yet it is eqnally trne, no one can do so to edification without learning how. Many seem to think they can sing as they see! It is every one's dnty to make honest and earnest effort to fit himself for a profitable engagement in this delightful part of divine worship. Parents and congregations shonld surely afford snch opportnnities to the yonng.

Then with a liberal supply of Hymn and Tune Books (onr own of conrse) and a wise choice of tnnes, onr congregational music wonld swell like a sea and bear ns heavenward on its billows.

We have a large number of communications from onr friends on hand. They will appear in time. We beg the writers to bear with ns patiently. We are obliged to them all.

The Presbyterian says there is no doubt that the Princeton Review no longer satisfies the Presbyterian Chnrch, and suggests that the Catholic Presbyterian might be made a representative Magazine and so expownd the common faith of Presbyterians throughout the world. Very good! Bnt we suggest the Southern Presbyterian Review is orthodox and able and would meet all requirements.

We beg that our friends will not forget that we want every item of news they can send ns. Let it be short as may be, bnt contain all that ought to be known. We want every week to give our readers several items of fresh news from the churches. Please send by first mail when can. A postal card often, can be made to contain a treasure to the editor.

Another matter. Friends who request us to copy obituary or marriage notices from exchanges mnst not feel disappointed if they do not appear in our paper. We never scan over exchanges for these items, and such requests will almost certainly be overlooked. The surest and most reasonable way is to send a direct copy and request to the editor. Over ten lines of obitnary must be paid for in advance.

Don't you believe it! If over you are tempted to think that if you had lived in the days when men were called to lay down their lives for the truth, you would have been a martyr, ask yonrself if you are willing to lay down an interesting book, or leave a warm fire, to go to the prayer-meeting, or to visit a sick neighbor. And if you have to answer No! to yonr own conscience, as very possibly you will, don't deceive yonrself, the fire wonld have burned very low before you went into the flames. The Christian life is one of self-denial always—inevitably—and of sacrifice oven to the laying down of one's life at times. Christ himself illustrated the principle in giving himself—was himself the incarnate principle, of sacrifice. Yon may not be called to perish at the stake, but you are called to make any sacrifice of comfort or convenience to worship God in ways of his appointment, or to do good as you have opportunity at any cost to self.

You may not be called to suffer yourself torn in pieces by wild beasts, but you are called to pay him who serves you as God's ambassador, even though you must in so doing seriously curtail your comforts or even necessaries. If you cannot rise to the requirements of the times don't flatter yourself that you would ever be a martyr.

The Standard of the Cross has this to say in reference to the document of infallibility before Pius IX. changed it:

"The doctrine of papal infallibility is so recent an invention that it must have required great ingenuity and diligence so nearly to suppress and expurgate from authorized Roman formularies all contrary expressions of belief. Mr. P. G. Robert of St. Louis, who was at the Church Congress, is so fortnnate as to possess an old copy of Keenan's Catechism, approved by Archbishop Hughes, and other dignitaries, in which are the following questions and answers, which have been omitted in all recent editions: "Q. Mnst not Catholics believe the Pope in himself to be infallible?" "A. This is a Protestant invention; it is no article of the Catholic faith; no decision of his can oblige, nnder pain of heresy, unless it be received and enforced by the teaching body—that is, the Bishops of the Chnrch" (pp. 305–6). "Q. What do yon nnderstand here by the teaching body of the Church?" "A. I nnderstand, not the Pope alone, nor the Bishops alone, either severally or collectively, bnt the Pope, with the Bishops as a body, and not every or any body calling himself Bishop, bnt those only who are in commnnion with the See of Rome."

Does Rome never change?

We are compelled to ask onr friends, in remitting money to ns, to send postal order or to register, or to send check or draft where this can be done. Dednct for expense. We will cheerfully bear expense of transmission, bnt cannot be responsible if lost in mails when due precantion has not been observed.

Our readers will find the missionary letter on our first page from Rev. Danl. McGilvary highly interesting, albeit, it is addressed to the yonng folks. They will likewise welcome "Lnola," the favorite of olden time, whose visits to onr colnmns are only all too rare.

It is not necessary to refer to the article on Edgeworth Seminary, bnt we mnst call attention to the reappearance of Mrs. Spencer, introducing and snpporting a very welcome friend from Missouri.

Special notice of our contribntors is not our nsnal practice, yet the quality and variety of contribntions in this issue we think will justify the departnre. We have an extra choice lot yet to appear.

A little missionary item of an unusnal kind will be fonnd among the marriage notices. The bride is the daughter of a missionary sent ont by the Northern Chnrch. We extend our warmest congratnlations to Rev. John W. Davis—our own missionary, and his bride.

It is now definitely ascertained that Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati cannot nearly meet the demands from depositors for money put in his savings bank. Another lesson as to the impropriety of persons where education and opportnnities are not of a business character, undertaking snch trusts.

A disturbance in a Roman Catholic Chnrch in New York City was in this wise: A yonng woman went in and took her seat and in due time was called on by a rongh looking man for fifteen cents. Declaring herself unable to pay she asked to be allowed to remain. She was not permitted to do so bnt was dragged ont. This is the statement which has caused quite an inquiry into the practices of Roman Catholic chnrches. It seems that at some hours the Romish chnrches are free to all-comers; at other hours a small fee is required and is vigorously exacted unless parties will go into seats specially set apart for the poor.

"Three wise men of Gotham went to sea in a bowl,
And if the bowl had been stronger
My song had been longer."

The Old Catholic movement has collapsed. Pere Hyacinthe appeals to English and Scotch clergymen to sustain him as a "Catholic Reformer." The "Grand Council of Geneva" does not actually refnse aid to the few, lingering, flockless shepherds who live on its patronage alone, bnt it soon will, for the subsidy is doled out now as to pampers. We could have wished for the Church a better fate, bnt it chose its lot. It went so far as to sever its connection with Rome, while it retained such abuses as debarred it from the cordial fellowship of Protestantism.

In common with many, perhaps most others, we were disposed to think that premillenarianism was a mere harmless opinion, without any practical significance, but as it is developed and comes to be fully understood its effect on the Mission work threatens to be very seriously damaging. A writer in the Presbyterian thus compendiously states the doctrine:

"Christ never has had a kingdom on earth, nor in any sense been a king, nor will be, until he comes in person the second time to set up his kingdom and reign in Jerusalem—that the gospel is not adequate, nor any of the present means of grace, to the conversion of the world, and that the church is commanded to limit her expectations until Christ comes to destroy his enemies by the brightness of his coming."

This does not appear to do injustice to their general teachings, and it would seem impossible for any one holding such views to enter heartily into mission work. Bnt further, the writer makes this statement positively:

"I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that I never knew a missionary in the foreign field who fully embraced the hypothesis in question, that did not, sooner or later, give up his work in despair, and abandon his field. And I may say, I never knew a missionary to go to a foreign field with premillenarian convictions."

Again he states that he personally knew five missionaries who embraced premillennial views, and in consequence abandoned the work. The aspect of affairs begins to appear very serious.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Will Concord Presbytery support her own beneficiary candidates for the Ministry or not? This is a qnestion to be specially answered by the following churches which have not sent to our Treasurer, D. A. Davis of Salisbnry, any money for education, from the 11th of April 1878, to the 21st of January 1879: Bethpage, Concord, Drnsilla, Fifth Creek, Franklin, Hickory, Jefferson, Lenoir, Mocksville, Newton, Poplar Tent, Salem, Salisbnry, Shiloh, Tabor, Third Creek, Thyatira, Unity and Zion.

If the money is not provided, shall your committee tell your beneficiaries to go in debt, or to leave the College and Seminary, and go home? What must we do?

By order of the Com. of Education.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE.

MR. EDITOR: A failure to make some public acknowledgment of a pleasant surprise which occurred at our house to-day, would be an ungratefnl if not a sinful dereliction. Onr little church of Shiloh has of late, been greatly redned by death and removals, yet the few remaining families, though still more reduced in their means by the stress of the times, visited onr house to-day either, in person or by proxy, bringing in no stinted measure voluntary gifts, not of things ornamental, but of such as constitute the substantial support of every family. Nor in this connection would I fail to record with special pleasure the fact that those tokens of affectionate kindness were participated in by other loved ones besides those connected with my own pastoral charge. To all we return our grateful thanks, and pray that these deeds of kindness in temporal things may be fonnd at last to be treasures laid up in Heaven for them and theirs, where neither moth nor rnst doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break throngh nor steal. E. HINES.

ENTERED INTO REST.

On January 5th, the first Sabbath of the New Year, at 6 o'clock in the morning, Mrs. Irene S. Burwell, the beloved wife of Mr. John B. Burwell, Principal of Peace Institute, entered into rest. The halls so often echoing with mirth and music were filled that day with grief and sobbing. For the end, though peaceful and gentle, was so sudden and unexpected, and for so abrupt a close to a useful life every one was so unprepared. Mrs. Burwell had for some time been, in health, more or less delicate, but the sickness resulting in her death was not for more than three or four days. A constitution delicately woven and weakened by sickness yielded to a fiercer attack of disease, despite unabated care, and the end came all too soon.

But not for her. A child of the covenant, trained with wise and loving care, her father an honored and useful elder in the church, she early became a sincere and earnest Christians and winning natural gifts and traits were adorned with this glorifying beanty of growing likeness to Christ. She possessed the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" and her life crowded with duties and cares faithfully met, deserved the reward that was its close. Not less was the patient spirit at rest than the tired frame. The empty tabernacle, wrapped in moveless quiet, whence the inhabitant had fled, seemed to prefigure the perfect peace of the soul. A night of suffering, the last of earth, closed, and as gently as an infant sinks into sleep she entered into rest. Indeed, she seemed "sleeping when she died."

"But when the sun, in all his state,
Illumed the eastern skies,
She passed through glory's morning gate,
And walked in Paradise."

Bnt there was no need of physical ease or of dying testimony to give hope to the living who sorrow. Her life is its own evidence and memorial. A life, filled with all the sweet and burdening cares of motherhood, deeply engaged in all that concerned the usefulness and success of her husband in a wide and important field, devoted to Zion and illustrating the power of grace, is brought to a sudden and peaceful close. To ns it seemed that it was an unfinished life. Bnt God knows best. When he calls, with patience let us feel that life's work is done. Not connected with the literary department of the institution of which her husband is the honored principal, she gave herself to domestic duties connected therewith, and to her thoughtful provision and considerate care much of the comfort and welfare of its inmates was due. Many, who little thought they had looked into her sincere and kindly face for the last time, will now recall, and with tears, her noiseless footstep, her kind inquiries and affectionate attention. How sorely she is missed here many aching hearts can testify. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Surely, if Bonar's beautiful lines be the measure of tender thonghts and tearful memories, she will long be cherished.

"Needs there the praise of the love-written record,
The name and the epitaph graved on the stone?
The things we have lived for—let them be our story
We ourselves but remembered by what we have done."

FOR NORTH CAROLINA.

Sometime last fall I received a letter from stranger away off yonder in the State of Missouri, which I have had a great hankering to transfer to the columns of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. No name accompanied the letter, and bnt for a note accompanying from a North Carolina lady I should not have been able even to guess at the writer. The contents, however, are so good that the authorship is neither here nor there, though, for the sake of those readers who prefer good security, I will say that my correspondent is the daughter of a gentleman well known in the section where he formerly resided in North Carolina, but who for a number of years past has lived in Mississippi. That he has trained his daughter to love the Old North State, and has given her the right part of education, I think no one will doubt who reads her letter. I wish we had more such writers among our yonng people.

Just now it appears that some of our men-folks are beginning to wake up to the idea that our woodlands are melting away before the wilful waste that characterizes the American people in all their ways. I see that the attention of the wise men now in session at Raleigh is being directed to the propriety of some legislation looking to the protection of the forests. There are many fine things that our legislators might do for the good of the people: they might protect our sheep husbandry by levying a tax on our half million worthless dogs; they might enact some law whereby the common roads of the State should be made better and kept in better order (how is it that in Tennessee there are macadamized roads all over the State, and not a mile of such road in North Carolina? that I know of); they might do a little in the direction of our common schools and frame the law so that we should be provided with better teachers, better school-houses and more of them; they might go so far as to pass a law compelling indifferent, ignorant parents to send their children to school. I would be very glad to hear of such a law. And they might do something to check the liquor trade, which is the foster-father of our penitentiary and our jails, and does more to keep us poor and foolish than any other of our favorite sins.

But I have no hope that any of these good things will be done this winter in Raleigh. Retrenchment is the word there, and comparing what they have done towards saving for North Carolina with what they might have done, it really does appear as if the legislative notion of economy consists in "saving mightily at the spigot and letting go at the bung."

Meanwhile, I hope all my readers will read the following appeal, and that it will sow seeds in some winds to bear fruit for our good at some future day. There is something pathetic in snch an invocation to ns for the protection of our treasures, from the far land of Missouri. C. P. S.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Sept. 19, 1878.

MRS. C. P. SPENCER: Madam.—Although I am altogether a stranger to you, yet you are well known to me, for I have read with much pleasnre your articles in the leading paper of your church in North Carolina. I am a Southron by birth, and the South is very dear to me. This letter is to thank you for your endeavors to arouse the people of your State to a knowledge of their true interests and the great wealth, floral, mineral, &c., of North Carolina. I have traveled much, and I have never seen a country for which Nature has done so much (and man so little) as for North Carolina and Virginia. I especially refer to the Piedmont and mountain sections of those States. They have some few things lacking, but very, very many beauties and advantages. I repeat, Nature has done all. Man has only destroyed. The children of the soil are unaware of their true wealth; and as for strangers, it is truly annoying to hear Northern and Western people talk of the South. It is very encouraging to know of one such Carolinian as you! Keep at them, I entreat you! Let them know what they are doing, when they slay so ruthlessly their most beautiful, most valuable woodlands. Nothing will pay them for the destruction of their forests. A mountain of gold in the middle of the State would not compensate for the trees already stripped from the mountains of Virginia. They do not understand the results of denuding their hills of trees, and they mock at any remonstrance on that subject. Had they been away twelve years, the great gaps in the forests, the bald, leprous-looking spots on the mountains, the miles of "old fields" of straw pine, (poor Nature struggling to repair the ravages of man), more than all, the muddy streams, once so crystal-clear, reduced to half their size—all these things, and many more, would look worse to them than even the dirty, ill-built villages and—no matter! To find fault is a very ungracious task; but if they only would open their eyes and see! I know their many discouragements, their heavy burdens, but I would rather see them clearing out and cleaning up the woods near their dwellings, not cutting down every tree within a mile, and letting half-fed stock trample and graze to death the thousand delicate and rare flowers, off which some enterprising florist might make a fortune. Bnt the ungrateful Southrons actually scorn their loveliest flowers, because they are wild, though all the outside world may prize them. There is that most beautiful of all flowers, the Southern passion-flower, Passiflora incarnata, beloved of poets, prized of florists, bnt pulled up as a weed by Southern flower-tenders, who call it "only a common May-pop" or "wild apricot," while they send for and pay for some stiff dahlia or ugly cactus—very good in their way, however, bnt not comparable to the exquisitely beautiful passion-flower, or the delicate, fairy loveliness of the trailing mimosa (botanic Schrankia, Southern name sand-brier). Then there is the pretty partridge vine, Mitchella repens, with alternate evergreen leaves and scarlet berries. All know and love the sweet azalia, and that "lily of the field," the dainty, little, blue iris, lovely and fragrant, the ever-dear, clustered wax-flowers of the kalmia (wild ivy,) the delicate, sweet bells of the trailing-arbntne, the yellow snow-drop, called also, adder's-tongne, (Erythronium Americanum), with its nodding flower and dark-green, glossy leaves, mottled with purple, the gentians, lobelias, and laurels of many kinds; rhodora—bnt I am getting quite wild; so I will not ventnre into the endless families of pinks, roses, and honeysuckles that lend their beanty to our Southern woods and fields. But I must mention that most beantiful of trees, the Magnolia Tripetala; commonly called marsh-magnolia, cucumber-tree, or umbrella-tree; as lovely and fragrant as the Magnolia Grandiflora, and much hardier. This, and the long-fringed ash, or silk-tree, (called, sometimes, fringe-tree, but not the Chionanthus Virginica); are so lovely they stand conspicuous oven amid the beauty-crowded forests of the South. But I have let my flower-mania quite run away with me for which I ask pardon; but you, who love flowers, will understand me when I say, my childhood was passed among the flowering woodlands of the South.

Again, I thank you, with all my heart, for the good you have already done: and once more I beg you, keep at them, until some, at least, awake to the importance of their mountains, as guardians of "hid treasnres," and to their forests, as guardians and protectors of mountains, rivers, and plains. With highest esteem and admiration for yonrself personally, I am dear Madame,

Your unknown friend, MYRA.

MEMORIAL.

JAMES HARPER.

Born in Cumberland Co., Pennsylvania, May 14, 1799; died at Fairfield, near Lenoir, Caldwell county, N. C., Jan. 26, 1879, aged nearly eighty years.

It is not often that a community is called to mourn the death of snch a man as was the subject of this brief memoir; one so long spared, so generous, useful and honored, and combining so many of those qualities which adorn the citizen, husband, father, friend, and christian.

He was the second in descent from John Harper, the first of the family to settle in America.

In early manhood his health failed and he was thought to be dying of consumption. Obediently to medical advice, he made a journey on horseback, extending his trip as far south as Charleston, S. C. In 1825 he removed to Wilkes county, N. C., and engaged in business with the late Col. Wm. P. Waugh.

August 29, 1833 he married Caroline Ellen, daughter of Samuel Finley of Angusta county, Va., whom he survived eleven years.

In 1828, previous to his marriage, he fixed his place of residence near Lenoir, N. C., and gave to it the name of Fairfield. Here he sojourned for more than fifty years, living a life of nsefulness such as comparatively few can boast of, and leaving to kindred and friends, the legacy of a precious memory.

His two chief callings in life were those of the merchant and farmer; the former calling of merchant he pursued for nearly forty years at Fairfield and in Lenoir. Success crowned his labors, and eternity alone can reveal the multiplied instances of aid given by him to the poor and needy, and to causes of religion and benevolence.

He was the last of a band of settlers in Caldwell county, N. C., who by their wisdom, counsels and influence did so much to lay the foundations of society in the region wherein he lived and died.

When eighteen years of age he united with the Presbyterian church. He built the old Fairfield church, near his residence, and when, in this same building, the Lenoir Presbyterian church was organized about twenty-five years ago, he was one of its few members and its first ruling Elder.

He lived not for self. Varied enterprises for good are indebted to the promptings of his generous nature.

He was a friend to material progress and improvement. He was a prime mover and a partner in the Patterson cotton factory in his county, and a stockholder in the Caldwell & Watanga Turnpike, the Western N. C. R. R., and the Chester and Lenoir Narrow Gauge Railroad. He was also a very large contributor to the Methodist church in Lenoir, and the originator and liberal patron of Davenport Female College.

The Presbyterian church and Finley High School were also largely aided by him.

He was singularly modest and diffident, unambitions of worldly honor, and of arrogating himself the praise of any nsefnl achievement or good effect, throngh his instrumentality. His strength of mind, decision of character, urbanity of manners, nobleness of natnre, and practical wisdom fitted him for offices of honor; but these he sought not, preferring rather the walks of private life.

He was a friend to religion, and to those called to minister at her altars—a friend to the poor and needy. Unnnmbered were the instances in which the widow and orphan, the day laborer and mechanic received kindness at his hand, ever so ready to aid.

Religion shed its halo around his life. Naturally modest and retiring, he spoke not in words tho experience and workings of the grace and life within.

As he drew near his latter end he expressed his hope in Him who is the believer's resurrection and life. Freed in great measure from bodily pain and suffering, he went down to the grave, leaving behind his life of christian influence and usefulness to point the hopes of surviving friends upward to his enjoyment of life hereafter in the heavenly paradise.

In the graveyard hard by the house of God in which he had so often worshipped, his remains were laid to rest until the resurrection morn.

Now that he is gone, we may mourn, but not as those who have no hope. A tender and thoughtful husband, a kind and watchful parent, a sincere and generous friend, a lover of hospitality, a steadfast friend of the Church and religion, a useful steward of his Master's goods, and an humble believer in Christ, while none can estimate the far-reaching sweep of his examples and labors, no can none measure the loss entailed by his death.

"Life's duty done, as sinks the clay,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While heaven and earth combine to say,
"How blest the righteous when he dies"

ECLECTICISMS.

GOD IN NATURE.

Chateaubriand:

There is a God! The herds of the valley, the cedars of the mountains, bless Him; the insects sport in His beam; the bird sings Him in the foliage; the thunder proclaims Him in the heavens; the ocean declares his immensity; man alone has said, there is no God.

THE COMING TIME.

Biblical Recorder:

"The day we believe is coming when it will be thought that a man who has not religion enough to make him pay his debts has not religion enough to be a church member."—Western Recorder. This is exactly what is now needed. Tom Paine, Voltaire, Darwin, Huxley & Co., are insignificant when compared to the widespread dishonesty and general demoralization among professors of religion and, members of the christian churches. Until the church can stand spotless and pure before the world it is folly to expect a return to honesty and fair dealing.

THE TRUE REMEDY.

Central Presbyterian:

The true remedy for the disease of the Church is the prevalence of a deeper seated, more circumspect, more prayerful, personal piety among our members—more of the constraining love of our Redeemer—more of the Spirit of Christ. Very appropriate to these thonghts are several propositions laid down by Prof. Christlieb in the concluding parts of his excellent paper read before the Evangelical Alliance in New York, in 1873:

"Amidst all this work never let us forget the personal preparation in secret. If we are to conquer in our struggle against unbelief, it must be less exclnsively than hitherto with the word and pen, and more on our knees. Often while we fight hard we pray too little. * * * The Christian is the world's Bible, and the only one which it reads. * * * In fine only life can beget life. * * * The strongest argument for the truth of Christianity is the true Christian."

SERMON FROM THE WORLD.

United Presbyterian:

"Marie" wrote to the New York Tribune, asking how she should assist in collecting some money for a country church. She asked further, if it would be advisable to attempt a concert, and said they had tried calico-parties, sugar-parties, fish-ponds, mock postoffices and the like. The Tribune replied: "We recommend a revival of religion." No answer could have been more wise. It is a want of piety in a church that makes it necessary to resort to worldly practices in order to raise money for religious uses, and it is only when the piety is added to and improved that the difficnlty will disappear. If the Marie's will cease troubling themselves about "calico-parties and the like," and assiduously observe the good part as they sit at the Master's feet, they will greatly help fill the treasuries with honest money.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Of the whereabouts of MARK WORCESTER and CLARK H. WORCESTER, brothers, the former is between 45 and 55 years of age, if alive. He was formerly a traveling salesman, about 14 years ago; Clark H. Worcester who is reported dead 6 or 7 years, is between 60 and 70 years of age, shoemaker by trade. He was 6 ft. 2 in. high, light blue eyes, and wore a heavy beard; he (Clark H.) served in the late war, in Beems Battery "B" Co., 1st N. J. Vol., A. Judson Clark, Capt.—Any information of either of the brothers, dead or alive, will be thankfully received and duly rewarded by sending positive information of the death of the latter brother. Respectfully,

R. B. FORDHAM, RAHWAY, N. J.

Feb. 1st, 1879.

N. B. They had a mother and a married sister, residing in or near Wilmington, N. C. The sister had twice been married, her first husband was a Rev. Mr. Hewitt. I think the way the name is spelt. The mother understand died during the war.

Other papers please copy. R. B. F.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Dingee & Conard of West Grove, Chester county, Pa., send ns their Guide to Rose Culture. It is very elegantly gotten up, serviceable, no doubt, to those cultivating flowers.

Sunday Afternoon at hand. Contents: The Game of Five; Two Days; A Conventional Science; Ministers and Hobbies; Calvin, the Sinner, II.; The Safeguard; Anna Jameson; A Pair of Home Missionaries; As to Sunday Families; What if Conscience?; The True Story of Hans Christian; Paper Roses; A Just and Faithful Knight of God; Katachi-Uchi, the Avenger of Blood; The Littleton Reformers; Sunday on Water Street, II; At the Door of the Tabernacle; Kasim Al Anwar; The Still Hour; Editor's Table; Literatnre. $3 a year: Springfield, Mass.

The Sanitarian, a monthly magazine devoted to the preservation of health, mental and physical culture. A. N. Bell, M. D., editor and publisher, 47 Lafayette Place, New York. February 1, 1879. $3 a year, 30 cents a number. Ignorance of the laws of hygiene is often Fatal. This magazine enters a noble field and aims to discuss plainly practical questions of health, food, exercise, sewerage, &c. We need such magazines devoted entirely to sanitary science.

January number of The South Atlantic, edited by Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, Wilmington, N. C. $3 per annum. It contains: Mrs. Preston's Old Song and New, by Paul H. Hayne; Carmelita, chaps. V.-VI., by W. H. Babcock; Eugene Aram, Act 3, by Espy W. H. Williams; The Jordan, Dead Sea, Bethlehem and Hebron, by W. C. Johnstone; An Episode in Cyprus; Fear; History, by George Davis; John Davidson's Wife, by W. W. Alexander; Shortia Galaxifolia, by M. C. Hyams; Recent Literature, &c. Naturally we especially appreciate the Episode by Hon. George Davis. This Episode is written in the lucid and harmonious style of that accomplished writer, deserves special attention from every North Carolinian as a part of the history of the State, and all others will be repaid for its perusal. The article narrating the travels of W. C. Johnstone is interesting as such things always are. The unhesitating manner in which the writer locates objects of interest and thus ignores the doubts of ages is refreshing.

Gordons March: Music. Ludden & Bates, Augusta, Ga.

Hymns and Coronation Songs. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, Chicago and New Orleans. Sample before us is gotten up very cheaply in boards. Price 33 cents, and no doubt worth it.

Gospel Gems: G. D, Russell, Boston. In paper cover, 30 cents per copy, $25 per hundred. Worth what it costs no doubt.

Preacher and Homiletic Monthly. Departments: Sermonic (containing sermons by Drs. Wayland Hoyt, S. V. Leech, T. L. Cuyler, R. S. Storrs, T. L. Burrows and others, and Revs. John Elliott and David Winters); Preachers Exchanging Views; Hints at the Meaning of Texts; Sermonic Criticisms, and many others. Well worth the price, which is $2 50 per annum. Rev. I. K. Funk, New York.

British Quarterly Review for January: Leonard Scott Publishing Company. Contents: London Gas: Daniel Mavin; What is Science; Religious Equality and Theories of Comprehension; Mr. Arnold on Secondary Education; Restorations: The Viceroy and Amir; Contemporary Literature.

The North Carolina Medical Journal again on our table. We say again, as we may have oft before, that this magazine should be in the hands of every physician within range of our circulation. January number has many capital articles. Published at Wilmington, N. C., by Drs. M. J. DeRosset and Thomas F. Wood. $3 per annum.

Third Annual Report of Johns Hopkins University received, and we tender our acknowledgements.

Ladies' Floral Cabinet: By Henry T. Williams, New York. Monthly. Price 12 cents a number.

D. P. Faulds, Louisville, Ky., sends music.

We are again overpowered. Sunday Magazine is before us for March. To note list of contents is simply impracticable, because they are so numerous, and to bestow due meed of praise is equally out of the question because the articles are so good. It's the cheapest magazine extant and of its kind the very best. Frank Leslie Publishing Co, Park Place, New York. $3 per year.

The International Review, published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, is at hand. Contents: English and American Painting at Paris; Gas Stock; The Birth of the Commune; Recollections of Mazzini's Views of Russia and the East; An American Wedge; Robert Browning; Expression of Emotions on the Human Countenance; The Literary Movement in England, France and Germany.

Barnes' Educational Monthly. February, 1879. $1 50 per annum. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. A good editorial on "The Spelling Reform," and an interesting discussion about modernizing Chaucer.

The Teacher, a monthly educational journal. January, 1879. Published by Eldredge & Bro., Philadelphia.

The People's Magazine. Devoted to literature, science, the little folks, &c. Monthly. 32 quarto pages. P. W. Zeigler & Co., Philadelphia.

The Watchman. Young Men's Christian Association. Semi-monthly. $1 a year. F. H. Revell, publisher, Chicago, Ill.

The Sunday School News and Bible Studies $1 a year. January, 1879. C. H. Howard & Co., Chicago, Ill. This is a new enterprise that promises well.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. T. W. Erwin will supply a church near Dallas, Texas.

Five additions were lately made to the church at Uniontown, Ala., under care of Rev. R. B. Alpine.

Capt. T. C. Morton has been elected a deacon of the Second Presbyterian church of Staunton, Va.

Rev. N. W. Edmunds, of Sumter Institute has been elected pastor of the Church at Darlington, C. H., S. C.

Aiken church (S. C.) has invited licentiate Thomas P. Hay of Harmony Presbytery to become its paster He has expressed a willingness to accept and entered upon the work.

Daily meetings have been held in the Mossy Creek church, Augusta county, Va. The pastor Rev. J. W. Rosebro has been assisted by Rev. Dr. Ewing. Eight persons have been received into the church.

For the support of the gospel at home and abroad the Athens, Ga., church contributed $2,564.64. This does not include amounts contributed which were made by the congregation and did not past through the hands of the church treasurer.

The Prayer meetings in Richmond during and since the week of prayer have been reviving and refreshing to the people of God. The meetings of late have been so numerously attended that the services had to be moved to the larger churches.

Two ladies whose ages aggregate one hundred and twenty years were lately added to the Lewisburg, W. Va., church.

Services were continued from the week of prayer, in the church at Troy, Mo., of which Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie is pastor. Ten persons have been received into communion on profession of faith.

CHANGES OF POST OFFICES.—The post-office of Rev. W. S. Cocham has been changed from Bolivia to Grand Junction, Tenn.; of Rev. A. H. Mecklin from Poplar Creek to French Camps, Miss.; of Rev. T. W. Erwin from White Oak, S C., to Dallas, Texas; of licentiate H. C. Fennel from Due West to Cross Roads, Laurens Co., S. C.

Recently Rev. Mr. Clagett, after holding a service in the Leavenworth jail, was approached by a convict whom he soon recognized as a former schoolmate, respectably connected in this city. The young man had just been convicted of forgery and was soon to be removed to the Penitentiary to serve five years. He was greatly affected, and attributed his fall to whisky.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Judge J. Randolph Tucker will deliver the address before the Societies at Union Theological Seminary in June next. The commencement exercises will be held in April. Rev. Ben Helm, will address the Society of Inquiry and Dr. C. H Read deliver the annual address. Eighteen Universities and colleges are represented in the Seminary. Fifty-four students are present. Eleven seniors will finish their course in April.

First Presbyterian Church, Louisville. The meeting in the church continue with increasing interest and larger attendance. The pastor of the church, the Rev. E. O. Guerrant, has had the continued assistance of the Rev. J. M. Evans, of Augusta, Ky., the senior editor of this paper having gone to supply his pulpit last Sunday. There have been seventy additions to the communion of the church, nearly all on profession of their faith. On last Sunday morning the scene was very unusual and striking. Forty persons, adults and children, stood before the pulpit, and publicly avouched their faith in Christ as their Saviour. A member of them had not been baptized.—Christian Observer.

Forty persons under the services in the London Street Presbyterian church, Winchester, Virginia, have confessed Christ. A correspondent writes the Central Presbyterian: "A very interesting and encouraging work of grace is progressing in Winchester, which began with the Week of Prayer. Its earliest development and main centre is in the Loudoun street Presbyterian church. There some sixty persons have been attending nightly inquiry meetings—and most of them have professed faith in Christ. The pastor, Rev. H. M. White, has been assisted first by Rev. G. W. Finley, of Romney, and after him by Rev. R. H. Fleming, Woodstock. A prayer meeting is held daily at noon, and preaching at night, after which the inquiry meeting. The work has extended into the Kent Street church of which Rev. J. R. Graham, D. D., is pastor. Here preaching has been held every night in which the pastor has been aided by Rev. A. C. Hopkins, of Charlestown. A number of persons have expressed an interest in Christ and some a hope of conversion. In the Southern Methodist Church too a good many have professed faith in Christ.

NORTHERN.

Meetings continuous of the Week of Prayer were held in the Presbyterian church at Titusville, Pa., and at their close sixty-five connected themselves with the church by confession of faith.

A verdict for $1166, has been given Dr. Charles S. Hageman who brought suit for arrears of salary due him by the Second Reformed church of Freehold, N. J. The call, stating salary as it does, is a civil contract and can be enforced it seems at law.

Revivals in Presbyterian church at Millvillo, N. J., and in South Jersey.

Rev. Dr. Gans, formerly pastor of the German Reformed church in Norristown, Pa., has been sliding down gradually for a long time, and at length dropped into the Roman Catholic church.

Rev. James Chambers, pastor of the Congregational Church at Sherburne, N. Y., has been offered a professorship in a Theological Seminary in Japan.

Clinton Avenue church, Brooklyn, has reluctantly accepted the resignation of Dr. Budington, and unanimously voted him pastor emeritus, with a salary to be hereafter determined.

Max. Moses, a converted Jew, was received into the Ninth street Baptist church, Philadelphia, on January 26th.

Pontifical high mass was celebrated, for the first time, in Terre Haute, Ind., on 25th ultimo.

Rev. Mr. Pentecost, the evangelist, having enjoined the women of Chicago not to pray aloud in his meetings, all womanly aid has been withdrawn.

THE BIBLE.

At a late meeting of the Wake County Bible Society, Gov. Z. B. Vance made among others, the following good points:

That the Bible is true is apparent from the fact that in this most practical age of the world —an age when everything is subjected to the severest scientific investigation, and if not found to be useful and true, is mercilessly discarded, it not only holds its own, but is constantly extending the area of its influence, while the sacred books of other religions have either lost their power over the minds of men, or if respected at all, seem to have no power to make disciples.

Of a lady who claimed to disbelieve the Bible, and whose husband, an upright, honorable and virtuous Judge, also an infidel, she declared to be equal in moral qualities to any professing Christian of her acquaintance, he asked if she had never conceived the idea that her husband, good natured and true and honorable, as she represented him, might not be the product of Christianity, notwithstanding his rejection of that faith.

To this she replied that she had never thought of that, but Seneca among the Romans, and Socrates among the Greeks were good and true men without the help of the Christian faith. To this the Governor replied that they were doubtless good men after their light, but their light was very imperfect, and that there could be thousands of humble peasants in Scotland, or this country, who, taught by this holy faith, were as far superior in all the moral elements of their character and in the conduct of their social relations to Socrates and Seneca, as the sun was superior to the stars of heaven.

He said further, that when disturbed by doubts as he had been at one time, and as every thinking man would be, as to the truth of the Bible, he had consulted a minister then present, as to what he should read to establish his faith in the inspiration of the Scriptures. The advice he received was to read the Bible itself, and he had found in his experience that the best evidence of Christianity was christianity itself, and that the very best proof of the truth of the Bible was that blessed book without note or comment.

It was an edifying sight—the Governor of a great commonwealth pleading for the circulation of the Bible, before a large and intelligent audience, a large proportion of whom were members of the General Assembly of the State.—Biblical Recorder.

The above was crowded out last week.

COL. D. K. MCRAE'S LECTURE.—In Justice to Col. McRae we could not say less, and it would be difficult indeed to say more than the daily secular press expressed with regard to the lecture on Friday night last. The subject "Genius and Talent" was one allowing ample scope for display of oratorical genius and artistic talent and was fully appropriated to that end. We were particularly pleased to note that throughout there was an under current of proper religious sentiment and feeling; not displayed even unostentatiously, but existing nevertheless, and enabling the lecturer to win the plaudits which every one so readily bestows, without a word, or a gesture that would ill become a christian gentleman. His address to the youth who might hear him specially impressed upon them that whatever might be their genius or their talents, it was all important to remember that these were all for time, and to be directed to a preparation for a future and higher existence. An elegant elaboration of the compressed truth, that "Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever."

MARRIED.

☞ No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

On January 28th, at the residence of the bride's father, Rev. S. B. O. Wilson, officiating, T. B. BAILEY, of Mocksville, N C., to JESSIE, eldest daughter of Capt. James I. Hall, of Tipton county, Tennessee.

In Bladen county, January 19, 1879 of diphtheria, LIVVIE EULALIA, child of W. A. and M. C. Woodburn; aged 8 months.

At Pineville, Louisiana, January 6th, 1879, JOHN McLEAN McLAUCHLIN, third son of the late B. L. McLauchlin, of Columbia, S. C., in the 39th year of his age.

He served during the war in the 1st regiment South Carolina volunteers, and was distinguished for his gallantry on many of the bloody fields of Virginia. He could safely say what few Confederate soldiers could, he never lost a day from the army from any cause, either from sickness or furlogh, from his first service at Fort Sumter, to the surrender at Appomattox. He leaves a wife and one child, and a widowed mother, to mourn his untimely departure.

In Moore county, on the 20th of October, after an illness of only a few days, Miss ELIZABETH RHODES, in the 53d year of her age.

Death came to her as a thief in the night and it is a source of the greatest consolation to her bereaved family that she had not deferred her preparation for it to her dying hour. Many years ago she made a profession of her faith in Christ and united with Union church. "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour, wherein the Son of Man cometh."

SAMUEL C. MCNEELY.

At a called meeting of the Philanthropic Society of Davidson College, held Feb. 5th, 1879, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Our friend and fellow student, SAMUEL C. MCNEELY, has in the providence of God, been called from among us by death; Therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That while we would submit to God in this our calamity as to a just Sovereign and wise and loving Father, yet we feel sad at the death of our friend

2. That he was an upright man, a pleasant companion, a faithful and promising student, and a consistent Christian.

3 That we who are ourselves sons, do appreciate the grief of his father and mother, and commend them to that God who gave his only Son for us all.

4 That a copy of these resolutions be furnished his parents, and copies be sent with request of publication, to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, Charlotte Observer and Mooresville Gazette.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Love Lightens Labor.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn,
And thought, with a nervous dread,
Of the piles of clothes to be washed, and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed.
There were meals to get for the men in the field,
And the children to fix away
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and churned,
And all to be done that day.

It had rained in the night, and all the wood
Was wet as wet could be;
There were puddings and pies to bake, besides
A lot of cake for tea.
The day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily, as she said:
"If maidens but knew what good wives know,
They would be in no haste to wed!"

"Jennie, what do you think I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well;
And a flush crept up to his bronzed brow,
And his eyes half bashfully fell,
"It was this," he said, and coming near,
He smiled, and stooping down,
Kissed her cheek—"'twas this: that you were the best
And the dearest wife in town."

The farmer went back to the field, and the wife,
In a smiling and absent way,
Sang snatches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day.
The pain in her head was gone, and the clothes
Were as white as the foam of the sea;
Her bread was light and her butter was sweet
And as golden as it could be.

"Just think!" the children all cried in a breath,
"Tom Wood has run off to sea!
He wouldn't I know, if he only had
As happy a home as we"
The night came down, and the good wife smiled
To herself as she softly said:
"Tis so sweet to labor for those we love,
Its not strange that maids will wed."

The Origin of the Jumping-Jack.

Come with me to the park this fair day, for I wish to show you a certain carriage and its occupants, and tell you a story.

In pleasant weather, the scene is gay and grand with multitudes hieing thither for recreation amid country sights, odors and surroundings. The rich and the poor of all ages and classes, afoot, on horseback and in carriages, make a living panorama of the shaded walks and graded drives.

But here comes the "turn-out" for which we have been waiting; a magnificent span of dapple-grays, by far the most powerful team we have seen; a carriage to match, roomy and costly, but not gaudy; a driver not in livery, as many are, but looking just the man for his work; and such a load as are making merry within—every one of them a hunchback! Yes, from the crooked gentleman on the back seat to the little fellows up by the driver, all are hunchbacks; well dressed, happy seeming, but with a wistful look—and, as they roll by, you see in them the introduction to my little story.

Something like twenty years ago, a miserable brick house in a back ally was the home of Archibald Ramsey, a Scotch carpenter. He worked down-town in a shop making cornices, moldings, mantels, and a variety of the more elaborate parts employed in finishing houses. Every evening he took home pocketfuls, and often handfuls also of bits and ends from the shop.

These oddly shaped fragments of soft, sweet-smelling pine furnished amusement for poor littleAlec, Mr.Ramsey's hunchback boy; and when they had served this purpose, they were used as kindlings in the kitchen stove.

There was a houseful of little Ramseys, of whom Alec was the oldest, and when he was amused, so were the others, thus giving the overworked mother time for other duties.

Alec was sixteen years old, and not taller than an average boy of ten. He was very much deformed,and had he lived in an age and country of kings seeking dwarfs and human oddities for "court fools" or "jesters," he would have been a prize to some iron-handed tyrant. His shoulders were almost as high as his head, his arms hung out loose and dangling, and the rest of his body was shrunken and slender to a most pitiable degree. But whoever, with a tender heart, looked into his great, questioning eyes and noted his broad fair forehead and his clean,delicate hands, would soon forget the sad shape in the nobility of the face.

Many a droll pile he built on the kitchen-floor; many a funny thing he whittled out to amuse the little ones; many a comical toy he made and gave away to neighboring children. Often he said, and oftener thought, "What can I whittle that will sell?" For only money seemed likely to bring him the changed life for which he longed. Once, when he sold for a few pennies a queer little pine trinket, his father stroked his silken hair and said:

"Ah, me puir bairnie, I dinna ken but ye may mak' your fortoon wi' your knife."

How that little piece of encouragement rang in his ears and stimulated him to think and whittle, whittle and think!

One genial afternoon in May, Alec crept out to enjoy the balmy air, and, by the noise of a crowd of urchins on a vacant lot at a little distance, was drawn in that direction. Here he saw a colored boy, named Jack, attempting, for the amusement of the party, all sorts of pranks in imitation of circus performers. Bareheaded and clothed in striped red and yellow garments of coarse quality, the negro lad almost seemed made of India-rubber.

Alec watched his capers in amazement. Never before had he seen such antics, or even thought them possible. It was no wonder that the frail stiff jointed little hunch-back dreamed it all over again, as he did that night.

The next morning his whittling genius took shape from this event,, and before noon he had produced a rude pine image of the negro—head, arms and legs loosely hung with bits of broom-wire, and the whole curiously arranged, so that by working a string, it would jump, nod, turn somersaults, and go through quite a series of contortions. With colored pencils, of which he had some cheap specimens, he blackened its head, neck, hands and feet, reddened its lips, whitened its eyes, and rudely striped in yellow and red the body, all in imitation of the little negro gymnast. Before it was completed, his younger brother, who had been with him the day before, named it "Jumping-Jack." And in the afternoon, when he went to the vacant lot and exhibited it to the youngsters there, it was not only universally but boisterously hailed by the same name. When he returned home, he brought, instead of the Jumping Jack, a silver half dollar, for which he had sold the toy to an eager, well dressed lad of his own age. And not only this, but he had orders from the boys for half a dozen more, to be made as soon as possible.

Oh, what a proud, glad heart beat within that deformed little body of Alec's! How his temples throbbed! How elastic his step! What a skein of wild and hopeful talk he unwound to his mother! So much money for his whittling, and a chance for more and more! Castles, sky-high and star-bright.

But I have not told you all.

That evening he whittled, and the next day he whittled, and before night had added to his capital three more shining half-dollars. The next day he doubled his money. The demand for Jumping-Jacks increased. Boys came to the door' silver in hand, to get what he had not time to make.

His grave Scotch parents began to hold serious counsel over the matter. If Alec could find such sale for these pine images in that neighborhood, why, the whole city would require thousands; and what would sell to delighted children in one city, would sell elsewhere also. If they could supply the market, a fortune might readily be made.

Scotch blood, once aroused and challenged, is sanguine and venturesome.

But it would be uninteresting to repeat all the details; so the rest of my story shall be brief.

Alec's Sunday-school teacher, who was a lawyer, procured for him a patent of Jumping-Jacks of every description; a rich old uncle of Alec's mother built him a factory and started him in business; and, within a year from the afternoon when the poor lad wondered at the pranks of the colored boy Jumping-Jacks from the Ramsey factory were selling in great numbers all over America.

Truly Alec did "mak' a fortoon wi' his knife."

To school he went; into a better house, all their own, the family moved; easier circumstances, better health, less weariness, and ample means for doing good, came to the Ramseys.

But the best point in my story is that a fine asylum and school for hunchbacks, free to the poor is one of the noble enterprises to which Alec has been chief contributor.

Those deformed lads in the carriage yonder are from the "Ramsey Asylum for Hunchbacks."

That was Alec's carriage, and that "crooked gentleman on the back seat" was Alec himself, Every fair afternoon he is out in this way, taking a load of "his boys," as he calls them, and thus, as often as once a fortnight, he gives every inmate of the asylum a turn in the park. —I. L. Beman, in St. Nicholas for February.

Making the Best of Things.

"Oh, George, look there!" said little Annie. "The old gray cat just sprang through the window and broken Cousin Mary's beautiful rose-geranium plant all to pieces. Oh, isn't it too bad? How vexed Mary will be about it!"

"My sister don't get vexed about such things, dear little Annie," said the boy. "I have never in my life seen her really vexed but once, and that was when she caught some bad boys tormenting a poor cat to death."

"But here she has good reasons to be angry," insisted the little Annie; "no one could help being vexed about it."

"It is indeed a pity; but you will see that Mary knows how to make the best of the affair,"

A little while afterward Mary herself came into the room. Her pleasant face beamed with the good nature which ruled her mind. She was humming to herself a morning song. But when she saw her beautiful geranium knocked down upon the floor she stood suddenly still "Ah, who has done that?" she cried with pain.

"The ugly old cat broke it, dear cousin. I saw it myself," said little Annie.

"Poor puss! she did not know what a mishap she brought about. That plant was my favorite among all my flowers. But come, dear Annie, don't make such a long face. We must just try to make the best of it."

"I think there is no 'best' about it."

"Oh, it is not so bad, by any means, as it might have been. The fine stalk isn't hurt, and it will soon put out new shoots The large branch that is broken off will look very pretty in a bouquet. Shall we not make one at once for mamma? This cluster of scarlet blossoms we will put in a glass, and you may run into the garden and bring some snow balls and place around it Then we will set the glass in a saucer, with some geranium leaves and snow balls around the edge. Mamma will admire the bouquet, for she loves flowers dearly. Now, little one, don't you think there can be a best side to the affair? I really think that our puss has done us a kindness in preparing in so unexpected a way a pleasure for us."

"I do believe," replied the little Annie, with surprise, "that you have found the brightest side of it I could not have done it possibly. I should felt rather like killing the old cat from anger."—From the German.

Will Blood Tell?

Some five years ago, Dr. Heitzman announced, in the Medical Record of this city, an important discovery in respect to the anatomy of protoplasm. He claimed that protoplasm of every description invariably contains a network of threads and granules inclosing a fluid, and that the threads and granules constitute the living matter. This view he now asserts has been accepted by more than a dozen of the best microscopists abroad, although it has not yet been recognized in this country; and he makes it the basis of an announcement which, if satisfactorily demonstrated, cannot fail to have a marked and beneficial effect upon the practice of medicine—the announcement that a drop of a man's blood under the microscope will tell just what his condition and constitution may be.

A protracted study of the pus corpuscles in urine, in connection with clinical histories, led Dr. Heitzman to the conclusion that the constitution of a patient could be determined by such examinations, the pus corpuscles of a healthy and strong person containing a greater abundance of living matter than those of a person enfeebled by disease or otherwise. He next extended his investigations to the colorless blood corpuscles, suspecting that by their examination also he might be able to determine the constitution of the individual furnishing the blood. His expectation was verified, he says; an abundance of large granules going with a good constitution; on the other hand, if the granules were few and fine, or the entire body of the corpuscles pale, it was evidence of a poor constitution. He frequently noticed that the number of white blood corpuscles was considerably increased after a single sleepless night, so much so that it might be determined whether a man had been kept from his rest or not, by examination of his blood. It could also be determined whether a man was to have acute diseases, or whether he was to suffer from the slow processes of disease incident to a strumous diathesis.

A committee of physicians has been appointed to investigate and report on this most promising subject. If it proves possible to determine a man's physical constitution by the examination of a drop of his blood a new field of investigation will be opened, and one having very important practical bearings.—Scientific American.

Insectivorous Plants.

Mr. F. Darwin has been making some experiments to ascertain how far insectivorous plants were benefitted by flesh diet. The mode of procedure and results are thus stated in the Nineteenth Century:

He placed a number of plants in soup plates, dividing the plants in each plate into two equal divisions by a wooden partition. The plates were placed in a hothouse, and covered with muslin to prevent the access of insects, the capture of which would, of course, have vitiated the experiment; in each plate the plants on one side of the partition were kept without animal food, while those on the other side were fed at frequent intervals with pieces of roast meat of about one-fiftieth of a grain in weight. The experiment was begun on the 12th of June, 1877, on which, as on the following day, the operation of feeding was performed; this was discontinued until the 5th of July, but from that time was continued regularly. By the 15th of July the plants on the fed side were markedly greener than those on the starved side, and a microscopical examination showed that the former contained a far greater amount of chlorophyll, the grains of chlorophyll being loaded with starch. The fed plants were therefore assimilating more rapidly and were laying up more reserve material than the unfed.

On the 5th of August the number of fed was found to be distinctly greater than that of starved plants, in the proportion of 149 to 100, notwithstanding that the latter were, at the commencement of the experiment, in slight excess in every one of the plates, and were, to all appearance, in a more flourishing condition.

The plants flowered, and by the end of August nearly all the seed capsules were ripe. The flower-stems were then cut off, the seeds collected, and the plants themselves in three out of the six plates dried. The two sets were then compared with one another, in respect of their number, size and weight, the number of capsules produced, the weight of the capsules, and the number and the weight of their contained seeds. The results thus obtained are very striking: in one circumstance only—that of the average height of plants—was the advantage on the side of the unfed specimens, and even then the proportion was only as 100 to 99·9; in every other respect they were completely outstripped by those supplied with ready-made nitrogenous food One very interesting point is, as Mr. Darwin remarks, that the difference is most marked in all those structures relating to reproduction: thus while the proportion between the average weights of the starved and fed plants is as 100 to 141 3, and that between the total number of stems as 100 to 169 9, the total calculated number of seeds yielded by all the plants was as 100 to 241.5, and the total calculated weight of the seeds as 100 to 379.7. Thus the very remarkable result is arrived at that, with equal numbers of unfed and fed plants, the latter were enabled to produce nearly two and a half times as many seeds, and nearly four times as great a weight of seeds, as the former, by being supplied with a quantity of animal food so small that each plant could not have had more than a few grains during the whole time the experiment lasted.

After the removal of their flower-stalks, the plants in three of the plates were allowed to rest during the winter in a hot-house, and were once more examined in the spring. It was then found that the rootstocks on the fed sides were visibly larger than those on the starved sides, and that this betokened the storing up of a greater quantity of food material was shown by the fact that while the number of starved to that of fed plants was as 100 to 108 the proportion between their average weights was as 100 to 213, and that between their total weights 100 to 251·6. Thus, although the fed plants had consumed so much more substance in the production of an increased quantity of larger seeds, they had yet been able to lay up so great a store of reserve material as to come up the next spring, each more than twice as heavy as similar plants kept without animal food, but otherwise under precisely similar conditions.

Not so Easy.

The papers, in these times of general economy, are filled with very learned essays on the case with which a considerable family may support itself on ten dollars a week. It must be an immense gratification to a poor man to know that with that moderate sum he can have plentiful and not very mysterious hash for breakfast, and a wholesome soup and stew for dinner. Now, if we can have a few more learned essays—that is, a few more essays a little more learned—which will kindly inform the poor man in what part of the city he can pick up that ten dollar bill every week, the consummation so devoutly to be wished will be reached. After many years of tolerably acute observation, we are confident that it is not half as necessary to tell men how to spend money as how to get it. We can find any number of families who will show you how to live on eight dollars a week, if you will kindly furnish the money.

VOLUNTARY
TESTIMONY.

[Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 21, 1878.]

"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and blood; secondly, for its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt be not quite in the right place, it can be very easily readjusted so as to cover the parts affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfection, has been hailed with delight, not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment, and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession, who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."

PULVERMACHER'S

are indorsed and approved by the most eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, and by well-known writers, who refer to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands, in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

DECEASED MINISTERS OF THE GREENSBORO CHURCH.

The visitor to the Greensboro church will see two mural tablets of marble commemmorative of their two departed ministers, viz: Rev. Wm. D. Paisley and Rev. Jno. A. Gretter.

THE REV. WM. D. PAISLEY

was a native of Guilford county, N. C., and was born Oct. 26th, 1770. He received both his classical and theological education in the school of the venerable Dr. David Caldwell, and was licensed by Orange Presbytery at Hopewell church, Mecklenburg county, September 20th 1794, in the 24th year of his age. After spending two or three years as a missionary in Tennessee, he was ordained in 1797 or 1798, and preached for a short time in Moore county, North Carolina. From this place he removed to Orange county and took charge of the Hawfields and Cross Roads churches, as the successor of the Rev. James McGready. This was in 1800, and he remained in this field for twenty years, with great acceptance, and with the blessing of God attending his labors. About the beginning of this period, in 1799, Mr. Paisley was united in marriage to Miss Frances Mebane, daughter of Gen. Alex. Mebane, of Orange county. With her he lived until his death in 1857, and their children and grand-children are among the oldest and most influential citizens of Greensboro. From 1820 till 1835 Mr. Paisley taught a classical school in Greensboro, and preached there twice a month. After this, in conjunction with Dr. Wilson and Mr. Gretter, he continued to preach until he was about 73 years old, when he tendered his resignation, and was succeeded in 1843 by the Rev. Jno. A. Gretter. For fourteen years longer he lingered, enjoying the pleasures of a serene and peaceful old age, in the home of a daughter of his, Mrs. R. M. Sloan, Sen. On the 10th of March 1857, he passed away hoping to enter at once into a better life beyond the grave. His age was 86 years 4 months and 14 days.

During the early period of his ministry Mr. Paisley was indefatigable in labors, and his preaching was characterized by fervor and unction, and was accompanied by such power as proceeds from a heartfelt conviction of the truth and importance of the message. He participated in the great revivals of 1801 and 1802, and the remarkable exercises of that revival began in a meeting over which he presided. On one occasion he was himself affected by these involuntary motions and contortions, though he resisted the influence as much as possible. He was the founder of the Greensboro church, and the people have done well in erecting the tablet that commemorates his life and services.

On the other side of the church is the tablet dedicated to the memory of the REV. JOHN A. GRETTER.

Mr. Gretter was a native of Richmond, Va., where he was born September 28th, 1810. His parents were Michael and Joanna Gretter. He took his degrees in the University of Virginia, in July, 1829, and proceeded to Huntsville, Ala., where he taught a classical school for a year or two. Returning to Richmond in 1831 he became a subject of divine grace in conscious conversion to God. In August of this same year he was married to miss Mary Winn, of Charlottesville, Va., and both of them at the same time became connected by profession of faith with the Second Presbyterian church of Richmond. Becoming convinced in a short time that it was his duty to preach the Gospel, Mr. Gretter went to Princeton Seminary. But the rigor of the Northern climate was too severe for his constitution, and after a short time he returned, and continued the study of theology under his pastor, the Rev. Stephen Taylor. He was licensed in the fall of 1833, by East Hanover Presbytery, and the following year was ordained as an evangelist by the same, and sent to perform missionary labor in Powhatan, county, Virginia. Remaining there a little more than a year, he was chosen as the Instructor of mathematics in the Caldwell Institute, in Greensboro. For this position he was eminently qualified by his splendid mathematical genius and thorough culture; as well as his skill and enthusiasm in imparting instruction. His connection with the Institute contributed much to secure its success. With such teachers as Dr. Alex. Wilson and Rev. Jno. A. Gretter, the Institute enjoyed the perfect confidence of the country.

His attainments and power in the chair of Mathematics were equalled, if not excelled by his power in the pulpit. He was an eloquent, powerful, impassioned preacher, with his soul so taken up with the work, that though engaged on five days of the week in the school, he would ride twelve miles on Sabbath to Bethel and Gum Grove on alternate Sabbaths to preach the gospel.

When Mr. Paisley resigned his charge of the Greensboro church, Mr. Gretter was elected Pastor, and was installed in April 1844. In this chosen work his labors were abundant and successful. The church grew apace, and the pastor redoubled his labors. Not being endowed with a robust constitution his multiplied labors proved at length too much for his strength, and in the course of a few years, his health began to be impaired. Pulmonary consumption was sapping the foundation of life. On a certain Sabbath he rose to preach as usual, but found himself unable to speak. The people arose from their seats with intense anxiety impressed on their countenances, while the session gathered around him to render such help as they could. They loved him dearly, but affection could not detain him then. He never pleaded again, and before the close of another year his voice was hushed in death and his body borne to the grave. He died Jan. 25th, 1853, in the 53d year of his age, and in the enjoyment of Christian peace and hope. He fell asleep in Jesus giving assurances to those around him that his soul was in perfect peace. His remains were laid in the ground, in the church yard, in the rear of the church, and only a few feet from the pulpit where he so faithfully preached the word of life.

Mr. Paisley planted the Greensboro church. Mr. Gretter nurtured it through the years of its infancy into a vigorous life. Messrs. Sherwood, Smyth, McQueen and Dr. Smith have given their labors, and God has abundantly blessed this vine of His own planting.

Sketches of Mr. Paisley and Mr. Gretter compiled from Dr. Smith's History of Greensboro church and Sprague's Annals.

THE TARES.

II.

MR. EDITOR: I have a corror of catching the disease known as cacoethes scribendi, for they say that when once canght it is incurable and gradually consumes the whole man. Moreover, it is one thing to ask a question and another thing to answer it; one thing to propound a difficulty and another thing to solve it; one thing to see an evil and another thing to know how to remedy it. Moreover again, there are brethren in reach, five lines of whose matured experience would be worth a page of my notions on the question touching which South Carolina wants light, namely, "how are the tares to be kept out?" I hope they will undertake to answer it. Meanwhile I will venture a few suggestions. The old method of dealing with disease was to treat symptoms. The modern and better method is to seek and remove causes, and so far as it can be applied to the case in hand I am convinced that it is the proper plan. In applying it we will have each for himself to be guided by common sense, and the peculiarities of individual cases. Some of the causes of the evil under consideration are such as cannot be removed. If a man chooses to play the hypocrite and make a false profession, we are obliged to judge him by his profession and leave the responsibility with him. We can keep out many of the tares however, by exercising proper care. The eyes of the self-deceived may be opened by careful instruction, and by giving them a little time. There is excitement connected with every genuine revival, although the reporters tell us there was none. The friction of such antagonistic forces as are brought into play is bound to generate it, and the profoundest excitement may be accompanied by no noisy demonstration. Spiritual excitement produces animal excitement, and animal excitement is contagious, so that during the progress of a revival many may be under animal excitement who are under no spiritual impressions, and experience shows that it is almost impossible to distinguish the one from the other. What then is the proper thing to do? Open the doors of the church while the revival is going on or as soon as it closes, and receive all who infer from their unusual feelings that they have repented and been converted? Common sense would seem to say, no, wait till all excitement has passed away; give them time to sit down and count the cost and deliberate calmly and maturely whether they are willing to take up and bear the yoke of Christ. It is seldom that the name of Christ is dishonored by those who thus confess him. Take an illustration. A brother not far from here had a season of interest in his church some time since, during which about sixty persons came to the inquiry meeting. He said that if he had opened the door of the church at the close of the meeting the great majority of those persons would have come before the session, and in all probability passed a "satisfactory examination," and been received. He determined to wait however, and give them time to count the cost, and the result was that only twelve out of the sixty came forward to join. Did he act wisely or not? The writer thinks he did.

As to Apostolic precedent there is this to be said. It is an infallible guide for us in all cases where the circumstances are the same. But we do not regard it as justifying the community of goods in our day, because the circumstances of the church are altered. Moreover, is there any evidence that candidates were admitted to the Lord's Supper without a previous season of trial? They were baptized on profession, but we baptize infants, thereby introducing them to the class of catechumens. The earliest post-scriptural church history shows that the practice was adopted all over the world of requiring candidates to pass a season of trial and instruction before being admitted to sealing ordinances. The practice was carried to a great extreme and became a practical heresy, but like all other heresies is it not probable that it was a perversion of some Apostolical custom or precept? There is no originality in heresy; its success is always due to the basis of truth on which it rests and which it perverts. This is a serious difficulty I confess, but a similar difficulty on the other side is presented in Luke 14:28, where our Savior, after laying down the conditions of discipleship, recommends his hearers to sit down and count the cost before undertaking to fulfill them, lest afterward they should be mocked for having begun what they were unable to finish.

The suggestion of "So. Ca." to depend on discipline to counteract the evil is liable to several objections. In the first place, unconverted members may be brought in and do vast damage in the way of dragging down the tone of piety and weakening church life, without ever being guilty of conduct that would expose them to discipline. Our Lord also discouraged that plan in his answer to the servants who came to him to know what they should do. "Nay, lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them." He did not of course intend to discourage the faithful and judicious exercise of the discipline which he himself has appointed, the subjects of which are scandalous offenders. Happy the church with a session faithful and wise enough to administer all necessary discipline. But happier still the church where the necessity for discipline does not exist. The most judicious exercise of discipline often does harm, owing to the silliness of some of God's people, though the neglect of it would do more harm. And "woe unto the world because of offences" though it must needs be that they come.

On the whole, however we may differ about the best way of keeping out the tares, we will all agree that they ought not to be brought in unnecessarily. The writer believes that by discouraging hasty profession, by proper instruction especially in private, by guarding ourselves against an unholy ambition merely to appear successful, by discipline when necessary, the Devil may be to some extent, though not entirely thwarted in his malicious attempts to spoil by corruption the church which he knows it is not given him to destroy.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE SWANNANOA PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 1876.

Approved by Mecklenburg Presbytery and Publication in North Carolina Presbyterian requested.

This church is located near the centre of the Swannanoa valley, a valley about twenty miles in length and averaging about three in breadth. This valley is watered by a beautiful river bearing the same name of the church and valley. Its head springs issue from the famous Black Mountain, said to be the highest east of the Rocky Mountains. This valley is surrounded by beautiful mountains of various heights and forms, presenting to the eye of the beholder a great variety of scenery, from the loftiest flights of the sublime to the lowest grade of scene. This valley also abounds in a great variety of beautiful limpid streams, from the creek to the little rivulet, all of whose waters are discharged into the aforesaid river, and thence, borne by the French Broad and other streams, into the great Mississippi. The lands are generally productive; some of them are remarkable for fertility. The writer remembers hearing it said that on one of these river farms, under fine cultivation, the yield in corn was 113½ bushels to the acre. All of these lands, wisely tilled, would yield a good reward to the husbandman. Indeed, it is one of the finest sections of Western Carolina, both as to scenery and fertility, leading one, in thinking of its attractions, to recall the words of Heber, referring to another part of the world, "Every prospect pleases and only man is vile."

The early settlers of this valley were principally from the lower counties east of the Blue Ridge, as Iredell, Mecklenburg, Lincoln, &c. Some, perhaps most of them, were from Presbyterian families, and here, retaining their preference for Presbyterian faith and forms of worship, organized, so far as known, the first church established in this valley. At this time (1876) there are other churches, both of Methodists and Baptists. The first preaching of which the writer can gain any knowledge was done by the Rev. Dr. Hall of Iredell and Rev. Mr. Kilpatrick of Rowan. These gentlemen met (whether by previous agreement or providentially is not now known) in this valley in the year 1794, and held their meeting of several days continuance on the banks of a little stream called Bee Tree, and under the shade of the beech which grew thereon. Here they held their meeting because no better accommodation could be secured. This precise spot is now pointed out to the enquirer by two old members of this church yet living, and lies about one mile west of the present house of worship and to the south side of the public road, still need to some extent in passing to Asheville. This meeting appears to have been one of considerable interest. And one of the old members refers to Mrs. McDaniel—distinctly remembers, that on Monday under the sermon of Rev. Mr. Kilpatrick a powerful impression was produced. But the precise results of this meeting are now lost to history. What further efforts were made for the spiritual welfare of this people cannot now be fully known. But what can be gathered up from reliable sources shall now be detailed. This church was organized by Rev. George Newton from Rutherford county, and it is supposed to have been done about the year 1798. The Elders installed (not known whether ordained at the same time or Elders removed from churches below) were James Alexander, James Patton, Jno. Moore and Robert Ray. Mr. Newton continued to labor for this church for eight or ten years. At what other points Mr. Newton preached, the writer cannot ascertain. But it seems highly probable that he also labored at Asheville, Hendersonville and Mill's River. He taught school (it is thought) all the time that he was in this county, at an Academy near Asheville, that still bears his name (Newton Academy.) Mr. Newton removed to Tennessee and after about three years Rev. Mr. Porter succeeded him in the care of this church. He preached once per month to this church. He also continued here to labor for eight or ten years. Whence he came and whither he went after leaving this church, the writer knows not.

The congregation then remained for about five years without any preaching. Having made various attempts to get preaching from Concord Presbytery under whose care they then were and using their own language "despairing" of help from this quarter resolved to try elsewhere, and appointed G. C. Alexander, Moses White and Joseph Brittain to go down into Tennessee and try there. The result was the visit and settlement of Rev. Christopher Bradshaw. Mr. B. continued in this mountain field about fifteen years. What portion of his time was spent at this church, is not known—nominally—probably about one fourth. During the time of his service in this church, Mr. George C. Alexander and Moses White were called to the Eldership. The church continued small, not exceeding twenty members. Rev. Mr. B. was followed by Rev. W. N. Morrison in the year 1840. When said Morrison came no record could be found. The state of the congregation had to be ascertained by personal effort on his part, in the way of application to the most reliable sources of information. The result was: About twenty church members including Elders James Alexander, Wm. George and Moses White. Morrison preached half his time at this church and the other half at Reams' creek, about twelve miles distant from this church. This continued to be the plan of his labors until an earnest application from what then was called "Flat creek" now Red Oak, then a missionary station, when Reams creek gave up a portion of the time allotted to it. During the years of Morrison's labors in this church there were frequent cheering additions to this little church. It is remembered that one communion season there were as many as eight or nine members added. During his connection with this church, Mr. Albertus Burgin joined the church and in due time was elected and sat as an Elder, who proved to be one of the most exemplary and best men men in the church. Said M. labored about twelve years. At the time of his leaving, the church numbered about seventy members. A good house of worship was built and about thirty acres of land purchased and houses erected for the use of the Minister were also done during the time of the session of Morrison. Morrison was succeeded by Rev. Flinn Dickson, who continued his service for eighteen months, and was followed by Rev. M. T. Allen who continued about twelve months. Dr. R. H. Chapman followed Allen. He labored about one year. Then Rev. Leander Stuart preached for two years. The church has recently been served by Rev. Mr. Corbett. I am told that just before Mr. C. went to them the number had dwindled down to about seventeen members. It was renewed somewhat by Mr. C.'s labors. But its exact condition now I am not able to state.

WORTH A HUNDRED THOUSAND.

The train arrived at Company Shops, and the polite conductor announced twenty minutes for (what all knew would be) an excellent meal. But Col. X. sat still, and when a friend inquired the cause he answered, "I must deny myself some comforts in order to keep my two boys at college."

Standing before the door of a country church and speaking of dwellings, Col. Y. remarked, "My friends often inquire when I expect to build. I do live in a small house and my family suffers inconvenience. I have the money to build, but I am afraid to use it. My boy is at an expensive school and I wish to keep him there. If I put all my money in a house, my income may in some way be cut off and I may not be able to keep my boy at school. I hold my house money as a reserved educational fund.

Here then are two noble citizens, each worth to our State at least a hundred thousand dollars. A citizen should not be valued according to the property he owns; for great wealth may be made a curse to the community. These men are not rich, but they fill important offices, so as to enrich others by their daily labor. They set good examples before others and their wise precepts are the maxims of their associates. They are also raising virtuous and intelligent families of children who will bless any community in which they may live. Our State could afford to lose a hundred thousand dollars, but of such men as these, we have not a single one to spare. We are raising thousands of young men and spending thousands of dollars upon them, because boys are worth more than dollars. Yes, a good boy is worth his weight in gold; for gold with all its glitter is only sordid dust, while a noble boy grows up into a noble man, wiser and better as life expands before him. He becomes the founder of a family, the model and exemplar of his community, and the distinguished servant of his country. His price, life that of the virtuous woman, is far above rubies. South Carolina even in her poverty could afford to raise a thousand Thornwells. How many such men may yet be found among our little boys. Let us be sure that we properly appreciate our good and useful men. Let us also sacrifice comfort, time and money, in order to make of our little boys and girls the wisest and best of men and women.

J. H. MILLS.

WHY NOT TAKE IT?

About two years ago, when I was coming out of a preaching service, I saw an old man looking very unhappy. So I said, "My friend, you are not happy."

"No he replied, I am not."

I added, "You are not saved."

"No," said he; "I have been praying for it for twenty years."

"What!" I said; "praying for it for twenty years! Let me tell you a story, for you remind me of the circumstances:

"I saw a gentleman the other day who was paralyzed on one side, and was wheeled about in a Bath chair. As he was out one day he saw a poor man sitting by the roadside afflicted in the same manner, and calling out, 'O, for God's sake give me a happey!' The rich man told his servant to wheel him over to the poor man. He did so, and the gentleman held out half a crown to the beggar. But the blind man still kept crying, 'O, for God's sake, give me a happey!'

"He was blind. The gentleman said, 'Here, my good fellow, is half a crown for you.' But the poor man was deaf, and still he kept calling out for a halfpenny. The servant wheeled the gentleman nearer; and at last he made the poor man hear, and then he thankfully took the half-crown.

"Now, my friend, this is just what you are about. God is offering you salvation as a free gift, through the blood of Jesus Christ; but instead of taking it, and thanking him for it, and rejoicing in it you keep on asking for it."

"What!" said he, interrupting me, "can I have salvation without asking for it?"

"O! course you can," I replied. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord; and the thing to do with a gift is to take it, not to pray that you may have it. 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.'"

"O, sir; I see it all now!" he exclaimed, and turned away comforted.—British Evangelist.

THE USEFULNESS OF RETIRED LIVES.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

In reading the memoir of some distinguished man whose praise has been on all lips, or on hearing of some excellent woman who has been enabled to do large things for God's poor and needy ones, we are not infrequently discouraged that we can do so little. We undervalue our opportunities and put too low an estimate on our own duties.

I have sometimes heard mothers at home with their little children lament that they had no special endowment of genius or talent. With a half-sorrow they would sigh for the artist's pencil, the poet's pen, or the singer's silvery voice. These other spheres seemed wider than their own, and these vocations nobler. No mistake could be greater than this. The quiet life in the household gives scope to the highest ambition and calls forth the steadiest energy. There is room in it for self-sacrifice, for dignity, and for constant cultivation of all that is good. The first years of family life when the boys and girls are still little ones, obedient to the mother's eye and tones, running to her in their gladness and their griefs, are the most important in their influence on character. The home is then determining the future standard of society and the future prosperity of the State. Neither social nor civil progress can ever rise higher than the ideal it furnishes. The mother's quiet line upon line, precept upon precept, are imperceptible in their moulding, but they are not lost. Not a single little lesson by the fire, not a hymn nor verse taught, nor a prayer at morning or evening is in vain. Even when a mother is early removed from her children, if they have had her faithful teaching during three, or five, or seven years, impressions have been made which will never be lost.

Retired lives are useful in another way. Nobody, in however obscure a station, can be uniformly sincere, patient, gentle and conscientious without exerting a positive influence on friends and neighbors. The modest, unobtrusive girl, timid to a fault, but loyal to her convictions, and therefore brave, wields a sceptre stronger than she dreams. The self-questioning, humble-minded matron who thinks that she is not so much as known beyond her own hearth, is often a comfort and a source of strength to others who have taken notice of her consistency, and rested upon her straight-forward, unerring perceptions of right. If is not possible for any one of us to measure the extent of our personal influence, but of one thing we may be sure, that what we are is of more consequence than what we do. There is always grace bestowed on those who sit at the Saviour's feet.—Christian Intelligencer.

A WOMAN'S "NO SURRENDER."

A few years ago the Presbyterian Church at Quincy, Illinois, had so run down that it was considered dead, and the Presbytery sent a committee to disband it. The committee arrived at Quincy and inquired for the church—there was none; for the elders—there were none; for the deacons—there were none; for the male members—there were none; for the female members—there was but one. They searched her out, and told her their business. She fired up, and gave them a piece of her mind, somewhat as follows: "I am ashamed of you. You go back and tell the Presbytery I will not be disbanded, and that what it should do is to send a man here to preach and build up the church." They expostulated with her, but she was firm and returned but one answer: "I will not be disbanded." They returned and reported, and Presbytery had the wisdom to see the hand of the Lord in it, and sent a man to preach. The results were a blessed revival of religion and the reorganization of the church. It is now a self-supporting church, with a settled pastor and one hundred and thirty-three members.

Polished steel will not shine in the dark; no more can human reason however refined and cultivated, shine efficaciously out as it reflects the light of divine light from heaven.—John Foster.

Rouse to some work of high and holy love,
And thou an angel's happiness shalt know;
Shalt bless the earth while in the world above;
The good begun by thee shall onward flow
In many a branching stream, and wider grow;
The seed that in these few and fleeting hours,
Thy hands unsparing and unwearied, sow,
Shall deck thy grave with amaranthine flowers
And yield thee fruits divine in heaven's immortal bowers.

We are to have sorrow and suffering; but we are not to wear them as garments. It is for us, if we be true Christians, to have such a constant tendency toward joyfulness that when sorrows come we shall be able to strike them through with the light and color of hope.

Believe me, the providence of God has established such an order in the world, that of all which belong to us, the least valuable parts can alone fall under the will of others. Whatever is best is safest, lies most out of the reach of human power, can neither be given nor taken away.—Bolingbroke.

TRUSTING IN JESUS.

I know not if the dark or bright shall be my lot,
If that wherein my hope delight, be best or not.
It may be mine to drag for years toil's heavy chain,
Or day and night my meat be tears on bed of pain
Dear faces may surround my hearth with smiles and glee,
Or I may dwell alone, and mirth be strange to me.
My barque is wafted to the strand by breath divine,
And on the helm there rests another hand than mine.
One who has known in storms to sail, I have on board
Above the raging of the gale, I hear my Lord.
He holds me when the billows smite—I shall not fall.
If sharp 'tis short, if long 'tis light, He tempers all.
Safe to the land, safe to the land! the end is this,
With Jesus then, go hand in hand far into bliss.

UNITED PRAYER.

For ten years Mrs. H. prayed for her infidel husband. She knew that the Lord heard, and that "He is faithful that had promised"; but as yet the answer did not come. The thoughts of her kind, indulgent companion seemed as far from her as when, in the joy of her new-found hope, she had told him how "God so loved," and asked to join her in a life of loving service. Yet, the Lord was leading her gently that she might know and do His will.

One evening at the church prayer-meeting her heart was more than usually burdened, and near the close of the services she rose timidly and said, "For many years, dear friends, I have longed to ask you to help me pray. It is not customary with us for ladies to speak in the meeting, and I have feared to be intrusive, but I can forbear no longer. Will you pray for my husband?"

Every heart was touched. A good brother immediately led in prayer, and another took up the petition. Mr. H. was well-known and much loved in the community, and they poured out their hearts before the Lord, pleading "as one pleadeth for a friend." Last of all a colored brother led in prayer, and in humble confidence seemed to enter into the very presence of Jehovah. Just after Mrs. H. had made her request, her husband, as was his custom, came to church to accompany her home. Finding that the service had not yet closed, he entered unobserved and took a seat near the door. "Tell me wife," he said as they were leaving the vestibule "who was the gentleman they were praying for just now?" "He is the husband of one of the church," replied Mrs. H. "Wife," he said again, as they ascended the steps at home, "who was it they were praying for?" The "husband of one of the sisters, Charles." "Well, wife," he replied, "that man will certainly be converted; I never heard such prayers before." Again, as they were preparing for the night, he remarked: "Those were wonderful prayers, wife. Can you tell me the gentleman's name?" "He was the husband of one of the ladies present," replied Mrs. H. and then she retired to her closet, for prayer and praise. At midnight she heard her husband's voice again: "Wife, wife, God heard those prayers; I cannot sleep wife. Will you pray for me? Can the Lord show mercy to me, wife?"

There was joy in the presence of the angels that night. When the faithful pastor called next morning he found Mr. H. "praising and blessing God."

A CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

The following extract shows how a child may throw light on the mysterious ways of God's providence:

"I once experienced a great bereavement, which tested my trust in God's providence beyond any previous trial of my life. One night I was seated with my little boy on my knee, mourning over my loss, when my eye rested on a favorite text over the mantel-piece. The eye of the child also turned in the same direction, and without any request on my part he read the text aloud: 'The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul.' As I heard the words from my dear boy's lips, they seemed to sink into my heart with a power they had never done before. To my surprise the child asked the question, 'Papa, what does "perfect" mean?' My heart was too full to make any reply for a few moments, and before I could break the silence, my little one supplied the answer by saying, "Papa, doesn't it mean that GOD MAKES NO MISTAKES?"

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from our exchanges:

More than 30,000 Hindus during the past year have renounced idolatry and professed Christianity.

It is rumored that Archbishop Eyre, of Glasgow, the head of the Roman Catholic Church in Scotland, is about to be raised to the dignity of Cardinal.

Monseignenr Desprez, Archbishop of Toulouse, has been created a Cardinal.

The door of the Wittenberg church on which Luther mailed his famous theses is now removed to Berlin, where it is in use at St. Bartholomew's Church.

Mr. Thos. Scott, well-known as a Hebrew scholar and the author of several theological writings, died recently at Norwood, in the 70th year of his age. In the absence from England of Dr. Colenso, his work on the Pentateuch was seen through the press by Mr. Scott.

At the pro-cathedral, Trnro, the Rev. F. W. Ellis a Roman Catholic priest, has been publicly admitted into the communion of the Church of England. According to the form drawn up by Archbishop Wake in 1714, and sanctioned by Convocation, Mr. Ellis read aloud a recantation of the errors and superstitions of the present Church of Rome, professed penitence, and received absolution.

While performing the marriage ceremony, Jan. 29, between Charles Brennan and Miss Meeta Peetsch, at the Catholic Church of St. Francis Xavier, in Sixteenth Street, New York, Rev. Father Alphonsus P. Pelletier suddenly fell, and died at once of hear disease.

An "Old-fashioned Vicar," in search of a curate, writes to the Times to complain of the mode in which the candidates for his curacy catechise him. One of them expresses his disapproval of the incumbent's use of the surplice in the pulpit,—which, however he consents to overlook, on condition that the vicar preaches a particular evangelical doctrine; and he requests a specimen sermon from the vicar, in order to satisfy him of the vicar's thorough evangelicalism. A second candidate for the curacy asks the vicar if he is very particular to use the purest wines for the Holy Communion, and states that he cannot admit either tent or port wine as pure enough; and he insists on the vicar satisfactorily answering the question whether "you make a conscience of carefully rinsing the sacred cup after Holy Communion, and yourself drinking the contents before leaving the altar." A third sends the vicar his portrait, and engages to preach "a thoughtful sermon in the morning, a children's sermon in the afternoon, and a popular sermon in evening." "Can these be instances," asks the "Old-fashioned Vicar," "of what has been spoken of lately as 'the sublime conceit of some of our young curates?'"

Lord Gormanston, whose recent marriage by a Protestant clergyman gave scandal to Roman Catholics, has made reparation and received absolution from censures, after fulfilling the requirements of the Romish Church. Lord and Lady Gormanston are at present studying in Rome. This submission to the Roman Catholic Church is said to be a source of satisfaction to himself and to his Catholic tenants and friends.

MISCELLANY.

The stock of petroleum in tanks in the oil region of Pennsylvania is estimated at 4,500,000 barrels. But a great deal of it has been so long in tank that a deduction for sediment and evaporation should be made of at least 1,000,000 barrels.

HUNGRY FOR THE GOSPEL.

Blessed hunger! which God promises to satisfy. Necessary hunger, without which there will be no happy future to any man. Man is diseased: his appetite for spiritual, life-giving food is dead. It must be awakened, or he will die under a curse. Prayer ascends to God to give this holy hunger. The Church with all its machinery is appointed to arouse and minister to this quickened desire of soul. What responsibility then in preaching the Gospel! What is the subject of the sermon? Philosophy? Science? General topics of the day? or Christ? A lady, leaving the church one Sabbath, exclaimed sadly, "I'm hungry for the Gospel." She had just heard an able, thoughtful discourse about science and religion; but it contained nothing for the troubled heart; nothing to lead to simple dependence on Christ; no food of divine truth from a compassionate Saviour for souls perplexed with doubt, or longing for rest in holiness. She was sick of speculative preaching.

Are not many weary of generalities in the pulpit? The preaching for men is not preaching "for the times," but proclamation of the simple Gospel; holding up Christ and Him crucified, the hope and joy of the world; the Redeemer of sinners. God has appointed this for the conversion of souls. How can men be saved unless they hear the clear truth? The more simple the story of the cross and its immortal and matchless love is told, the better. Let the children understand the wondrous tale.

This Gospel is what the soul needs in its sin. It explains the dreadful ruin, and tells of the only restoring power. It reveals the woe and the remedy. It slays carnal and fatal peace, but offers spiritual, healthy and heavenly peace. It alone gives light, hope, life.

Christ came to bring the full knowledge of this relief for man, as well as to fully provide it, and he sent out the apostles, and sends all his ministers still, to sound aloud everywhere news of His holy and effective redemptive work. His Holy Spirit was promised to apply the heaven-born truths, revealed and proclaimed to a lost world. Without Christ there is no salvation.

True preaching is the holding up of this light. It is letting this Gospel shine. God's good-news from heaven is that there is redemption through Jesus Christ for lost souls. Men, in any way awakened to a sense of their sins, long for some sound relief; they hunger after rest, divine rest. They clamor for food, divine food. Science, rhetoric, smooth things, give them no holy calm. Christ alone is their peace. And souls once resting in Jesus; feeling the bliss of fellowship with Him, through pardon of sin, and love shed abroad in their enlightened natures, hunger for more of that same matchless food. Blessed Gospel! It satisfies. It is never exhausted. Blessed hunger! Always it can be and shall be filled at the cross. True preaching is what fills and comforts men with this heavenly food, according to God's own plan. May such messages abound in all pulpits, that many may live by the divine manna.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.

Mrs. Margaret Silliman, an aged member of the First Presbyterian Church of Clinton, La., has donated a valuable property in that place to the Church. The members of the Church and congregation passed resolutions of thanks and bestowed upon the building the name of the "Margaret Silliman Manse." The ladies and gentlemen of the Church have liberally and beautifully furnished the manse. The pastor of the Church is Rev. W. B. Shaw.

Why cannot many of our wealthy members of Churches do as this noble lady has done, and thus glorify God, who has given them their wealth, and bless their own souls?

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN REVIEW.

The January number of this Publication, which ought to be in general circulation throughout our Church, comes to us with the choice list of contents which we give below. When we can find time to read the articles, we may again refer to it:

The Diaconate; The Influence of Theories of the Will on Theology; The Freedom of the Will in its Theological Relations. By the Rev. Professor J. L. Girardeau, D. D., Columbia Theological Seminary; A Plea for the Study of Hebrew. By the Rev. F. W. Lewis, Catlettsburg, Ky; Plans of Church Finance; Presbyterianism. By the Rev. D. E. Frierson, D. D., Anderson C. H., S. C.; The Revised Book of Church Order. By the Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. D., Louisville, Ky.; Ethics of the Fathers. By Prof. Alexander Meyrowitz, Ph. D., University of Missouri; Critical Notices; Recent Publications.

DEATHS OF MINISTERS.

Rev. Enoch Morgan died on the 25th, ult. He was born in Delaware in 1805; was licensed by Presbytery of Wilmington, and ordained by Lexington Presbytery in 1837 as an evangelist. His first labors were Union, Port Republic and Shiloh, in Rockingham county, Va. In 1838 he took pastoral charge of Shemariah church, and here he also engaged in teaching. Failing health soon required a relinquishment of this his only pastoral charge. Henceforth for about eighteen years he labored in western Virginia as a missionary. During and since the war his labors were of a general missionary character supplemented by school-teaching.

He was an earnest preacher, thoroughly orthodox, versed in Scripture and well-fitted to instruct his hearers. Possessing conversational talents of a high order and a kind and sympathetic nature he excelled in family visitation and in preaching from house to house.

His last illness was of short duration, but his sufferings were intense. His end was calm and peaceful.

Rev. Isaac Cochran died on 30th ult., in Prince Edward county, Va. He had been for several years laid aside from the duties of the ministry on account of the infirmities of age. The Farmville Journal says:

This venerable Presbyterian minister died on the 30th of January, aged about eighty-two years. For nearly, if not quite, a half century he was the faithful and beloved pastor of Buffalo church. Every duty was well and faithfully performed by Mr. Cochran; and he has passed away, leaving not one doubt that he has entered on the rewards of a well-spent life.

REV. B. F. MARABLE.

A correspondent of the Goldsboro Messenger, from Durham, writes the following. The criticism is unusually just and correct:

Rev. B. F. Marable, of your city, preached a series of sermons in this place, the present week, which were conspicuous for their originality, profound thought and convincing argument. His address is pleasant, while his language is chaste and eloquent, expressed with fluency, and is devoid of the commonplace sentiments, or pulpit slang, too frequently heard in our churches.

Though his sojourn with us was brief, Mr. Marable endeared himself greatly to our people and made a host of friends and admirers who cherish the hope that he will soon find it convenient to visit us again.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Dr. Talmage was arraigned before Brooklyn Presbytery as charged "by common fame with falsehood and deceit and with being improper methods in preaching." A committee of three ministers and two laymen was appointed to inquire into the nature and extent of the common fame referred to.

The impression seems to be that Dr. Talmage is not guilty of the charge of falsehood and deceit made by common fame, that is by newspaper report. We cannot understand why the mover of this investigation should be set upon however by the religious press. That common fame charges Dr. T. with the offences is not denied, but some of our exchanges lay great stress upon the fact that the mover for investigation is unknown to fame, and not one of the older ministers. &c. Circumstances these, the significance of which in a Presbyterian court, we fail to appreciate.

The discussion of the propriety of immediately receiving persons into the membership of the church on revival occasions we think may now be discontinued. Both sides have been heard, and it is permissible to say that the case has been set forth pro and con,—or rather con and pro—in a manner worthy of imitation in all discussions. It is painfully evident that in very many cases numbers during seasons of special religious interest get into the Church to be, not a blessing but a burden to it all their days, and to go through life self-deceived. An awful fact to contemplate, and yet when one makes, so far as a session can see, a full and unequivocal surrender of himself to Christ, who dare forbid him to publicly profess Him and come to His table?

The Society for the Suppression of Vice of which Anthony Comstock is Secretary, is doing a most excellent business despite the efforts which have been made to thwart its purposes. The special work of this Society has been to suppress the circulation of indecent literature through the mails. During the past year 22 persons were convicted or plead guilty; 20 were sentenced. Since the foundation of the Society 184 persons have been convicted, and 168 of them sentenced. 100,000 books, 475 pictures, and 1,000,000 circulars have been confiscated during the past year. In the hands of persons arrested there were found 300,000 names and addresses. Branch Societies have been formed in Boston, Cleveland, Louisville and Chicago.

In calling attention to the circular in another column from the Secretary of Publications, we desire to emphasize certain points in regard to this very important cause.

There is a debt still hanging over the Committee, and for the best, and most effective administration of this cause it is all important that it be removed. While this debt exists, funds which otherwise could be used in the distribution of our literature, in furtherance of the great work of the Church, must be applied to the payment of interest.

The debt too is not so large but that a good hearty effort will remove it, and then released from the incubus which has been oppressing it so fearfully, it can devote itself with renewed means and facility to the distribution of religious literature in destitute fields, and in aid of our needy Churches and Sabbath Schools.

Many of our Presbyteries have undertaken the colportage work and need the aid which the Committee of Publication can and will gladly supply if our churches will come forward liberally in support of this cause.

Let us be pardoned for introducing the following from the Iredell Gazette which deserves and heartily receives our thanks:

James Beaty, Esq., is Agent for the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, at this place. The PRESBYTERIAN, under its present management, is better than ever before. We heard a gentleman remark, the other day, that times were hard, and he was taking three or four papers, but he must renew for the PRESBYTERIAN, if all the others had to stop. We were not insulted, because that man was a subscriber to the Gazette. He had the right spirit about him, and we are confident that he will be so prospered as to enable him take our paper, as well as the PRESBYTERIAN.

B. T. B., whoever he may be, refers in the last Raleigh Christian Advocate to an article said to have appeared in the Wilmington Presbyterian whatever that may be. The correspondent unnecessarily uses the name of the editor of this paper, and alludes to his brains, meaning our brains of course—he could mean none other. We cheerfully forgive all in consideration of his allowing us the possession of brains, for in reading his remarks we became so utterly befogged that we might have doubted our possession of that most indispensable article, but for his most gracious assurance. We rejoice that the lack of brains is not with us.

Some interest is at length being stirred in this community on the subject of enticing seamen away from vessels. The authorities of the city are about to take the matter in hand and protect the masters of vessels and the seamen, from the land sharks that infest our port. When this nuisance is abated the efforts made for the physical comfort and spiritual welfare of seamen will be greatly advanced. Thanks are due to Mr. Meares, the representative in our Legislature from Brunswick county, for pushing through a bill to punish the pests of society above referred to.

PUBLICATION vs. CHURCHES IN ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

MR. EDITOR: I beg the indulgence of a brief space in your columns for a word to the Churches in Orange Presbytery. It is in behalf of the cause of Publication, the annual collections for which are appointed for the first Sabbath in March, or as soon thereafter as possible. The time is close at hand, and my object is to set before the minds of brethren in aforesaid Churches a few facts connected with the contributions to this cause, as reported for last year.

They are taken from the report of the Presbyterial Agent of Publication, made at Haywood last October.

Eleven Churches, aggregating 719 communicants, contributed one dollar each.

Four Churches, with 119 communicants, gave two dollars each.

Three Churches, 143 communicants, three dollars each.

Two Churches, 176 communicants, four dollars each.

Seven Churches, 770 communicants, gave all together $47.

Four churches, 627 communicants, gave $129.

Total, 31 churches—2,554 communicants, $212.

Twenty-five churches reported no contributions. Six of these have no session, and very rarely have preaching.

The other nineteen aggregate 588 members with 48 Elders, 25 Deacons, and 12 Pastors and stated supplies statedly preaching to them."

These facts speak for themselves, and admonish us by shaming us, tho' the veriest poverty be plead. Less than 7 cents per communicant alone! How much this even would be reduced, when we remember that in all our congregations the giving is not confined to communicants, there is no telling! Let every Minister, Elder, Deacon and member of the church, both communicant and baptised, do his part toward publishing the gospel of our blessed Lord in this way this year. F. H. J.

THE POWER OF PRAYER

Much has been said of the power of prayer, and much has been written of it, and yet nothing that has been or can be said or written can add any thing to the truthfulness of Him who spake as never man spake, when he repeated so often: "Ask and ye shall receive." The same truth was continually taught by His apostles. As Paul exhorted the Philippians, so are we to be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving to let our requests be made known unto God. For more than eighteen hundred years this most gracious promise of our Lord has stood in the face of the unbelief of His professed followers. It is as true as God Himself and yet how slow of heart are we to believe it. There are times in the life of nearly every Christian when he knows that God has answered his prayers for a particular thing; and though he has prayed earnestly and long that God would hear him, he is often surprised when the answer does come; and then possibly he sees the truth of this promise which he has so often and so heedlessly read, as he never saw it before. They appear to such an one just as the things of Christ appear to the new born soul, when old things pass away and all things become new. He is surprised at what he has found and wonders with amazement why it was he did not come and believe long ago.

Many of the congregations of London street church, Winchester Va., now see things as they never saw them before. And many of God's professed people in this congregation have recently beheld the power of prayer as they never before saw or believed it. The second Sabbath in January last was our regular communion. Bro. G. W. Finley came from Romney, W. Va., to assist the pastor, and preaching was continued every night during the week following. A prayer-meeting was held every day at noon, from twelve till one o'clock. There God's people met and earnestly prayed that God would pour out His Spirit upon their church. If I mistake not it was at the first one of these prayer-meetings that the pastor, Rev. H. M. White, said to the people our Lord has made the promise that if any two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that ye shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven—and he avowed his implicit faith in Him that He would fulfil His word. He knew that two of them agreed upon this subject and he determined to put the promise of God upon a public test in his congregation, and that very day there was a most signal fulfilment of the promise. The whole congregation seemed stirred up and their hearts warmed. There was a brightness in their faces and an earnestness and fervency in their prayers that was not noticed the day before, and that night sinners were awakened and anxiously sought the way of peace. Thus matters went on, Christians were revived and the number of enquirers increased every night till the Tuesday of the second week, when Bro. Finley was called home to fulfil an engagement with his own people. Bro. R. H. Fleming, of Woodstock, Va., was then called upon and came to our assistance, and he preached every night till the 7th of February. The interest continued unabated till every soul in the congregation who attended regularly upon the preaching of the word there, save one, became interested upon the subject of personal salvation and finally expressed a hope of salvation through Christ. The members of the church then went to work and every night brought in others who seldom attended our church, and they too became interested on the important subject that concerned every heart, and a great many of these are the meetings were closed professed faith in Christ. I never beheld a church so wrought up before, and yet notwithstanding the numbers that were brought into the church, there was not the least evidence of any animal excitement whatever. The preaching was plain but forcible and eminently scriptural, and to the natural eye nothing calculated to draw outsiders could be seen. Everything was done as quietly and orderly as upon the usual preaching of the word every Sabbath. Of upward of fifty enquirers, forty-six professed to have found faith in believing. A very interesting feature is, that of this forty-six the majority are young men—just entering upon the duties of life. If I mistake not there are only four married persons among the forty-one. These have not been taken into the church as yet, so that I cannot say how many will connect themselves with us. It is supposed at least thirty. Some will join elsewhere, being here at school at Fairfax Hall. The interest was first manifested among the young ladies of the school. At a meeting held for thanksgiving and praise Mr. Geo. C. Shepherd, one of the principals of this excellent school and also one of our most zealous Ruling Elders, remarked that every soul under their roof except two servants, had manifested an interest and professed faith in Jesus Christ.

So far as we can see, this was the work of the Holy Spirit and we believe an answer to our prayers. We not only believe in our hearts that there is power in prayer but we see there is; and if there are any who will not believe until they see, let them now see and believe and with Thomas confess "my Lord and my God." Brethren the arm of the Lord is not shortened that He cannot save, nor is His ear deaf that it cannot hear. He will hear when we call upon Him and He will answer, for he says so, and has given proof sufficient to satisfy the most skeptical. May He increase our faith. A. S.

A CROWNED CONQUEROR.

BY REV. W. S. PLUMER, D. D.

The history of Redemption will not be complete till God's chosen shall be gathered into the blessed mansions above. One by one, and with great rapidity, they are now going home. "All the good people are now moving to heaven."

On the 25th of January, 1879, from the manse in Newbern, N. C., the residence of her son, Rev. L. C. Vass, Mrs. Elizabeth Braine Vass, having fought a good fight, finished her course and kept the faith, went up to receive from her Lord, the righteous Judge, a crown which He had prepared for her. To the glory of her Redeemer is this little "Memorial" penned, that others—who are still struggling in the conflict—may thank God and take courage.

"What man is he that feareth the Lord? His seed shall inherit the earth." In the case of Mrs. Vass, the truth of this promise is seen. She was descended from a Huguenot family (De La Fontaine), of well-known piety and a long line of preachers, who at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes escaped from France and found refuge in Ireland.—They intermarried with the Manrys, and emigrated to Virginia before the Revolutionary war. She was the daughter of Col. Abram Manry, of Revolutionary fame, who joined the Continental army when only 18 years of age, was one of the forlorn hope at West Point, and was promoted for deeds of valor.

Elizabeth B. Maury was born in Fredericksburg, Va., March 29th 1785. Under the ministry of that holy man of God, Rev. S. B. Wilson, D. D., after a long season of anxiety about her soul, she professed conversion, and came out publicly on the Lord's side, in the Fredericksburg church, August 15th, 1815. At that time this was a very unusual step for a young or unmarried person to take. Gaiety was the fashion of the day, and Christians had not then learned, as in our time, to reconcile (?) church-membership with balls, theatres, horse-racings &c. She was ridiculed, told she ought to have a blister plaster on her head, and that no one would ever marry a sober Christian, &c. She stood firmly; and although the most of her family were Episcopalian, she, following her Huguenot ancestry, joined the Presbyterian Church.

On the 30th of August 1816, she was married to James Vass, Esq., a prominent merchant of Falmouth, Va., and afterwards of Fredericksburg. In her husband she had an able co-adjutor; for he too was a Presbyterian by birth, education and profession, and one of Dr. Wilson's flock. He was a Scotchman of the clan of Cummings.

From the first, Mrs. Vass was a decided Christian. She had taken her stand for Christ against the world, and she held it. Of her abundant means, as well as her good counsels, she did much for the cause of Him, who had done so much for her. The Female Orphan Asylum at Fredericksburg, for which so many have cause to bless God, was a special protege of hers, and she was its Treasurer until her removal from that place.

In 1837 her Heavenly Father wrote her a widow. Left with four boys, she undertook vigorously and cheerfully the work of training them for the Lord. They were jewels lent her from above, and for their care and polishing she held herself responsible.

Nor did she neglect the qualifications of a "virtuous woman," but worked willingly with her hands. The proceeds of her industry were given to the Lord. Especially notable was this feature, when by pecuniary changes—before and by reason of the late war—her large property was completely swept away. She must work for the Church of Christ. Her work was beautifully done, and therefore sold readily. At the advanced age of 91, she executed a piece of work, which was exhibited at the North Carolina Agricultural Fair in Raleigh, N. C., where it took the premium.

She was always "on the alert" for souls. Her religion was such a comfort to herself that she loved to tell others of it. The doctrines of the Church were clearly understood and deeply loved by her. She was a Presbyterian from principle. Her faith was simple, childlike, and implicit.

She was without guile. She was true to all her friends. She loved all God's people. She hated every false way. It was not easy to determine which was stronger, her unbending principle or her loving tenderness.

She was a great reader in various departments of literature, and as she advanced in years, she became devoted to practical Religious Books.

Of course such a character could only have matured on solid food. The Bible was her delight. With the Psalmist she could say: "O how love I Thy law!" She was wonderfully familiar with it, and could quote large portions of it. It was the man of her counsel, and by its precepts she grew into the perfect statue of a Saint in Christ Jesus.

Her gratitude to God overflowed in expressions of love and thanksgiving for so many mercies, and in an especial degree for the preservation of her faculties to so advanced an age.

She was sick from severe cold for about two weeks. From the first she felt as if it was the beginning of the end. "I have been there a long time and am tired. I want to go home." "I am not afraid of death. I have no fears of the dark valley. I will not fear, for His rod and His staff comfort me." "My Saviour! when will my Jesus come? When shall I see my precious Saviour, and reign with Him above?" These expressions showed the current of her affections. She gave special directions about her burial, as calmly as if preparing for a journey. Sometimes with a face radiant with joyful expectation she would exclaim, "Almost home! Almost home!"

For several days before her death she suffered greatly from oppression of breathing. Her mind was bewildered in consequence, and although calm and collected she could say but little.

She fell asleep in the 94th year of her age. Her connection with the Fredericksburg church continued nearly 52 years, and then with her son's church in Newbern 12 years.

Not long before his death, Nov. 1st, 1878, Dr. Beadle wrote me a consolatory letter, in which he uses language appropriate to this tribute of love; "So the host is gathering, and we cannot be far behind! Even so, come Lord Jesus! come quickly!"

Farewell thou blessed saint! As we stand here weeping and gazing after thee, we hear thee say:

"Therefore, now, a last good-night!
Sun, moon and stars of fire,
Farewell to your splendor bright!
Higher now I soar, far higher;
Where there is such glorious day,
Ye will vanish quite away.

"Weep not that I bid farewell
To the world and its errors,
Far from vanity to dwell,
Far from darkness and its terrors;
Weep not that I take my flight
To the land of endless light!

"Weep not! my Redeemer lives,
High above dark earth ascending;
Hope her heavenly comfort gives;
Faith stands by, her shield extending;
Love eternal whispers near,
'Child of God, no longer fear.'"

PUBLICATION.

OFFICE OF PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION,
No. 1001 MAIN ST., RICHMOND, VA.

To the Ministers and Church Sessions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:

DEAR BRETHREN: The time designated by the General Assembly for the Annual Collection in all our churches for the cause of Publication is the first Sabbath in March, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient.

In calling your attention to the subject, we need not remind you of the frequent action taken by the General Assembly, Synods and Presbyteries, urging and enjoining upon our people the liberal support of this branch of our church work; but we do ask your special consideration of the action of the General Assembly in May last, in which after ordering the discontinuance of agencies for the collection of funds, the Assembly calls upon the churches to contribute liberally for the payment of the debt now resting upon the work of the Committee.

This is, therefore, the only dependence for relief from this burden, and for the restoration of the Publication work to a condition of efficiency.

It is assumed by the Executive Committee that the entire removal of this debt is the first duty; that it is neither safe nor proper to apply the funds committed to our hand by the Church to the distribution of religious literature in destitute fields until this debt is paid, unless specially directed to do so by churches contributing. The appeals that come to us from our needy churches and missions for help must, therefore, be unheeded, although in many instances the little help asked is almost vitally necessary to the successful prosecution of Christian work.

Never was there more need that the colportage work should be actively prosecuted, and in every way a sound Christian literature be prosecuted efficiently, because it is clear that we are honestly bound to appropriate available funds to the payment of the debt.

The interest accruing upon the debt absorbs a very considerable portion of the income of the Committee, and the rate paid upon the most of it is higher than the present value of money; but we are in no situation to demand a reduction in the rate of interest, because we cannot offer security. It is manifestly unwise for the church to continue to carry this burden. Far better by one earnest effort to remove the debt altogether, so that all the funds thenceforward contributed by the Church to the Publication cause should be applied directly to its legitimate work.

Our appeal is more urgent at this time, because of quite a large amount reported last spring as subscribed in aid of the Publication cause and relied on by the Committee for the payment of its debt, but a small portion has been collected, and very little can be expected from that source.

There is, however, no good reason for discouragement. So small a debt can easily be cancelled by our church by one united effort, and the March collection should not only do this, but supply adequate means to enable the Committee to prosecute its important work.

While we do not desire to speak too hopefully of the future of this work, we think it may be safely said that the prospect is good that it will soon be in a condition of self support, if its burden of debt is once removed. Then the contributions of the church will be applied, not to office expenses, or to interest upon debts, but directly to the promotion of the great work, the circulation of a sound Christian literature.

How much it will be to the credit and best interest of the church to reach this point, let each judge for himself. It is possible to reach it by a single effort of the whole church now.

We believe it is better and wiser for the church to meet this burden now even under the pressure of the times, than to wait for better. While we wait opportunities are lost.

In behalf of the Executive Com.

JAS. K. HAZEN, Secretary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Scribner & Co., publish A Selection of Spiritual Songs with music for the church and Choir. The selections and arrangement are by Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D. In many cases such books, are prepared by committees appointed apparently more on account of eminence as theologians, than because of refined musical and literary taste, but in Dr. Robinson the man and the work seem to harmonize most exactly. Dr. R. besides possessing in the highest degree the requisite intellectual qualifications has acquired enlarged experience by previous preparations of musical works The books contains 1086 hymns and chants, and with many of the hymns two tunes are presented one being what is usually known as the old tune, and the other a tune specially selected by the compiler because of its suitableness. The copy sent us is bound in dark or black silk. The paper is finetoned and the mechanical execution very fine. Its price is $2.50. Cheaper binding is furnished at $1.50.

The Popular Science Monthly, Supplement. New issue, No. 1. The publication of the Supplement as a regular subscription serial has been discontinued, and it is now published at irregular intervals, depending upon the pressure of foreign articles demanding republication. It covers a wide range of scientific subjects. The following are a list of contents: The Progress of Socialism in England, by the Rev. Maurey's Geographies: 1. First Lessons; 2. The World we Live in; 3. Manual of Geography; 4. Physical Geography. By Commodore M. F. Manry. University Publishing Company, 19 Murry St., New York, 1878, Revised Editions.

We have been reveling in these beautiful and beguiling books, and have given them an unusually careful examination. Knowing the simple-mannered but wise author from childhood, we have imagined ourselves sitting at his feet, as he quaintly and pleasantly unfolded the lessons to us. Never have we seen Geographies which conveyed so much information in so pleasant and novel manner, or set forth so fully and plainly the mysteries of climates, winds, deserts and seas, and the philosophy of the physical constitution of our world. The Physical Geography is a grand book. Not only then for their intrinsic merits should these books be generally adopted, but especially in the South, because Manry was one of us in heart and soul. Maps of all the States will be presented by countries. Those of the Southern States are already prepared. Special and low prices are offered for introduction.

B. Lippincott & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

We have before us a pamphlet of about 150 pages entitled Christian Work in New York. Our hearty thanks are returned to the sender, for this volume contains a very large and important amount of statistical information regarding the Churches, Asylums, Benevolent Societies, Hospitals, &c. &c., of our metropolis. It is indeed mainly the 52d Annual Report of the New York City Missions and Tract Society, and as such details the modes of procedure and results of the labors of those devoted Christian people of that great city. Published at 50 Bible House, Third Avenue and Astor Place, New York.

The leading article in the March number of The North American Review is a symposium on Negro Suffrage, by Senators Blaine and Lamar, Gov. Hampton, Representatives Garfield and Stephens, Wendell Phillips, Montgomery Blair, and ex-Gov. Hendricks. Mr. Blaine opens and closes the discussion. He claims that the negro was wisely and justly enfranchised, and should not be deprived of his right to the ballot, but that he is practically disfranchised by intimidation; and he demands for him all of the privileges that have been granted him by constitutional amendments. Messrs. Lamar, Stephens and Hampton insist that the political liberty of the negro is not seriously interfered with, and argue that if the South be let alone all of the difficulties growing out of emancipation will adjust themselves. Hampton says that a qualified suffrage would have been better for the negro, and Stephens declares that if an attempt should be made to deprive the Southern States of their present representation in Congress on the plea that the negro is not allowed to vote in accordance with his convictions, it would be the most wanton outrage that ever was undertaken in any country. Mr. Blair takes the ground that negro suffrage is and always must be a failure, and instances the trial made with the blacks in the West Indias by the English. Wendell Phillips asserts that the colored voters have exhibited as much wisdom in politics as have their white neighbors, and that the South was better governed under negro rule than it has since been under white legislation. Gen. Garfield thinks that colored suffrage has been more than fairly successful, and says that the era of peace and good feeling will come only when the negro shall be allowed to cast his ballot without interference of any kind. Published at 551 Broadway, New York.

Scribner's Monthly for March, in hand. There is no question of the ability displayed in the conduct of this Magazine both in regard to mental calibre evidenced by the articles, and the excellent taste in selection of subjects to please the popular taste. Yet we always feel that we could with so much greater pleasure recommend the magazine if Dr. Holland would not invade the theological sphere; and thus do, however unintentionally and unconsciously, great harm to his readers. The Doctor knows more of other matters than he does of theology, and can discuss them to better purpose. We see nothing in this number, (without close inspection however) to which the above would apply, and only offer this in a most general way. Published by Scribner & Co., New York, at $4 a year.

St. Nicholas' Magazine, Scribner & Co., New York, $3 a year. No one can say a word against St. Nicholas. Our little ones receive monthly installments of happiness from St. Nick and we cordially recommend every one to invest the amount required. March number is one of the best we have ever seen.

We have received the March number of the "Sunday Afternoon, a magazine for the household," published monthly, at Springfield, Mass., price $3 per annum. It is meeting with fine success, and is full of sprightliness and vigor. The table of contents for the March issue, presents a tempting bill of fare. The most notable articles are "Infanticide in China," "Our Peculiar Sunday School Teacher," "Ministerial Backsheesh," "The Still Hour." The editorial notes are fresh and suggestive.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. N. W. Edmunds has declined a call to the pastorate of the Darlington church.

The Presbytery of North Alabama at its session Dec. 27th, 1878 enrolled the church at Huntsville, Ala.

Rev. S. K. Winn goes to the Second church, Petersburg, Va. He has resigned pastoral charge of the Culpeper church.

Waynesboro, Va., Presbyterian church is out of debt and pays its current expenses and pastor's salary promptly as they fall due.

At the communion season of Second Presbyterian church on 16th inst, three persons united with the church, two on profession and one by certificate.

Rev. M. L. Lacy is not in health sufficiently robust for full pastoral work and Rev. W. F. Wilhelm of Blocksburg, Va., has been invited to assist him in pastoral care of the church at Lewisburg.

The health of Rev. H. T. Hoyt requires a change of climate and he proposes to resign pastoral charge of the church at Darien, Ga., to take effect in June.

Rev. J. M. P. Otts, D. D., late pastor of the West Presbyterian church in Wilmington, Del., is now occupying a professor's chair in the Southern University in Greensboro, Ala.

Rev. T. D. Lea's health is not so good as formerly. He has for the last two months had charge of a public School at Cannon Texas, but having now removed to Sherman, Texas, desires the change noted.

Rev. Andrew McMillan has removed from Rockingham N. C., to Brightville, S. C. He has charge of Boykin Academy with the prospect of a large School.

Quite an interesting state of religious feeling prevails at Bainbridge Ga. The church is greatly revived and twenty-one additions, mostly children of the covenant, have been made to the church, on profession of faith. No excitement prevails.

Union church, Marshal county, Tenn., has secured the services of Rev. W. J. Frierson as stated supply. Rev. J. A. Wood former pastor has charge of Bethany High School, near Elkton, Giles county, Tenn.

Comite Presbyterian church, near Clinton, La., was organized nearly twenty years since. A new roof has lately been put on the church building and much work has been done in way of painting, and furnishing with comfortable seats and new pulpit, all tending to render it comfortable and attractive.

In the Pine Street Presbyterian church, St. Louis, Mo., on 2nd inst., twelve persons were received into membership, nine by letter and three on profession. Six of the nine received by letter were from the Northern Presbyterian church.

The First Colored Presbyterian Church at Lynchburg was dedicated last Sunday. Rev. Leroy Johnson, colored, is the pastor of the church, which is the first colored Presbyterian church dedicated in Virginia since the war. The building was purchased by the white Presbyterians for their colored brethren and is a very handsome one.—Staunton Vindicator.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate gives this as the extent of Roman Catholicism in North Carolina: In Raleigh there are 150 Catholics while in the entire State there are about 1,800. There are 7 priests and 11 churches and chapels. There is one convent occupied by the Sisters of Mercy, at Wilmington. There is also a monastery, belonging to the order of the Benedictine Fathers, situated 8 miles from Charlotte. They there keep a boys' school.

The St. Louis Presbyterian thinks the concerts lately given in Dr. Brank's church must have netted a handsome sum, as the audiences were very large. The panic of the congregation has subsided and the debt now due is easily manageable. The same paper says:

We understand that, in furtherance of the effort our good brethren are making, the two concerts are to be succeeded by two or more attractive lectures, and that Hon. Geo. Wendling, famous for his reply to Ingersoll, and Rev. Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, will soon be heard in this behalf.

The churches in Mississippi under care of Rev. Joseph Gibert as stated supply, viz: Olivet, Dry Creek, Calvary and Hopewell were greatly blessed during the last year. The pastor was assisted at various times by Rev. R. B. Morrow, and Rev. G. T. Story. In the aggregate seventy-nine person joined these churches. The three churches last named have had their membership more than doubled in twelve months.

Tombeckbee Presbytery having postponed its regular meeting on account of yellow fever, met in Columbus, Miss., on 20th, ult. Seven ministers and nine ruling elders were present. The Book of Church Order was after much spirited but kindly discussion adopted by a vote of twelve to two. A call from Aberdeen church was placed in hands of Licentiate T. M. Lowry. He accepted and was after satisfactory trial ordained. His installation was set for the fourth Sabbath in February. Pastoral relation between Rev. J. C. Carothers and the Knox church was dissolved, and a letter granted to Mr. C., to connect himself with the Presbytery of North Mississippi with a view to settlement at Grenada. Rev. J. D. McClintock with Rev. J. Bardwell alternate and Mr. T. M. Bradford with C. Bardwell, alternate, were elected commissioners to the General Assembly.

NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.

The young men of Mooresville have organized a Young Men's Prayer-meeting, which is held at the Presbyterian Church every Saturday night at early candle lighting. All young men who are willing to take part in the exercises, no matter to what branch of the church they belong are cordially invited to attend. We hope the meetings will be well attended, and we are confident that much good will result therefrom.—Iredell Gazette.

A writer in the Central Presbyterian states that under the ministrations of Rev. C. M. Howell, Evangelist of Montgomery Presbytery, many persons have made profession of religion and that great blessings have resulted in increased attention to family prayer and deepened spirituality. His methods are entirely free from all excitement and his reliance is wholly upon the grace of God in answer to prayer.

At a called meeting of East Hanover Presbytery held in Richmond, Va., on February 26th, licentiate H. C. Moore was dismissed to Ouachita Presbytery, in the Synod of Arkansas. Mr. Moore has received calls from the churches of Hamburgh and Calvary, with which, by permission of the Presbytery, he has already been laboring. He writes that the prospects of his work are encouraging.

A meeting begun in the Romney church two weeks ago is still in progress. Up to this time (February 7th,) about twenty-five inquirers have been pointed to "the Lamb of God;" and twelve or fifteen indulge the hope that their have found Him. The pastor for a part of the time, has had the assistance of Rev. J. L. Sherrard, of Petersburg, W. Va., and of Rev. J. M. Clymer, of Kerser, W. Va. The people are still praying, and a mnch greater work is hoped for and looked for. Fnrther particulars will be given hereafter. A meeting, for about the same time, has been and is still in progress in the Methodist church, South, in the same place, and much interest developed.—Central Presbyterian.

The Third Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky., (formerly known as the Walnut Street church), has been in a depressed condition for a long time. It has an organization—about fifty members on its roll—and has been maintaining a Sabbath School and weekly prayer-meeting, but for a long time has been homeless and homeless. Last week the First Presbyterian church sold the Mission Chapel at Chesnut near Sixteenth street, at a very low price, to certain gentlemen, as trnstees, who propose either to transfer the honse to the Third Church, or give them the use of it. It is a well built brick building, located in a growing part of the city, where a strong Presbyterian church ought to be established. The Rev. J. H. Moore, who is supplying Portland Avenue church will continue to give this church part of his time. And a protracted meeting is announced to commence there on Monday night of this week, to be continued every night, and as long as the interest indicated may justify.—Christian Observer.

We condense the following from an account in the Christian Observer, of the revival in the First Presbyterian church in Louisville. Great obstacles, rising from sickness, inclement weather and lack of acquaintance, have been in the way of the pastor's success bnt God has signally blessed the work. The meeting was commenced with the Week of Prayer. We quote here in full from our contemporary: The meeting was commenced with the week of prayer. The second week Dr. Guerrant was assisted by Rev. J. M. Evans, who remained until last Thursday. Since then Rev. Mr. Bedinger, of Anchorage, has been helping the paster. Snnday before last, forty-one or two persons, who had been received by the Session during the preceding week, stood up publicly to profess their faith in Christ. It was a solemn and impressive spectacle. Last Sabbath twenty-one more were publicly received into the communion of the Church. In all, eighty-eight persons have united with this Church since the first of January. God has graciously visited the families of the pastor elect and of all the elders of the Church in which there were unconverted sons and daughters sufficient old to take upon themselves the obligations assumed for them by their parents in infancy. Nearly all the Sabbath school teachers have cause for rejoicing. About forty members of the Sabbath school have made a public profession of faith. The whole Church has been spiritually revived. The congregations have been largely increased. The Sabbath school has steadily grown from week to week, and shows an attendance nearly one-half larger than it did six weeks ago—larger than at any previous period for two years—and the services, afternoon and night, continue to be largely attended by solemn, praying congregations. Truly, there is occasion for devont thanksgiving for the great work which God hath wrought.

NORTHERN.

The Rev. Dr. Gans who recently embraced the Romish faith belonged to the German Reformed, not the Reformed (Dutch) Church.

The Christian Intelligencer says: We are not aware of a single instance of a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church becoming a Romanist.

The Rev. Wm. Johnson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at East St. Louis, Ill., has been appointed to mission work of Sidon, Syria.

The increase in the Lutheran churches in Richmond—there are three of them—during the past year is said to be in advance of any other denomination except the colored Baptist.

The Presbyterian church of Dr. Abbott E. Kittredge, of Chicago numbers 1,300 communicants. He meets his 160 Sunday-school teachers every Sunday for the study of the lesson.

Revivals in Presbyterian churches at Peoria, Macomb, Ridgefield, Yates City, Peotone and Belvidere, Ill., Bay Road, Sing Sing and Watkins, N. Y., Lower Ten Mile and Tarentum, Pa., and at Woodland Avenue Presbyterian church, Cleveland, O.

Rev. R. W. McCormick died in Waddington, N. Y., on 31st ulto. At the time of his death he was pastor of the church in Waddington. He graduated at Oglethorpe University and Columbia Seminary and was ordained by Ogdensburg, Presbytery, New York. His brother Rev. W. J. McCormick is now pastor of the church at Gainesville, Fla.

The largest Protestant Episcopal Diocese in the United States is that of New York, it has 193 parishes and 34,803 communicants. Dakota has 8 parishes and 308 communicants and is the smallest. The same church in Utah has 239 communicants, 39 Sunday-School teachers, and 460 scholars. Church property is valued at $124,600.

Rev. Dr. Robinson's church in Rochester, N. Y., has been blessed. Many persons have been awakened and brought to Christ, and the people of God have been greatly refreshed.

"No sensationalism, no resort to novelties, bnt a quiet trust in the simple Gospel truth, accompanied by the Spirit of God." The number added the first year of Dr. Robinson's pastorate was sixty-eight; forty-four on profession.

DEATH OF MAJ. ENGELHARD.—Major Joseph A. Engelhard, Secretary of State, died in Raleigh on Friday last of congestion of the liver. Maj. Engelhard was born in Mississippi but graduated at the University of North Carolina, and settled in Tarboro for the practice of law. He became thoroughly and ardently North Carolinian in his views and opinions, and as, for many years, editor of the Wilmington Journal was ever in the forefront in battling for her rights and her honor. Maj. Engelhard was an admirably informed politician, and his influence as such was co-extensive with the State. In 1876 he was elected Secretary of State, receiving we believe the largest vote cast for any State officer. His future political prospects were bright, when, in the full finsh of vigorous manhood, the call which awaits every man, came to him.

REAVE'S PLOW SULKY.—This machine is extensively used in the West; is simple in constrnction, and durable. It can be attached to any two-horse plow (either wood or iron beam) in five minutes' time, without any additional labor or expense. The larger wheel runs on the land side, the small wheel on opposite side in the furrow behind the plow. The small wheel in front of plow acts as a guide and support to the beam. It has a seat for the driver, who can raise or lower the plow to take a wide or narrow furrow, by means of the lever on his right. It turns the same width and debth of furrow in either sod or stubble ground.

The draft is twenty per cent, less with the Sulky. This is the actual test by the dynamometer—the same plow being used.

It is a labor-saving implement, and at the low price at which it is offered will soon pay for itself.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. MCLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Lend a Helping Hand.

Lift a little! Lift a little!
Neighbors, lend a helping hand
To that heavy-laden brother,
Who for weakness scarce can stand.
What to thee, with thy strong muscle,
Seems a light and easy load,
Is to him a ponderous burden,
Cumbering his pilgrim road.

Lift a little! Lift a little!
Effort gives one added strength;
That which staggers him at rising,
Thou canst hold at arm's full length.
Not his fault that he is feeble,
Not thy praise that thou art strong;
It is God makes lives to differ.
Some from wailing, some from song.

Lift a little! Lift a little!
Many they that need thy aid;
Many lying on the roadside,
'Neath misfortune's dreary shade.
Pass not by like Priest and Levite,
Heedless of thy fellow man,
But with heart and arms extended,
Be the good Samaritan.

The Story of A Song.

The company that owned the Greenwood Park Road was required by law to extend it a certain distance, and so—much against their will—they pieced it out to the corner of Laighton street with a shabby little one-horse car, seldom carrying a passenger, and which ran every half-hour.

On one corner of the street, and some ways back from the road stood the elegant mansion of Judge Holland, with its finely-kept avenues, garden-beds and fountains. Across the way, and a block further down the street, was a wretched little cottage in a wilderness of weeds and grass, desolate and lonely at all times and seasons.

"Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wings.
Thy better portion trace."

It was a man's voice that sang the words, full and clear and sweet, the jingle of the horse-car bells chiming in with the notes of old "Amsterdam." Eddie Race, the little sick cripple, lying on a ragged lounge close by the cottage window caught the sound and held his breath, to listen. Judge Holland, the miserable rich man, in the solitary gloom of his great library, listened also as the singer came down the street.

"Fly from sorrow and from pain
To realms of endless peace," sang the splendid voice over and over again as if the singer revelled in the words, or had grown absent-minded as he sang them, and back again down the street went the shabby car, the voice still singing away in the distance.

Half an hour later it came again, the same voice with a different song, strong slow, stately:

"Give to the wind thy fears
Hope, and be undismayed.
God hears thy sighs, and counts thy tears."

Morning-Glories.

There is a perfect witchery about morning-glories. They are so cheery, so brave, and so sweet. Fragile in texture and illusive in perfume, open for only a few hours of the early day, and then shutting up in the seclusion of sleep, they still convey a deep delight to all beholders. They cost almost nothing. A morning glory is next to an anemone or a gentian, in coming to you as it were, of its own accord. You take a very little trouble planting a few broken seeds, training a few cords over the fence, and there you are. Wait. The swift summer passes, the golden autumn comes, and lo! a miracle has been wrought at your door. You are dwelling in a bower of greenness and bloom, of which not the least charm, is that grace of unexpectedness, which every day gives you a new surprise.

The vine is fascinating, as reaching out to the nearest support it clings there loosely and lovingly. It invests neither tree nor shrub with that desperate tenacity which withers and blights. Its gentle affection is a blessing, and wherever, with a silken softness, it throws out a tendril, or hangs out a leaf, it adds adornment. It is ornamental, deftly hiding defects, flinging its mantle just where there is something which needs to be covered, touching with decorative art the spot which was bare and unsightly.

In all this it seems not unlike some women we have known. They were not Amazonian in appearance; on the contrary they were slender, and little fitted to battle with storm and tempest by their physical forms, yet an amazing amount of strength dwelt within them, as fathers and husbands could testify. In days of trial and darkness how steadfast, how serene, how restful they were? The great sturdy man felt as if the solid ground were shelving away from under his feet, and in the despair of faith it appeared to him that he was alone in the universe, but not so was it with the feebler woman. She too was tempted, she too suffered, she too entered into the Gethsemane shadow to weep and tremble and pray. And in the hour of the utmost desolation, the Lord Himself came to comfort her, and she emerged into the morning and the sunlight. We know many such women. Theirs is perhaps,

"An accent very low
In blandishment, but a most silver flow
Of subtle-placed counsel in distress"

The bell-shaped blossom of the morning-glory is faultless in design, and sometimes, when the south wind touches and shakes from it the dew, we almost listen to hear the ringing, the responsive music of the sunshine and the dew. The richness and the pile of velvet are so simulated by these petals that we cannot think of them as plebeian. They wear the purple of royalty, though they clamber up on a shed, or wreathe around a kitchen window. Here, too, they remind us of some lofty souls, who have been, to our short-sighted vision, misplaced in life. But they have not shirked the hard duty, nor murmured at the uncongenial surroundings, nor mocked at Providence for having given them a narrow sphere. They have simply undertaken bravely whatever God gave them to do, and have gone as cheerily to bread-making, or house-building, or ditch-digging, as they would have done had the work been poem-weaving, or picture-painting, or statue-carving.

The morning-glory is especially dear to children, who luxuriate in its abundance, and love to pick its bright flowers. I wish people would plant more of them, that the little ones might gather all they wanted to without prohibition. Morning-glories ought to be as free to the child hand as the clover in the meadow of the golden-rod by the wayside.

One mother, in her bereavement, found consolation in this lovely plant, and garlanded its beauty into a lyric which has been a comfort to many sorrowing mothers. Maria Lowell's poem, "The Morning-Glory," has a sweetness which is not evanescent. She said of the little babe, who had gone to the angels,

"We used to think how she had come
Even as comes the flower.
The last and perfect added gift
To crown Love's morning hour.
And how in her was imaged forth,
The love we could not say.
As on the little dew-drops round
Shines back the heart of day."

This speaks to the uncounted thousands, who can never discern a certain perfume, or look to a certain flower, without having instantly, and by no effort of theirs, a leaf of the past vividly renewed before their eyes. It is the scent of the new-mown hay, it is the honeyed breath of the tuberose, it is the bunch of golden-rod in the child's hand and suddenly, dear ones departed are alive again. You hear the quick step, you feel the kiss, you are face to face with your beloved, though years have passed since you said good-bye, with tears.

God is love. We see it, feel it, grow into it, ever more and more. The love which moves worlds and keeps revolving systems in order also tints for us the morning-glory and brims its cup with nectar. Margaret E. Sangster, in Christian Intelligencer.

The Foolish Traveller.

"I should like very much to hear a story," said a youth to his teacher. "I hate serious instruction; I cannot bear preaching."

"Listen, then," said the teacher.

"A wanderer filled his travelling pouch with savory meats and fruits, as his way would lead him across a wild desert. During the first few days he journeyed through the smiling, fertile fields. Instead of plucking the fruit which nature here offered for the refreshment of the traveller, he found it more convenient to eat of the provisions which he carried with him. He soon reached the desert. After journeying on for a few days, his whole store of food was exhausted. He now began to wail and lament, for nowhere sprouted a blade of grass, everything was covered with burning sand. After suffering for two long days in torments of hunger and thirst, he expired.

"It was foolish in him," said the youth, "to forget that he had to cross the desert."

"Do you act more wisely?" asked the teacher, in an earnest tone. "You are setting forth on the journey of life, a journey that leads to eternity. Now is the time when you should seek after knowledge and collect the treasures of wisdom; but the labor affrights, and you prefer to trifle away the spring time of your years amid useless and childish pleasures. Continue to act thus, and you will yet, upon the journey of life, when wisdom and virtue fail you, fare like that hapless wanderer."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Diving for Amber.

The labor required is of the severest kind. The costume of the diver is as follows: A woolen garment covers the entire body. This is again encompassed by an india rubber dress, made in one piece, but differing in shape from the old-fashioned diving-dress, and allowing the diver to lie at full length. The helmet also is of a novel construction. Firmly fastened to it, and resting on the shoulders, is a small air-chest, made of sheet-iron. This chest is connected with the air pump in the boat above by an india-rubber tubing, forty feet long, and with the diver's lungs by another india-rubber tube, the mouth-piece of which is held by the diver between his teeth; the whole apparatus being scientifically arranged so as to admit a sufficient supply of pure air from above, and means of exit for the expired breath. The helmet is provided with three openings, covered with glass, and protected by wire, for the use of the eyes and mouth.

When this contrivance has been screwed on to the person of the diver, a rope tied round his waist, and half a hundred [illegible] to his feet, shoulders, and helmet, he is ready for his plunge. Down fathoms deep he descends into the amber world. He stays there—maybe five hours at a time—hooking, dragging, [illegible] the amber from its bed with his heavy [illegible]-pronged fork. Often it resists his utmost efforts. However cold the weather may be, these men of iron strength will come up from their sub-marine labors streaming with perspiration. The overseer stands in the boat to receive the amber from their pockets.

In case he should wish to ascend before the usual time, the diver has to shut his mouth and breathe five or six times through his nostrils, by this means filling the apparatus with air, which will bring him to the surface without other assistance. The diving boats are manned by eight men each—two divers, two pairs of men to work the air-pumps alternately, with their eyes fixed on a dial-plate, by which the supply of air is nicely regulated; one man to hold the safety rope attached round the diver's body and haul him up at the slightest sign from below; and the overseer.

Chinese Dentistry.

It is well known that the Chinese attribute toothache to the gnawing of worms, and that their dentists profess to take these worms from decayed teeth. But how they performed this trick, and so artfully concealed it in the hurry of daily business, was a secret only recently solved by a European enquirer. After some difficulty and delicate negotiation, an intelligent looking native practitioner was induced to hand over the implements of his trade, together with a number of the worms, and to give instructions in the method of procedure. When a patient with toothache applies for relief, if the tooth is solidly fixed in the socket, the gum is separated from it with sharp instruments and made to bleed. During this operation the cheek is held on one side by a bamboo spatula, both ends of which are alike, and on the end held in the hand some minute worms are concealed under thin paper pasted to the spatula. When all is ready, this is adroitly turned and inserted in the mouth, and the paper becoming moistened is very easily torn with the sharp instrument used for cutting the gums; the worms mix with the saliva, and the dentist, of course, picks them out with a pair of forceps. The patient having ocular demonstration that the cause of the disease has been removed, has good reason to expect relief, which in many cases would naturally follow the bleeding of the gum. When the pain returns, the same operation is performed over again, and a fresh supply of worms fully accounts for the recurring trouble. These worms are manufactured in quantities to suit the trade, and they are very cleverly done; still, to carry out the delusion fully, the dentists are obliged to keep on hand a few live worms to show their patients, explaining that most of those taken from the tooth are killed either by a powder which is often applied, or by the process of removing them with the forceps. This is resorted to when the tooth is firmly set.—Chambers' Journal.

Fogs and Signals.

There is no need of describing fogs to you, for even though you may never have noticed them hanging over the rivers or blowing along the streets of cities you have often seen them overhead in the form of clouds—for fogs are only clouds touching the earth. Fogs are composed of very small portions of water, and are produced when a warm wind blows gently over a surface of cooler water or land.

If you have ever crossed one of our New York rivers on a ferry-boat during a fog you must know how the pilots blow their steam whistles and keep men always on the watch to see that the boats don't run in to each other. Sometimes they don't run afoul of [illegible] the danger. Now imagine yourself in a ship near the coast. Up comes a thick fog—so thick and heavy that you can't see half a dozen yards beyond the bow. After a little time the skillful captain himself becomes bewildered, and no one knows just where he is. On the ferry-boat the pilot is only afraid of running into somebody, for he knows that his dock is close at hand; but the captain of our ship is lost, and scarcely knows which way to turn. Suddenly comes a dull, heavy sound through the thick air. It is a fog-horn, and our captain knows its friendly voice at once. He is sure there is danger ahead, and he steers away. He is sure that there is a rock with a lighthouse on it, but no light can be seen through a heavy fog, for fog shuts out the light of the sun itself.

A great many things have been tried as warnings: whistles, trumpets, bells, cannons and gongs, but objections have been found to many of these. The cannon makes a loud noise, but the sound doesn't last long enough; the sound of a bell is continuous, but not strong enough to be heard against the wind and across breakers. They are used, however, where it is necessary to send the signal a short distance only. They are rung by the falling weight regulated by clock-work.

In some localities a self-acting apparatus, moved by the waves, has been used for ringing the bells, but the sailors say that when they want them most they are generally out of order. The locomotive whistle makes a good signal, but the most powerful of all is an instrument called the siren trumpet. Here is a description of it by Mr. Joseph Henry: "The part of this which gives the impulse to the air producing the sound consists of a flat drum, or, in other words, of a hollow cylinder with a short axis, one head of which is perforated with an orifice which admits the steam from a pipe connected with a locomotive boiler. The other head of the drum is perforated with eight holes, before which, and almost in contact with this head, is a revolving disc, also perforated with eight holes. At each revolution of the disc eight holes are alternately opened and shut, allowing egress to as many impulses of steam, which, in turn produce a violent agitation of the air, giving rise to a most powerful sound, reinforced by the resonance of a trumpet of suitable length. The disc is made to revolve at the required velocity by a small engine attached to the boiler, the motion being transmitted by a band over pulleys of proper size. The sound from this instrument can be distinctly heard in still air at a distance of from twenty to thirty miles even during the existence of a dense fog."

The Professor cannot imagine anything capable of making a louder noise than this, unless it be a primary school of small boys just out for recess; and he must take out a patent for his idea, although it would be bad if the fog should come up after bed-time.

But, stop a minute. Didn't the Professor promise to say a word about the bravery of lighthouse keepers?

As you can readily imagine, some of the lighthouses are not very pleasant dwelling places. In many of them there is little or no communication with the shore during the winter. How would you like to be shut up in a great stone tower for weeks and weeks watching the sea-gulls flying around, and listening to the great waves ever beating against the rock at the foot of the lighthouse? Have you seen the revolving or flashing lights at the top of one of these towers? The effect is managed by clock-work. In one of the lighthouses on our coast the keeper's family were all sick with fever. There was no way of getting help from the shore at the time, so the keeper had to act as nurse. One night, upon going up to his lamp he discovered that the machinery which turned it was broken, or out of order. He knew that it must be turned, or the sailors might be deceived into thinking it some other light and so be led into danger. This faithful man, instead of crying over what couldn't be helped, turned the lamp all night long, neither faster nor slower than the machine would have done it. How many days it was before help came to him in his nursing by day and his lamp-turning by night the Professor cannot tell; but what do you think of only thirty-six or forty-eight hours of such devotion, you who complain when mamma wants water from the spring or a spool of thread from the store only a rod or so away?

Then there was Grace Darling, the English girl, who persuaded her father to go with her in a boat and rescue some sailors she discovered from the lighthouse, clinging to a rock, when morning dawned upon a shipwreck. She was the means of saving nine lives, I believe. She died of consumption a year or two later. Ida Lewis, our own lighthouse heroine, must not be forgotten. The Professor is glad enough to know that she has just been appointed keeper of the light on Lime rock, the place from whence she went to save life.—Christian Union.

Women Inventors.

The question is often asked us: Do the inventions of women ever amount to anything? From our long experience with inventors of both sexes, we conclude that a larger proportion of inventions patented by women prove more useful and profitable than those of the sterner sex. We see by the New York Sun that the Metropolitan Elevated Railway Company has selected a device, from the many that have been under consideration, for lessening the noise of the trains, and that it is the invention of a Mrs. Walton, of this city. The plan consists of boxing the rails in a mixture of sand, tar, and cotton, and has been under test for two months on several blocks of the road in Sixth avenue. The ringing of the wheels on the rails, which makes a large part of the objectionable sound, is considerably deadened. She gets, according to the Sun, $10,000 for the use of the invention on the Metropolitan line, and the company is to control its adoption on other roads, paying her a royalty.

SECULAR NEWS.

Gov. Hampton's health is improving.

Rev, C. T. Bailey editor of the Biblical Recorder has been elected a Trustee of Shaw University at Raleigh.

Gen. Robert Ransom in charge of the work on Neuse River says it is progressing finely.

The German Reichstag was opened by the Emperor William in person. The relations between Germany and other powers are declared satisfactory.

The Postal Savings Bank bill has been defeated by Congress.

The Sultan of Morocco has had a stroke of paralysis and anarchy reigns throughout the Empire.

It is proposed to subsidize two lines in the Brazil trade, one from New York via Norfolk, and the other [illegible] via Galveston.

General R. E. [illegible] has accepted an invitation of the American Geographical Society of New York [illegible] to deliver an address before it in March [illegible].

The Charlotte Observer says: The catalogue of Davidson College, for the year 1878-'79, soon to be issued, will contain the names of 108 students. [illegible] number of cases of pneumonia [illegible]. —Horses are dying in [illegible] county, with something like [illegible] which exhibits symptoms [illegible].

A Wheeling (W. Va.) dispatch says that in the Senate of that State, yesterday, a bill was introduced to declare the charter of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad forfeited, a recent examination by a joint special committee having developed the fact that the company has been charging more than legal rates, and by unjust discrimination worked injury to the manufacturing and producing interests of the State.

It is said that the life of Mr. John G. Williams of Raleigh was insured for $60,000.

It is charged that a number of cows suffering from pleuro-pneumonia have been slaughtered for sale by the Brooklyn butchers. The carcasses are under guard for examination.

Great Britain has suffered deep humiliation by the slaughter of her troops with resulting defeat in the Kaffir war. Intense feeling prevails in England.

Summons were issued this morning for a Cabinet Council, to be held this afternoon, to deliberate on the reverses to the British troops in Zululand. Official telegrams announcing the defeat were received at the Colonial Office at 12:30 o'clock this morning. They substantially confirm the details of the affair heretofore given in these dispatches. The news of the defeat caused a sensation throughout London, and the demand for newspapers at all of the suburban stations is greater than since the outbreak of the Franco-German war.

On the receipt of the official reports from Puerto Plata the Spanish authorities will, if necessary, dispatch a man-of-war to San Domingo, to exact a heavy indemnity for the families of the two Generals taken from the Spanish steamers and shot by the San Domingo authorities, and satisfaction to the Spanish flag.

A land slide in the outskirts of Kansas City, Mo., in a cut being made for the Chicago & Alton Railroad. The almost perpendicular walls, nearly ninety feet high fell in, covering ten workmen and their teams under 6,000 yards of earth. Six persons were killed and several wounded.

EDUCATIONAL.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE,
MECKLENBURG CO. N. C.,
1878-'79.

THE NEXT COLLEGIATE YEAR BEGINS ON THURSDAY, September 12th, 1878, and ends June 12th, 1879. It is divided by a recess of about ten days, embracing Christmas and New Year's-day, into two Terms.

The necessary expenses for the entire year, exclusive of clothing, traveling expenses, and pocket money, vary from $225 to $250.

There are three fully organized Courses of Instruction:

1. The CLASSICAL COURSE, occupying four years.
2. The SCIENTIFIC COURSE, occupying three years.
3. The ECLECTIC COURSE, designed for those who do not wish to take a regular course but to pursue special studies.

Applicants for any class will be received at any time during the year.

Davidson College is on the Railroad, midway between Charlotte and Statesville.

THE LIGHT.—IS IT WANING?

Fletcher Prize Essay, 1879:—By Rev. A. F. Dickson.

We have here a little book, bnt a capital one. Its binding and typography, its wide margin, small pages and short chapters all are enticing. But these are the least of its attractions. There is an earnest, cordial, heartiness bursting forth from these pages, as though the author were not merely bookmaking but writing from the depths of his own soul. His effort is thus lifted far above the ordinary run of prize-essays.

The style is lucid and pnre, warming at times with uncommon richness and glow of diction. But the best of it is the matter. And here we confess we were no less astonished than delighted. The anthor exhibits an acuteness and subtilty, and at the same time, a depth and reach of thought we had little expected. We could not help exclaiming as we closed the book, why have we never heard from him before? Alas! that we shall never hear from him again. His "light" was extinguished just as his little book dawned upon the world. "Being dead, he yet speaketh."

We propose to give the general idea of this essay, hoping to call the attention of others to it that they may derive the profit from its study which has accrned to us. A Professor in our Seminary need to say to us: "Read books that have meat in them." Snch we consider this little volume. Not that there is much matter in it, bnt it is eminently suggestive, particnlarly to ministers. It may help us decide that harassing qnestion, "What and how must I preach that the saving, sanctifying power of the Gospel may be impressed upon the hearers?" Nay, it may set some of us upon the wholesome work of introspection and call to onr minds the important and solemn truth, he that wonld feed others must himself be fed.

In two of the three parts of this essay the author tackles a qnestion of grave importance, but very difficult of solntion, What are the signs of the times? And in his answer he is eminently judicious and philosophical. He reasons as a philosopher, he decides as a judge. The reader will find here no extravagance, no wordy tirade against the degeneracy of the age, no "senile whimperings for the things of the past" as our anthor expresses it; but a calm candid sifting of the facts and an impartial balancing np of accounts. While he gives the present times a severe castigation, he surely also gives this age full credit for the much that it is great and good in it. The result we give in the author's own language. "The conclusion to be drawn from the many lamentable features of present church-life is, therefore, not one of alarm concerning the Church of Christ considered as a historical nnity, whose years connt from the time of Calvary, and run to the great judgment. It is safe amid all calamities. Perversions, divisions, declensions, apostasies, are only seasons of revolving years. The fools come and go, but the world remains. And while the covenant endures, and the High Priest intercedes, and the Spirit takes the government, and the truth of God stands, Christ's Church will live. The ark will surely ride the deluge."

While every true believer must coincide with this opinion, perhaps many may feel inclined to demur against what follows. Summing up the dangers that now beset the Church he alleges that in spite of the great pretense and show of learning, there is really great ignorance of sound doctrine—that long and well-established truths have lost much of their fixedness and stability in the minds of men—that irreverence characterizes this age, even shown specially and fearfully in the relaxation of Church discipline—that the deep waters of religious emotion seem to be spreading ont upon the noisy but dangerons shoals of mere sentiment and cant—that while a wonderful sagacity characterizes the religion of this age, and such religious activity as perhaps the world has never before seen, yet there is danger of its degenerating into machine-work, mere routine and hypocrisy—that skepticism is making in—and as a result of all this there is a large divorce of morals and religion, and a tendency to secnlarize the Church in the pew and in the pulpit. The anthor adds, "If these allegations are trne, or if they in a considerable degree approximate trnth, then it is certain that the vitality of the Church is declining, her vows are losing their sacredness, her doctrines are less loyally held and defended, her work more slightly done, her sincerity alloyed, and her purity tarnished by her own children. None can so wound her but they."

We have allowed onrselves scant space for "the remedy" proposed in the third part of the essay. That remedy is that we must dig through the "hard pan" which has settled upon this age, the result of shallow cultivation, and plant STRONG CONVICTIONS of truth and dnty deep in the minds and hearts of men.

When we first read this third part we confess to a feeling of disappointment. We felt that onr anthor's diagnosis was eminently skillful, bnt he was not so happy in prescribing the remedy. It is undonbtedly true if these strong convictions were impressed npon the mind and heart of the church instead of the donbting, shifting, half-hearted faith that so sadly prevails, all that onr anthor claims would follow. These strong convictions would form central, fixed points, around which all the other beliefs of the man would revolve obediently and lovingly; gloomy donbts and fears would be exorcised; religious emotion, welling np from the depths of solid, firm assurance of truth, would dig for itself a deep channel of joyons love; christian activity would arm itself with new strength; and a vigorous, healthy, happy growth would qnickly displace sickly sentimentalism, cant, and hypocrisy. But granting all this, the question recurs how shall we produce these convictions? Bnt npon reflection we know not what better remedy can be proposed—only, we would like to have seen a more pronounced, decided assertion of onr dependence upon the Infinite Spirit to effect any cure, than we have fonnd any where in our anthor's pages. But looking only to second causes we know not what else could have been said more to the purpose.

The concluding chapters are taken up with showing that the special matter about which men need strong convictions is Christ as Redeemer and King not only saving but ruling and sanctifying—and then this conviction would comport itself in the individual and in the nation—and finally the one word which presents the incarnation of the believer's life is CONSECRATION.

The anthor alludes to the fact that the church has gradually reached its grasp of trnth, and that by having its different phases presented prominently in successive epochs of her history. He thinks that since the times of Lnther the great and precious doctrine of a free salvation has been the prominent idea, and that it is time that a scarcely less important truth should emerge to the front that Christ is not only a Savior from hell bnt also from sin, not only a Redeemer, bnt a Redeemer administering law, and establishing a kingdom in the hearts of men, and demanding a grateful, loving obedience.

Dr. A. Alexander says in his religious experience, p. 201: "To exercise unshaken confidence in the doctrine of gratnitons pardon is one of the most difficult things in the world; and to preach this doctrine fully without verging towards antinomianism is necessy task, and is therefore seldom done." May not a free gospel, every word of which is God's own precions trnth, be carelessly or even too exclusively preached to the injnry of the Church and of souls?

The attention of the writer was called to this matter some two years ago by some remarks in Presbytery from the honored head of one of onr colleges. He was enjoining npon his brethren the importance of enforcing from the pulpit the claims of practical christian dnty, and not in general bnt by detail. He said it had been his lot nsually to be a listener, and had rarely heard sermons npon snch snbjects. When the writer came home he looked over his little pile of Mss. and "skeletons" and he was astonished, and grieved, and alarmed to find that he had been preaching over ten years, and there were not more than ten sermons npon the every-day, practical duties of life; while jnst snch snbjects form perhaps over half of God's word.

To use Mr. Dickson's language "Bnt I draw rein. One mnst stop short of saying all on so inexhaustible a theme; and it may as well be at this point."

PREMILLINARIANISM.

MR. EDITOR:—I do not wonder that you fear the damaging effect on mission work of the erroneous views of the "writer in the PRESBYTERIAN," if you conclude that those views are generally adopted by Premillinarians; or are even the necessary resnlt of the doctrine held by them.

The theological world is divided into two parties on the snbject of the millenninm; those who believe that the glorious time when the will of the Lord will be done on earth as it is in heaven, will arrive and last a thousand years before the second personal coming of Christ; and those who believe that Christ will in person introdnce that event. Of the latter party there are those who hold the nnscriptnral opinion that after Christ's second coming, there will be men abiding on the earth in their nnglorified bodies, who will be from time to time, the subjects of converting grace, and that the human race will be forever perpetnated and increased by natnral generation. Snch are the views of the Bonars of Scotland and of Lord, Tyng, Brooks and others, of America. There is another party of Premillinarians who hold the scriptnral doctrine that at the coming of Christ, the work of conversion will cease, and the Church of God, the body of Christ will be complete.

I cannot see how the adoption of either of these views, especially the latter, can cause any abatement of the zeal and earnestness of a trne christian in laboring for the salvation of sonls either in the home or the foreign field. It is not improbable that the minister who holds the views of the "writer in the PRESBYTERIAN" will "give np his work in despair, and abandon his field" in a foreign land; bnt if so, for the same reason, he will refnse to work for the Lord any where.

The "writer in the PRESBYTERIAN" says: "I never knew a missionary to go to a foreign field with Premillinarian, convictions." I will add, I cannot conceive how he could go into a home field either, with the writer's "convictions." This writer, who thinks that "Christ never has in any sense been a King," and "that the gospel is not adequate to the conversion of the world," happens to be a Premillinarian. But because a man who calls himself a Premillinarian holds certain erroneons religious opinions, it should not be snpposed that the doctrine of Premillinarianism tends to the adoption of such opinions. As well might we hold that because the Papal Church professes the christian religion, therefore the christian religion tends to the adoption of all the mischievous tenets held by that church.

Both classes of Premillinarians which I have named, while they believe that the gospel is adeqnate to the conversion of the world, and wonld accomplish that event before Christ's coming, if it pleased God through that agency to convert all the sinners of a given generation, at the samo time believe that it is His revealed purpose to snffer in His visible church the tares to grow with the wheat until the end of the world—the time of Christ's second coming.

There have been a vast multitude of earnest ministers of the gospel who did not feel crippled in their work for their Master by their belief of the Premillinarian doctrine. It should be remembered that the Postmillinarian doctrine is comparatively new to the Protestant church, having first been advocated by Whitby, an Armenian divine, in the latter part of the 17th and the first of the 18th centnry. It will not be denied that Lnther, and Calvin, and Knox, and Latimer, and Ridley, and Baxter, and Bunyan, and Rntherford, and Chalmers, and Wesley, and Hewitson, and McCheyne, and Lowrie, and a host of other reformers and martyrs and missionaries, who believed that Christ wonld come in person before the conversion of the world, were at least as zealous and indefatigable in their labors for the conversion of sinners, as those divines who since the time of Whitby adopted the new theory advanced by him. I could quote the Premillinarian views of the person I have named, bnt it would make this article two long, to do so. I will give two or three qnotations:

Luther said, "I conceive that the signs preceding the last day are fnlfilled. Unless it be that God and Magog together with the Papacy should yet be crushed and destroyed * * * and that particnlar and supernatnral darkness of the sun and moon * * * * * otherwise, everything is fulfilled which is to precede the last day"—(Meurer's life of Luther, p. 573.)

Chalmers said, "Let ns wait for the coming of the Lord, who will destroy all adversaries, and will dissipate every darkening influence by the brightness of His appearance. * * * * * Let my constant attitnde be that of one who looketh for the Savior."—(Sabbath Readings.)

Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, an eminently pious man, and missionary to China, in a letter found in his memoir, said, "Since writing to you last, I have adopted many of the Millenarian views in regard to the second advent of Christ. They seem to make many things in the history of missions that were dark before, much more plain and encouraging. I find much satisfaction in them, and often long inexpressibly for the 'coming and appearing' of our Lord. O! to be found doing His work when He comes, and not idling in the the field to which He has sent me." P. T. P.

OBSOLETE WORDS IN OUR TRANSLATION.

There is in the English version of the Bible a nnmber of words, which have gone out of nse; and which, therefore, create difficulty with common readers, especially among the yonng. Of these the following are examples; viz:

Gen. xlix: 27, Ravin—Prey or plnnder.
Exod. xii: 9, Purtenance—Inward parts.
Joshna xi: 9, To Hough—To hamstring.
1st Sam. viii: 12, To Ear—To till or cultivate.
1st Sam. xvii: 22, Carriage—Baggage, Act xxi: 15.
2nd Sam. xiv: 26, To poll the head—To cut off the hair.
Job. ii: 3, Eschew—To avoid.
Psalm. iv: 2, Leasing—Lies.
Isiah. iii: 19, Mufflers—Thin veils.
Isaiah. viii: 21, Hardly bestood—Scantily supplied.
Daniel iii: 21, Hosen—Stockings.
Nahnm. iii: 19, Bruit—Rnmour.
Matthew. vi: 31, I trow—I think.
Matt, xiii: 20, Anon—Immediately.
Lnke. xvii: 9, To take thought—To be anxions.
Lnke. xx: 11, Entreat—To treat.
Acts. x: 42, Quick—Living.
Acts. xxi: 11, Oweth—Owneth.
James. v: 11. (2.) Pitiful,—Compassionate.
2nd Cor. viii: 1. (1.) We do you to wit—We inform yon.
In many places, { Wist—Knew. Wot—Know.

These are a few instances of words out of use. Many others might be given; bnt these may serve as an example to pnt the common reader and yonng people into the way of enqniry, when the obscnrity of a passage arises from not understanding the reading of particnlar words. The new version will correct all this.

A YOUNG LADY'S LIBRARY.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Ruskin, who has a way, notwithstanding occasional poetic extravagances, of saying very practical things, makes this pertinent snggestion to girls:

"I would nrge upon every young woman to obtain as soon as she can, by the severest economy, a restricted, serviceable, and steadily, however slowly, increasing series of books for use through life, making her little library, of all the furniture in her room, the most studied and decorative piece; every volume having its assigned place, like a little statne in its niche."

Thinking of this bit of advice, it occurred to me that many of my yonng friends wonld like to follow it, and that they might be pleased with a few hints as to how such a personal library might be begun. There is an charm in owning one's books. While we are glad and grateful for the opportunity of going to great collections of books, and drawing ont volumes for use or pleasure, yet there are some which we want to possess ourselves. There are some which we need to possess, and to which our right and title should be as indisputable as to our own clothes, our own place at the table, and our own room in the house.

The first book, of course, in your library should be the Bible, because that is a whole library in itself. I will not enlarge npon this, but will say only what yon have heard already from many lips, that the Bible lies at the foundation of all real culture. Yon should have for daily nse and study with your Bible, one or two helps in the way of criticism and explanation. Angus' "Bible Hand-book," Thompson's "The Land and the Book," and Trench on the "Parables and Miracles," will do for a nucleus in this part of your library.

You ought to have some special devotional books. "The Still Hour," by Prof. Phelps; Hamilton's "Mount of Olives," and Saphir's "Hidden Life," are all very full of sweet and sacred thoughts. On this part of the shelf, too, yon should keep "The Pilgrim's Progress," and the "Imitation of Christ," by Thomas a Kempis.

In the line of biography, there are so many good and great books, that it is difficult to make a selection, bnt yon should have for your own, either Boswell's "Life of Johnson," or one of the several abridgments of that work which have lately been issned from the press. You will want the Memoirs of Macaulay, of Mary Somerville, and of Charles Kingsley. The letters of Maurice and Engenie de Guerin, and Lamartine's Memoirs of Celebrated Characters, will fittingly find room here. Well-written lives of men and women are not only pictures of home and society during the periods they cover, bnt they show us, how and where, our brothers and sisters have striven in the earthly battle, how they bore themselves when temptations and trials came, and how they were aided in the work they sought to do. Of course there are very many to choose from, and yon may prefer others to those I have mentioned. If you will take the trouble to ask thonghtful people among your friends, yon will discover that most of them have at some time in their lives been influenced for good by the reading of some unforgotten biography. The inside history of missions is a literatnre by itself, and yon will be nplifted morally and mentally by having at least one favorite memoir of some gifted and devoted missionary, which yon may take up when you long for another atmosphere, than that of the commonplace and unheroic world around you. "The Life of Mrs. Nassau," who died a few years ago on the western coast of Africa, is a most precious book, but I name it only for example, as one which seems to me almost perfect.

The poets yon love best you will seek to have in your room. I could not do without Milton's stately epic, nor Tennyson's liquid music, nor Whittier's tender peace, nor Mrs. Browning's womanly passion.

For historians, your selection will be guided by the courses you have pursued at school. "The Student's Histories," published by the Harpers, and condensed from larger and more diffuse works, are exceedingly useful and convenient for reference.

You will want Mrs. Jameson's "Sacred and Legendary Art," a small Manual of Mythology, a volume or two of Ruskin, and three or four of those novels which, like "The Newcomes," and "Romola," and "Great Expectations," never wear out. You must have an atlas and a dictionary.

I join my humble word to Ruskin's emphatic one, and bid you, girls begin to collect your own libraries. You will follow your individual tastes; you will perhaps prefer other and newer volumes than some I have mentioned. Bnt bny them and keep them. The price of some trifling indulgence or luxury will purchase for yon a volume which shall become a near, a dear, a most faithful friend. And for mere purposes of ornament, books will do more for your room than any other furniture you can put in it. They are delightful through and through; a solace in sorrow, a light in the shadow, and a source of imperishable wealth. —Christian Intelligencer.

A MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

Pastors in large cities say they were never before so often asked by church members, May I go to the theatre, the opera? &c.—though not a few go without asking, it is said. Similar inquiries, involving the question of indnlgences that "the world" claims as its own, and spiritual Christians have very generally kept clear of, are not uncommon in in places of all sizes. Well, now, if one's heart is in such places, perhaps the rest of him may as well go with it. But in that case, why not avoid his church membership? Two masters are one too many for successful service. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" were foretold as "among the signs of perilous times" that should come. Are they already here?

We are reminded of a convert, a lawyer of strong sense and ability, afterwards Governor of one of the New England States, who had been fond of certain amusements, particularly the opera, in which line he was no mean critic. When the matter of joining the church came up his former associates, in a congregation that looked leniently on such amusements, rallied around him and urged him to remain with them, where he could "go on unquestioned very much in the old way, and yet stand well in the church." "Ah," he replied, "you urge as arguments for staying with you the very considerations that lead me to another church. When my heart covenanted with Christ it meant a changed life. My Saviour demands that change. I need it. And I need the watch and care of those Christian brethren to help me hold to my covenant. I shall go with them." He went, and still "holds true."

Instead of forever debating how near to Satan's kingdom one may go unharmed, is it not safer, and every way wiser, to see how near to Christ one may habitually live, and by cultivating a taste for better things easily settle the questions that else may come up all through life?—Congregationalist.

PREACH TO EDIFY.

Edification is the true test and end of Christian preaching. And the preaching—however attractive or florid or ornate it may be, and however rhetorical and elocutionary arts may be utilized to increase its effectiveness—which persuades men to live holy Christian lives, and helps them to do so, is the power of God unto salvation. The true preacher sinks himself in his work, forgets himself in the truth, and hides himself behind the Master whose message he delivers. He makes people talk about their sins, their duties, their hopes, the saving of souls, the redemption of the world, instead of talking about his personal eccentricities, and forget to compliment him in praising God. —Evangelist.

HAVE NO PETS.

It is very true that the Church is a place of privilege, a sweet refuge from a cold and heartless world, and that a leading characteristic of it is the "communion of saints." It is the duty of the minister to know, recognize, and love each member of his flock, to look after their spiritual wants, and even to sympathize in all their temporal troubles. Indeed, his office is to cherish them all as a "nurse cherisheth her children." But we cannot discover from God's word that it is his duty to pet any of them, and above all to make special favorites of either families or individuals, i. e., as a pastor. We can recall one instance in which a newly-settled minister was urged to pet a certain family which was very sensitive and very exacting. He felt this to be neither proper nor wise. His impartiality ultimately gained that family. He never could have petted them enough to please them. We recall another newly-settled minister, who tried to pet all the families of his charge in turn. He ended by having very few friends.—S. S. Times.

RELIGION IN FRANCE.

Dr. Pressensé, of Paris, writes very hopefully to the Family Treasury in regard to the "Religious State of France." He declares that movements toward Protestantism are to be seen in many parts of the country and among all classes. He says: "A movement of much interest has begun in the ranks of those who were formerly free thinkers. They have come to understand that pure negations are without power, that they cannot get the better even of a false religion. Besides, free thinkers have seen not a few of their own class act with extraordinary inconsistency in the prospect of death. While in health they held aloft, with wonderful boldness the flag of unbelief; but toward the end their courage failed them—they sent for the priests and died in the open profession of the faith they had sought to destroy. In view of these things, many have come to be persuaded that a purely abstract philosophy must always be beaten by the Capuchins and the Jesuits, and that to overcome one religion which is defective, you must have another and a better to put in its place. This is what has led to the formation of a new party." In others increasing dissatisfaction with the doctrines of Rome is impelling them to Protestant teachers. These indications lead such cautious observers as Dr. Pressensé to say, "We have a firm hope that we are approaching a new period in the religious history of France." He closes his article with these words: "To sum up: France at this moment sees opening before her, in connection with the work of God, more beautiful prospects than she has had for three centuries. Evil still prevails. Superstition spreads its darkness over thousands of souls, and infidelity is misleading victims who are almost as numerous. But still, on these troubled and sombre waters, the Spirit of God is moving as over another Chaos, and bye-and-bye we shall see emerging a new and more attractive Life."

SOMETHING OVERLOOKED

It is not a little singular that no sooner has a boy his first jacket and trousers on than a dntiful father and mother begin to think of his future, and cast about for ways and means by which he shall by-and-by earn his livehood. Has he a taste for mechanics, a skill in bargaining? is he fond of his books? does he love the sea? What shall his profession be? How is he to take care of himself and of these that are dear to him, and how shall he be put in the way of it? And meanwhile nobody says a word about the girl's trade, business' profession, or livelihood.

Who is there, or has there been, to worry about the girl, in the same manner, as she begins to lengthen her skirts and turn up her hair? So far from any one's taking the thing to heart, it seems seldom to occur to any that it is either necessary or desirable that she should have a business, or earn a livelihood, or make opportunity for taking care of herself.

Yet in the fluctuations of fortune that render every one's affairs somewhat unstable, it seems far more like cruelty than tenderness, be one ever so much a millionaire, to bring up a daughter possibly to be cast some day upon the world without any means even of feeding and clothing herself. Suppose one fails, suppose one dies, and executors, or fortune-hunters, or lawsuits, make off with the estate? Suppose after one's death banks fail, or mills, close, or railways water their stock, what then is to become of those darlings of fortune, lapped in luxury from birth, and now suffering enough from the loss of all indulgences, without having the added horror of total inability to earn a cent, and either dependence or beggary awaiting them. It seems to us that before condemning our daughters to the possibility of any such fate we would stifle our own feelings of tenderness, and make the present scene the future by teaching them some art, some craft, some trade, that shall be worth as much to them in their not impossible day of need as money in the bank.—Harper's Bazar.

BE MANLY.

Some people get along through the world without a quarrel or a conflict with anybody, though, as a rule, such people are of no great force anyway, but the most of have more or less withstanding and being withstood to the face to do. When a conflict is inevitable, make candid and manly or womanly and lively work of it. Make him wish he had not—or, if he makes you wish so, then own up like a man, and have done with it. Let that settle it, and sweep ont the roots of bitterness and refreshen the face and heart with pure waters. When Christ bade us to love our enemies, He pointed out a before hidden avenue to both the highest manhood and the highest happiness. He did not mean that we should truckle to a tyrant, or show the white feather to a foe. He meant that we should lift ourselves above harboring spite and ill-will.—Interior.

ALMOST SUNDOWN.

I am looking over my labors
By the light of the setting sun;
For I see by the lengthening shadows
That my day is nearly done.

My work for the blessed Master
Is drawing towards its close;
Far less have I done in the vineyard
Than I hoped when the morning rose.

And yet while the daylight lingers,
I will work as well as I may,
Nor waste the remaining moments
Regretting a misspent day.

And Oh! if now in the vineyard,
Are any led there by my hand,
I give you this word at our parting,
As near to the gateway I stand:

Do all you can for the Master;
Do better than I have done;
And then, when the day is ended,
You may welcome the setting sun.
—The Watchman.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from our Exchanges:

The foremost paper in Southern Japan, in a recent issue, speaking of the progress of the christian religion, says, "It is astonishing how this way is spreading."

Wesleyan Missions in the Friendly Islands have been contributing from one to two thousand pounds per annum to the Parent Society. The work has been a real success, spiritually as well as financially.

Pomare, the Queen of Tahiti and Morea, died last September, in the seventieth year of her age. When she was born, missionaries had just come to the South Sea Islands, but not a single convert had been won to Christ. When Pomare died she had been many years a faithful christian, more than 300 islands had become wholly christianized, and on nearly all the rest christian workers are making known the gospel.

A brief glance at the history of the English Church will interest many of our readers. Orthodox Presbyterianism never thoroughly died out in England, and in the year 1836, at the suggestion of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, a synod composed of twelve congregations, was formed. A venerable benefactor of the Church lives to-day who was a member of that Synod—Robert Barbour, Esq., to whom the denomination is indebted for a gift of $61,500, for the endowment of a Barbour Chair in the London College. In 1844, just after the Disruption in Scotland, the Synod at a meeting in Berwick declared the independence of the Church, and entered into sisterly relations with the Free Church of Scotland. The name again underwent a change, the denomination being known as "The Presbyterian Church in England," until the Union two years and a half ago when it became "The Presbyterian Church of England."

The Roman Catholic College, Kensington, which was started with considerable display a few years ago, has proved a complete failure. The number of students never rose above a dozen, and the college has now been formally closed.

The late Mr. Ward, R.A., who has died under such distressing circumstances, another victim of overwork, painted, as a work of love, the picture of "Luther first reading the Bible," which now adorns the house in Queen Victoria Street of the Bible Society. On its presentation the artist spoke with deep feeling of the re-discovery of Gospel truth by the great Reformer. Mr. Ward has been described as "the Froude or the Macaulay of painting."

A remarkable pamphlet has appeared in France, in which a number of anonymous priests of the down-trodden Gallican party raise a most pitiful cry as to the situation of the lower clergy under the fierce and intolerant rule of the Ultramontane bishops. They declare that the oppression is even greater than it was under the old regime, and that there is no justice in France for the priest, who is at the absolute mercy of his bishop.

Mr Angerinos, the Greek Minister of Education, has offered Madame Sakalirius, the wife of a Baptist missionary at Athens, permission to reopen her school there on condition that either a picture of the Virgin is hung up in it or that a Greek priest is permitted to teach the children the catechism daily. The offer was refused. This school, largely attended by poor children, was closed by the Government three years ago because Madame Sakalarins refused to teach the Greek Catechism in it. The Protestant missionaries declare that there was more religious liberty when the county was under Turkish rule than there is at present.

THE FREE CHURCH OF ITALY.—A meeting was held in the Broadway Tabernacle last Sunday evening, at which the Rev. Antonio Arrighi delivered an address on the religious movement in Italy. Mr. Arrighi's personal history is an interesting one. Many years ago, when only twelve years old, he enlisted as a drummer-boy in Garibaldi's army. Being taken prisoner, in one of the battles, by the Papal government, he was set to work at the treadmill, an occupation which he pursued for two years, when he was released through political influence and suffered to return home, though still under surveillance. Shortly afterward he disappeared, having obtained passports under an assumed name, and fled to America. Here he went West, experienced conversion, studied theology, married an Ohio lady and settled down as a minister. The Pope, meanwhile, being deprived of his temporal power, Mr. Arrighi felt constrained to return to his native country. He entered at once upon the evangelical movement, took an active part in its direction, and has now been sent back to America to solicit aid. In his address on Sunday evening Mr. Arrighi gave a historical sketch of the Italian Free Church. The father of the movement, it appears, was the celebrated Father Gavazzi. At a convention held in Florence in 1870 Gavazzi presented a code of doctrine and a plan of government which were unanimously adopted. The new congregation called itself the "Free Christian Church of Italy. It now possesses twenty-seven establishments in various cities. Ninety preachers sow the seed, and their harvest so far amounts to 2,500 communicants and 3,000 children attending their day schools. They possess a fine establishment in Rome, just by the Vatican, where sixteen theological students are preparing for the ministry, and considerable property in Florence, Milan, and other large cities. The members of the new sect are rapidly increasing, and various towns are appealing to the governing council for teachers. The King and Queen of Italy have also expressed friendly sentiments toward the reformers and converts.

MISCELLANY.

It is a good time to purchase corner lots in Sodom and Gomorrah, for a Jordan Valley Railway is projected, mainly with a view to opening the inexhaustible beds of asphalt and lignite which are a chief geological feature of the neighborhood. See Ezekiel xvi., 46, et seq.

The St. Gothard Tunnel is now the longest tunnel in the world, the length, bored from both sides, reaching a total of 13,481 yards—twenty-three yards longer than the Mont Cenis. Very nearly 3,000 yards still remain to be excavated, and if the work goes on as rapidly this year as it went on last it may be finished in a twelvemonth.

Mrs. Rogers tells of "India women, whose wardrobe may consist of a sun-bonnet and a couple of calico dresses, gladly giving their dollar a year to support missions;" and she might have added that they will grow in piety and Christian principle all the faster for it. Let the spirit of those poor Indian women obtain universally, and the need of money for Christ's work would be unknown.

Years ago Mr. Richard M. Hunt, the architect, brought an old globe as a curio in Paris. It now turns out to be perhaps the oldest globe in existence, having been made, it is thought, not later than 1511. It has been presented to the Lenox Library, and will be known as the "Lenox Globe."

The English agent in an Indian province, lately arrested the head priest, whereupon fakirs to the number of seventy or eighty sat down in front of the official bungalow and proceeded deliberately to starve themselves to death. It was not until they began to dig graves for a few of their number who nearly reached the expiring point that the agent gave it up and released the priest.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1879.

THE CATHOLIC PRESBYTERIAN.

We have had time to glance over this second issue of our cosmopolitan Presbyterian monthly. It grows in interest. Dr. Stillman's article on the "Freedmen in the United States" is especially timely and noteworthy. It will afford much light to foreign nations, and will show the work of the Southern Presbyterian Church among the freedmen, with its difficulties, necessities and promises.

Principal Rainy's criticism D'Aubigne as a historian is an appreciative and discriminating analysis of his great work. With a heart full of warm love to the Redeemer, this convert of the Scotchman Haldane possessed a wonderful power, from his sympathetic insight into the heart-life and high motives of the Reformers, of making them to live and attract us strongly to the account of their fears, trials, endurance and triumph. The story becomes vital, and "men's pulses beat with it and their eyes swim with it." D'Aubigne has made men "more alive to the inner kernel, the living heart of all that is valuable in Protestantism as a religious faith."

Also Dr. Blakie's article on "The Two Streams of Presbyterian History" is suggestive and worthy of study. Continental Presbyterianism at the Reformation seemed far more likely to live and exercise a vast influence over the world, that Scotch Presbyterianism. Yet look at the facts. Under the dragonnades and butcheries in France, the bloody brutalities of Alva in the Low countries, the relentless crusades of the House of Savoy; the inhuman Inquisition and diabolical fanaticism in Spain, Italy, Austria, how often was the light of the struggling Church well-nigh crushed out, and its progress to this day sadly impeded. But from that gloomy December day in 1560, when "half a dozen ministers and some thirty laymen met in Edinburgh, and constituted the Reformed Church of Scotland," "though Luther had been dead fourteen years, and Calvin was within three years of his end," what world-wide trinmphs have clustered around the banners of the Church of the Crown and the Covenant. Why this difference in the sweep of these two streams? How shall the difficulties be met and removed in the future? What are the duties of Anglo-Saxon Presbyterianism now, to all those continental brethren? These are most interesting problems which are here opened up before our thoughts.

We are particularly interested in the General Summary. A grand movement has been inaugurated by a committee, raised at the Edinburgh Council, to aid the sorely pressed Waldensian Church. Pecuniary help was given them in Cromwell's time; and $80,000 was invested for their permanent benefit.—But that evil King, Charles II, seized and spent it. The British Government has partially recognized its obligation to make this money good, by granting the annual sum of $1,400 to the Vaudois Church. The average salaries of their pastors do not exceed $300 a year. The effort is to be made in England and the United States to raise an annual sum or a permanent fund that will add $100 a year to this meagre income.

Dr. Kalopothakes contributes a valuable paper about the present religious condition of Greece.

We call attention to one more item, viz: the account of the outrageous and unchristian Anglican invasion of the French Protestant mission in Basutoland, South Africa. Dr. Webb, the Sacramentarian Bishop of Bloemfontein, has actually crippled his other mission fields that he might come and insult the hard working and successful French Missionaries, by telling them they could not administer sacraments, and by attempting to wrest from them the labors of painful years. The Anglican "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel" are acting as they did in Madagascar and Honolulu, endeavoring to steal other men's labors, and presenting to heathen an unworthy rivalry and contention, among those professing to follow the Prince of Peace. Universal condemnation should rebuke such conduct.

We can but advise all Presbyterians to subscribe at once for this valuable "Catholic Presbyterian. See our "Book Notices."

THEOLOGICAL PROFESSORS ACCUSED.

The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN of Feb. 12th, says:

It comes to us that our candidates for the ministry recommended, not as we understand by the Faculties of our seminaries, but by individual members of the Faculties, and against the views, perhaps, of other members of the Faculties, supply vacant churches and sometimes fill pulpits by invitation (hundreds of miles away from their schools and their teachers), and preach before licensure. Thus practising lay evangelism in its most palpable if not its most aggravated form, utterly setting aside and ignoring our Form of Government, and treating the Presbytery with the utmost disrespect, not to say contempt.

"How is this? Who will give us the light? Who other than Presbytery can license either to preach or to lecture, except under the eye and in reach of the ear of a professor? But is it done? How? When? Where? Why? By what authority? Is any man in the Church—are any men—greater than the Church? We want light. We invite discussion—not of the editor for daring to broach the subject, but of the subject. We want all the information we can get, from any one and from all quarters."

This is a grave accusation. Here are ministers who have been intrusted by the Church with the training of its candidates for the ministry, charged with "utterly setting aside and ignoring our Form of Government, and treating the Presbytery with the utmost disrespect, not to say contempt." Our esteemed North Carolina neighbor has properly characterized the acts it describes, and we have no fault to find with it on that score. But is it right and fair to the eight Professors in our two Theological Seminaries to point them out in this way, and say that here are trusted ministers who do what they can to destroy our Form of Government, who are disloyal to Presbyterianism, who not only themselves break the law, but, what is worse, teach others to do likewise? It is true that it is intimated that perhaps all of the eight are not guilty, while some certainly are. But this does not materially help the matter. It is always wrong to condemn by classes. It cannot fail to be offensive to a company of eight persons to have it said of them that some of them are certainly guilty of a crime, though perhaps some of them are innocent. Is it unreasonable then to ask the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN either to make its accusation more specific, or else to withdraw it altogether, or to prove it to be true? The personal character of the following ministers is involved: Robert L. Dabney, B. M. Smith, Thomas E. Peck, Henry C. Alexander, George Howe, James Woodrow, William S. Plumer, John L. Girardeau. The respectable and truthful NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN says—on the strength of statements made to it which it regards as worthy of belief, as shown by its publication of them—that some of those certainly, and perhaps all, encourage their students in "utterly setting aside and ignoring our Form of Government, and treating the Presbytery with the utmost disrespect, not to say contempt," and of acting as if they were "greater than the Church." If this were said of a journal addicted to falsehood, it would be unworthy of notice; but the character of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN is such that it deserves no such contemptuous treatment. If the charge is true, it should be proved; if untrue, withdrawn; in any case, changed into a specific form, so that if some are guilty and others not, the accusation may not rest upon all.—Southern Presbyterian.

To this we might reply by charging the Southern Presbyterian with arraigning the most honored and trusted servants of the church with disloyalty, with aiming to destroy the Church, &c. &c., and in so doing but be simply doing unto our neighbor what our neighbor has most unjustly, as we think, done unto us. But we forbear.

Just why the Southern Presbyterian should have pursued the line of conduct it chose is a mystery to us. We have heard of a physician who always threw his patients into fits—for he was death on fits,—and our readers will perhaps agree that the Doctor has given us fits and then coolly asks us to get ourselves out of them.

Some persons may think that the marching out, in single file as it were, and aligning the gentlemen (whom we respect and honor, certainly, as much as our friend and accuser)—we say some may think this is as if to say: "Look here, young man!—or old gentleman as you please—these gentlemen have troops of friends. Every minister in our Church is endeared to one or more of them and will stand by them. Nothing however damaging to the Church is to be referred to if it would in anywise seem to involve them—It isn't safe." Now this would be a terrible sin, a monstrous and most unjust imputation on our entire ministry, and no one ought to, or justly can, charge our neighbor with any such intention.

Some might say: "You asked if any men are greater than the Church, and your Southern friend would reply: Lo! here are they." It is true our cotemporary has formally answered, not one of our questions, or said he could not, but any such suspicion as the above is utterly unworthy of a thought. We say most positively, that not one of the gentlemen named, and the editor of the Southern Presbyterian is one of them, considers himself, or any other man, greater than the Church. They love the Church—would die for it. And whatever they do, they certainly do, in our opinion, for the good of the Church—as they understand that good. Others might say, "Ah! Here is the old-fashioned notion. Our institutions and enterprises are not to be inquired into. Inquiry might elicit what it would be inconvenient to explain." But then this idea is not now prevalent, and most certainly our esteemed friend would not avow it. No! that must be dismissed.

Yet some such uncharitable people might say: "Why that's a common political dodge. It's merely throwing aside the main question, and hiding it from view by holding before public view, the eminent services of special favorites." But this would be entirely unfair to any respectable gentleman, and no reputations can be better than those of the Southern Presbyterian and its accomplished editor. Other reasons might be assigned. We come nearest classing ourselves with those who will wonder with great amazement, that so astute a logician as the editor of the Southern Presbyterian should overlook the palpable impropriety of rejecting the proposition furnished, and basing a lengthy essay on one assumed.

But we turn to our own case—which is sad enough. We find ourselves in battle array, so to speak, confronting the Faculties in serried rank, of two theological seminaries. What a picture! And what are we to do? To surround them is not convenient, and there no hole near enough and small enough to creep into. We'll raise the soul-inspiring cry of sauve qui peut and—travel.

The truth is the Southern Presbyterian is correct in saying that it is unjust to condemn men by classes, and if any one will insist upon thinking that we have accused the christian brethren named above, we beg that he will be equally persistent in believing that we withdraw all accusations. The only fair and just way to deal in such matters is to regard these reports as not applying to any until we know who.

Our aim has been indeed not at the professors, but at the practice—or rather, we haven't aimed yet. Just walking around, listening to the whizzing in the air, or the fluttering among the branches, and hoping for a better view. It may be we will never see the game aright, or it may be too small, and in that event we will shoulder our gun, and like the Arab, "silently steal away."

But seriously the field must not be so abandoned. In the Northern Church a state of affairs exists which is represented by the following extract from a correspondent of the Evangelist:

It has lately become quite common for for young men in the Middle or Junior Class in our Theological Seminaries to accept and even to seek opportunities to preach—to supply pulpits—to do in the pulpit whatever a minister would do there, without any license whatever from the Presbytery.

If a young man may do this without ecclesiastical impropriety, in an early stage of his Seminary course, why may not he keep on doing it in a later stage, and after the conclusion of that course? Why does he need a license from the Presbytery at all? Is there not even something unseemly, not to say farcical, in a Presbytery gravely licensing a man to do what they know that he has been doing for one or two years, whenever he could get a chance?

If young men after the first year in our Seminaries, or after the second year, before licensure, go off beyond the supervision of the professors to hold service and "exercise their gifts"—and if such is—or is regarded by their audiences—as preaching, and this with or without the knowledge of the professors, and with or without their approval—we say if this is done it is either right or wrong. First, Is it done? If done and it is the proper thing of itself, ought not our Presbyteries to specially sanction the procedure? If done and wrong of itself—ought not Presbyteries to have it stopped? We certainly can see no propriety in going through a mere form of licensure, if young men have been "exercising their gifts" in the way of preaching, or what is considered as preaching, a year or two before it is done. Is it not lay evangelism?

We accuse no one. But we regard it as specially noticeable that the Southern Presbyterian says absolutely nothing as to the question, Is it done? We now directly ask the editor of that paper: Does he not know that students of Columbia Seminary do, beyond the immediate supervision of the professors, "exercise their gifts" as it is called? And is not this exercising their gifts regarded by those who hear as preaching? Is not this done with the knowledge and without the disapproval of the Faculty? Is it done with the recommendation of any of the Professors? Is there anything akin to this done? If so what? We want information because we believe the good of the Church demands it. We utterly disclaim any intention to insult or offend any of our professors, but the Church is entitled to this information.

If the editor of the Southern Presbyterian knows nothing of anything of this sort and will plainly say so, we will take great pleasure in so informing our readers, and that will effectually settle the matter so far as Columbia Seminary is concerned.

It may be charged that in the above remarks, the professors in our Seminaries have been dealt with too flippantly, and treated with disrespect. In advance we deny any imputation of intentional disrespect. We would do all we can to enhance the respect, the esteem, the love, with which these christian gentlemen and brethren are regarded, and to promote by all means in our power the prosperity of the institutions which they have in charge. The matter in hand should really be divested of all personal connections. Again we call for bottom facts.

WHICH APOSTLE?

In one of our Southern cities which shall be nameless, a colored Methodist minister called on a leading citizen for subscription to build a church in a sister city. After disposing of the principal matter in hand, something like the following colloquy ensued:—

Stranger—I'se goin' to preach in the Baptist church next Sunday.

Citizen—How so? I thought you said you were a Methodist.

Stranger—Yas sir, but then you see I always choose the Apostle to suit the Church. When I preaches for the Baptists, I always preaches from the Gospel of John. Dey believes in John, and the Presbyterians believes in the Apostle Kings. I always preaches from Kings for the Presbyterians.

But how do you do, when you preach for the Episcopolians, asked the citizen.

The question was rather stunning, but recovering, the stranger replied: Well, I declare I hardly knows what Apostle dey does believe in.

This actually occurred.

CHANGE OF RELATIONS.

Rev. Walter W. Pharr writes to us that, "at a pro-re-nata meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery on 19th inst., the pastoral relation between himself and Ramah church was dissolved. He is now giving his whole time to Mallard Creek church.

REV. DR McNAIR.

Rev. Evander McNair, D. D., who has ministered twelve years to the church at Pine Bluff, Ark., writes us that he has ceased his labors there, but is undecided as to another field. We take the liberty to say that Dr. McNair, though not a "young" man, is vigorous in mind and body, has much knowledge of men, is an experienced pastor, a skillful divider of the Word of God, a devout man, a genial gentleman. Any congregation having enough piety and sense to rate these qualifications at a higher value than mere "youth," inexperienced but cheap, might secure the advantage of them by corresponding with Rev. Dr. McNair. For the present, we suppose, letters will reach him at Pine Bluff, Ark.

We copy the above from the St. Louis Presbyterian. It is all exactly so, and now Doctor McNair belongs to North Carolina properly. Will not some of our many vacant churches secure his services? We would be heartily glad to have the Doctor once more among us.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A tale is going the rounds that a kind-hearted preacher said to a mother who was leaving the church with a crying baby: "Don't go out, my good woman. Your baby doesn't disturb me." To which the mother replied: "Oh! I know that, but you disturb the baby;" and she pushed on for her home, intent on "anything to keep the baby quiet."

After writing the editorial in reply to the Southern Presbyterian and in fact on the eve of going to press, we received the communication from Rev. Dr. Dabney, which will be found in another column, and for which we sincerely thank him. It settles the matter, we think, as a question of fact, and we are glad to know that Dr. Dabney deems it "a subject of importance, and suitable to receive the attention of the Presbyteries." Had we received the article from Dr. Dabney a few hours earlier, the entire drift and style of our editorial would have been different. We say, now, that unlicensed candidates do preach, or hold services regarded by their audiences as preaching, and this, we think, is a practice which should be stopped. The tendency is inevitably to depreciate our form of licensure, and do violence, as it seems to us, to our Form of Government. We make no accusations.

It is enough. Let the Presbyteries act or decline to act, as they deem proper.

The Richmond Christian Advocate says:

"The Methodist Church legalizes annual repudiation of the most sacred debt, the salary of the preacher. A sum is fixed for a fixed for a plain living for the man. The year ends; the church can pay him one-half, two-thirds or four-fifths of the amount and repudiate the remainder, world without end. That's the law. The Methodists of Virginia "readjust" their preachers out of $20,000 every year.

"The less we say about repudiation of the State debt the better."

How is it with Presbyterians of North Carolina?

Our able and indefatigable legislator, Col. John L. Brown, of Mecklenburg, has introduced a bill to repeal the requirement that the Directors of the Western N. C. R. R. shall be taken one from each Congressional District. Also to abolish the allowance to them of mileage, as every one knows that railroad directors always ride free.

We copy this information from the Raleigh News. Without saying with that paper what indeed seems reasonable enough, that these measures are well-timed and much needed, we do say that energetic, clear-headed, experienced business men like Col. Brown are indispensable to proper legislation, at least, of a financial character.

The Mission work in other churches than our own, seems to be under great depression. The Home Missionary Board of the Northern Presbyterian church was $90,000 in debt on the first of January last. The Congregationalists have relieved their board, and so will our Northern brethren, and so will we, let us hope and pray. See the statement of the financial condition of our Foreign Mission work in another column.

It is noted as one of the signs of the times that Pere Hyacinthe has been allowed to open his old Catholic church in Paris. A few short years ago and this would have been impossible.

We agree with the Presbyterian that it will be time enough to condemn the new Bible revision, when it comes in due and complete form before the Church. Expressions for or against in the meantime indicate more zeal than knowledge, and are calculated to excite prejudice.

"It is a great thing to save one boy." So said a gentleman to us the other day. Did you ever think of it? Did you ever trace the waif of the street through all the gradations of ignorance and crime and consequent ignominy and misery; and take in the incidents of the infections example and entail of vice even through successive generations possibly? Did you ever contrast this with the child reared under influences, promotive of intelligence and morality, and insuring prosperity and happiness; a blessing to his family, a pride to his country, a benefactor to his race? Did you ever mark the constantly diverging courses of two such characters until the separation became vast as that which marks the difference between heaven and hell? In what nobler work could one engage than in saving even one child only? Will you do it? Will you help others to do it? The Orphan Asylum at Oxford is doing just this work. Let us give them a helping hand.

The polygamists of Utah do not intend to regard the law prohibitory of polygamy as lately expounded by the U. S. Supreme Court, and it is now said that nothing short of a constitutional amendment will stamp out the abomination. Action in this matter has however incited an association of gentlemen, clerical and lay, to endeavor to suppress the Oneida community in the State of New York. This free love organization is a disgrace to civilization and it is strange that the great State of New York has tolerated it so long.

It is with pain we note the death of Mrs. McDonald, the mother of two of our most highly esteemed ministers—Revs. K. McDonald of Wilmington Presbytery, and Augus McDonald of Presbytery of Lonisville.

See obituary column.

A new way to pay a church debt has been put into practice by the church at Elkhart, Indiana. The plan divides the debt into shares of $3 65, or one cent per day for each day of the present year, and issues certificates of stock. The stock was readily taken and now the debt among the people is easily arranged.

RESPONSE FROM DR. DABNEY.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
February 24th, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—I see in a recent number of your paper, the attention of the rulers of our Church is directed to the preaching of unlicensed students from the two Seminaries. This is a subject of importance, and suitable to receive the attention of the Presbyteries. Nor would it be seemly in me to oppose its discussion if I desired it. I only wish to state that the actual posture of affairs, so far as concerns myself.

On the floor of the Presbytery, (the court to which the constitution gives the control of candidates) or of the Synod, I should claim the right of deciding with the other members, as an equal, upon the custom. And if any one is curious to know my view, as expressed in the proper place, it may be seen in a resolution of the Synod of Virginia, minutes of 1860, for which I spoke and voted. As teacher in this Seminary, I do not consider myself as the equal, but as a servant of the Presbyteries, put here by their (indirect) authority to carry out their wishes in the training of their candidates.

In this matter of the public preaching of unlicensed students, I wish to say for myself (what I presume each of my colleagues would say for himself,) that, acting as a servant of the Church I never initiate any action of my own, towards such preaching. If it is done by the students under my tuition, it is always the doing of the pastors or church sessions, (or of the students themselves,) asking such services. When pastors or sessions have written, demanding such service through me, from unlicensed students, I have deemed it only courteous to answer their inquiries and communicate their wishes. I have not thought it appropriate for me, as a teaching servant of the Church, to interfere against their action any farther than to use what influence I could to prevent such engagements of students from interfering with their appointed studies.

Should church sessions or Presbyteries see fit to inhibit it as lay-preaching, within their several bounds, I shall certainly not be the one to object to such a use of their proper authority.

Fraternally,
R. L. DABNEY.

A SURPRISE.

And by this word, it is not intended to call attention to a very pleasant occurrence which took place at my house several weeks ago when we were invaded by about fifty persons with friendly intent. The surprise alluded to took place last week at Chapel Hill. Arriving there to fill my regular appointment, I had occasion to pass the church and went in. Greatly to my surprise and gratification, I found the house of God newly covered, the floor neatly and handsomely carpeted, the glass in the windows newly frosted, and the pulpit furniture neatly varnished.

On Sabbath we received two young men (college students) as members of the church, one of whom was baptised. These two added to those already connected with us make eight or ten that have joined us in about twelve months. What a pity that little church can have a minister only once a month! If I had money like some other men I know, they should have a settled pastor all the time.

DURHAM CHURCH.

Rev. B. F. Marable writes:

"I have just returned from a meeting of several days in Durham with bro. Fitzgerald. It is a most interesting field and deserves the special attention of the church. It has a population already of 3,500, and is rapidly growing. The congregation have recently built a church which though not entirely finished is in a condition very comfortable for worship. The work is almost completed, and no debt of consequence.

We had a most delightful and I hope profitable meeting. Bro. Fitzgerald is greatly loved by his people, and highly esteemed by the whole community.

TO MINISTERS AND ELDERS IN ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The New Book of Church Order will come up at the next meeting of Presbytery (Eno Church, April 23d,) for a final vote. It is highly important that every one who will be called to vote upon it, should do so intelligently or with a conscientious regard for the interests of our beloved church. The General Assembly ordered a copy of the latest revision (1878) to be sent to the Stated Clerk of each Presbytery. All others desiring a copy, could purchase it at a small cost from the "Presbyterian Publishing Co.," Richmond and St. Louis. Not knowing how far brethren have supplied themselves with copies, I offer to send any person, postage free, a copy of the New Book for fifteen cents, enclosed to me in postage stamps with address, if sent within three weeks from date.

HAMPDEN SIDNEY.

Intermediate Celebration of Hampden Sidney College, Va., took place on the night of the 21st. (February). From about 7 P. M., the people began to assemble until 8, the hour for opening the exercises. And notwithstanding the thick crust of snow which has hidden the ground for many days, the old college chapel was well nigh filled to overflowing with both ladies and gentlemen. Promptly at 8 o'clock, the esteemed President, Rev. J. M. P. Atkinson, D. D., with his little band of orators, appeared on the stage.

The exercises were opened with a solemn prayer by the Rev. Thomas E. Peck, D. D., of Union Seminary; after which a member of the senior class arose and gave us a warm speech on "The Tendencies of the Present Age in America." The subjects were all well chosen and handled with success, which does honor to both old Hampden Sidney and the inmates of her walls. Besides the subject above mentioned, there were eight others; seven of which were from members of the Junior class. I will give you each subject in its respective order, 1st. "Not to live, but to live well." 2d. "Times change and men change with them, but principles never." 3d. "Hungary." 4th. "A single aim." 5th. "Duty." 6th. "Chivalry." 7th. "If the sons of Priam sleep—Troy must fall" and last, by a member of the senior class "Impress of Character" after which both ladies and gentlemen retired from the old chapel to the literary halls to spend the time in pleasant chat and promenade.

Hampden Sidney is a good college and well worthy of the patronage of all our people who wish to have their sons educated. The President, Dr. Atkinson, is a very excellent man, teacher, disciplinarian, and preacher. I know and love and reverence his high christian character, and would say to all parents never fear to trust your sons to his care. The whole faculty consists of highly cultivated and well qualified christian gentlemen. The very best society surrounds this institution of learning, so that most excellent influences are thrown around young men who come here seeking knowledge. The number of students is smaller during the present term than it has been for years, the cause of which is found in the great scarcity of money. But I must say that what is lacking in quantity seems to be made up in quality, for I am sure I have not known a better set of boys at H. S. than the present. They are courteous, kind and noble hearted young men.

For example there was a young man who expected to leave college before the end of the term for the want of means, but his fellow students all banded together and made up a handsome little purse, which relieved his present necessities.

This shows that there is a state of good feeling among the young men. I love to see such generous-hearted youth preparing for the great work of the future. May God bless all our institutions of learning and raise up in them a band of youth who, while they cultivate the head may not neglect that which is the most important of all, the cultivation of the heart.

Next Thursday is the day set apart for prayer in behalf of the young in colleges and places of learning. Would to God that he might pour out his spirit and convert every student in all our institutions.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE NEXT ASSEMBLY.

I desire at this time to inform the Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published upon a plan different from and heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the report, as published, of the last Assembly—the only one of which I have had the honor to act as official stenograper—and mortified by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee having charge of the business, their hearty assent to publish the report upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from restrictions imposed by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method of publication which has unavoidably prevented me from making the last report as complete as I desired, I hope, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the church with what it has never yet enjoyed, prompt information of the proceedings and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time.

Holmes' Readers, First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth. By Prof. Geo. F. Holmes, LL. D., of the University of Va.

Holmes' Elementary Spelling Book.

These books are simple, perspicuous, gradually progressive, and give careful attention to phonic analysis, drill in oral elements, distinct articulation and right application of principles of natural and expressive reading and elocution. Such exact elementary drill is necessary and invaluable.

A special feature also marks and commends the Fourth and Fifth Readers, viz.: an ample proportion of the excellent selections is from Southern authors, and pictures Southern scenery, productions, and historic incidents. In the main our Readers, gotten up by Northern enterprise, ignore Southern writers. We would have been glad to find more selections from the older English classics, and distinguished living Southern authors. Perhaps these are found in the Sixth or Academic Reader, which we have not seen. We endorse and commend these books to Southern teachers.

Gildersleeve's Latin Primer. By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph. D., LL D., of John Hopkins' University, late of University of Va. 1878. University Pub Co., N. Y.

This is the best Latin Primer we have seen. It would have been "a thing of joy" to us in our school days. Its explanations are perspicuous, and the exercises for translation from Latin to English, and English to Latin, are so interesting and so judiciously repeated, that any child of average capacity can grasp them, and must acquire considerable knowledge and facility in the Latin language, before this book is finished.

English Literature. A Historical Sketch of English Literature from the Earliest Times. By Richard M. Johnston and William Hand Browne, University Pub. Co. New York and and Baltimore. Pages 395.

In this condensed survey of English Literature, the aim of the authors is to select that branch of letters especially characteristic of each period, show the influences prodncing it, and give a sketch of the most eminent authors with illustrations of their productions. It is a bird's-eye view of a vast field. We think it is well presented. As an introduction to this study in our schools it will be profitable, and awake a thirst to know more of the philosophy as well as the facts and actors in our literary history. Some important names have been omitted E. G. Burns, Hugh Miller, Bishop Butler, Sir William Hamilton, J. S. Mill, and Dr. Chalmers. We hope the authors will give a similar resume of American Literature.

MONTHLY REVIEW.

Rev. John W. Dabney and Mrs. Dabney sailed from New York from Brazil on the steamer Para, on Wednesday the 5th of February, 1879.

We have intelligence from Soochow, China as late as the 27th of December. The missionaries at that place were well and all engaged in their regular work. Mr. Davis remarks under the above date, "the audiences in the street chapel were never fuller or more attentive than they are at present." Miss Safford was still in Japan and it was hoped her health was gradually improving.

Our latest intelligence from Campinas is to the 28th of December. Mr. Boyle and family had left Campinas and gone into the country to engage in the evangelistic work. Mr. Lane was about to organize another church at no great distance from Campinas, and it was expected that Mies Henderson would resume the charge of the school for girls. There were about 180 pupils in the two departments of the Institute.

Our last letters from Matamoras are dated as late as the 21st of January. Mr. and Mrs. Hall had just removed to Brownsville to make that their permanent home. The annual report of the mission, which accompanies the above mentioned letter, is of a most encouraging natnre. During the year which has just closed, thirty persons had been admitted on profession of faith to the church at Matamoras, and sixteen to that at Brownsville, making forty-six additions in all. The nnmber of children baptized at the two places was fifty. The theological class is now composed of five young men, two of whom will be ordained very soon to the full work of the ministry. The members of the mission had been favored with excellent health.

We have intelligence from Spencer Academy, in the Choctaw Nation, to the 21st of Jannary. The number of pupils was larger than usual. Mr. Read speaks of the school as being in a more satisfactory condition than it had been for a long time.—Missionary.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF FOREIGN MISSION WORK.

This, we are sorry to say, is distressing enough, and we hasten to bring the matter to the attention of our ministers and churches. At the close of the month of January it was found that our receipts had fallen off, as compared with those of the same month last year, as much as $2,208.74. From the Churches as such the deficiency was $1,526.92, from Ladies' Missionary Associations $395.91, and from Sabbath Schools $285.91, making a falling off in all of $2,208.74 in one month. During the first five months of the ecclesiastical year there was an aggregate advance of more than $4,000 over the corresponding months of the previous year; this was very encouraging. During the last five months, however, there has been a constant decrease, until at the end of January it was found that we were more than $1,000 behind the amount that had been received at the same time last year. And yet the deficiency was so great last year, that more than $3,000 were added to the general debt. It will surprise no one, therefore, that great anxiety is felt in relation to this matter. We are not prepared, at this present writing, to state all the causes of this deficiency; we know that there are a number of Churches, as well as a good many Ladies' Missionary Associations and Sabbath Schools, that have contributed very liberally, especially in view of the circumstances of the times. On the other hand there are many Churches, and among them some of the strongest, that have either not contributed at all, or done so on a greatly reduced scale.

What is to be done in this emergency? In the course of something more than two years, three of our principal missions have been cast adrift, probably never to be taken up again by our Church. Again and again retrenchment has been applied, both at home and abroad, and this cannot be used further except at the expense of the life-blood of the enterprise. Further contraction would only foreshadow the ultimate extinction of the work, and perhaps at no distant day. But we do not yield to despondency; there are means in the Church, notwithstanding the hardness of the times, not only to retrieve the deficiencies of the past, but to furnish all that is necessary to tide this great cause safely over the dangers which now threaten it.

In the name of the great Redeemer, therefore, in behalf of a perishing world, for the sake of the honor of our own beloved Christ and in view of the solemn pledges given in our missionary brethren now in the field, every friend of the Lord Jesus rise up and do all that can be done to relieve this distress. Let the month of March—the last month of the financial year—witness such liberalities as shall not only cheer the hearts of our far off missionary brethren, but as shall cause the great Redeemer Himself to cast a look of complacency upon our beloved Church.—Missionary.

Robert Arthington, of Leeds, England, offers the American Missionary Association £3,000 ($15,000) for establishing a new African Mission station in the vicinity of the Victoria Nyanza Mission upon condition that the debt of the Society be first extinguished.

Rev. Geo. H. Hepworth has resigned the pastorate of the Church of the Disciples in New York city, on account of ill-health. Rev. Wesley R. Davis, a Methodist minister, will succeed him. The church is Congregational, but Rev. Mr. D. is dissatisfied with the itineracy.

Revivals are in progress in the following Congregational churches in the State of New York: At Lysander, Henrietta, Hamilton, Fairport, Lockport, Richford, Sidney Plains, Lewie, Parishville, Moravia and others, and in the following Presbyterian churches: Jerentum, Pa.; Omaha, Neb.; Hastings, Neb.; Third Presbyterian, Chicago; Appleton City, Mo.; First Presbyterian, Brooklyn, and many others.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. John L. Martin has left Bryan, and is preaching at Denison, Texas.

Rev. Ben. Helm is actively engaged visiting the churches in Kentucky. He seems to be meeting with some success.

Rev. C. R. Vaughan, D. D., has arrived in Atlanta, and will fill the pulpit of the Central Presbyterian church for six months.

The churches of Shelbyville, Ky., are reported as revived and encouraged. Union prayer-meetings were held in the Presbyterian church during the Week of Prayer.

Rev. William Howell Taylor, by a very kind letter, has withdrawn from the church at Aiken, S. C., to take charge of the Presbyterian church in St. Augustine, till June 1st.

Twenty-two additions to the First Church of Atlanta, Ga., with a prospect of others. Rev. H. Martin, the pastor, has been assisted by Rev. Nathan Bachman, of Knoxville.

Eight additions to the Hebron church in Augusta county, Va. Congregations large and attentive. Pastor, Rev. F. H Gaines, and Rev. James Murray conduc ed services.

Under ministrations of Rev. H. W. Woods the Presbyterian church of Carrollton, Ky., has been blessed. Sixteen members were received by profession on February.

Rev. G. W. White, Pastor of the Presbyterian church at Moorefield, West Virginia, is holding a series of meetings, and is much encouraged by the large attendance on the services and the deep seriousness prevailing.

Bishop Wingfield, now Missionary Bishop of Northern California, has been chosen by the Protestant Episcopal Council of the Diocese of Louisiana to occupy the position, made vacant by the death of Bishop Wilmer.

The Third Presbyterian church of Louisville, Ky., commenced a series of meetings at the church, Chestnut and Sixteenth streets, on Sunday of last week. The congregations have been good, and the interest on the increase. Rev. J. H. Moore has been conducting the meetings, with the assistance of other ministers of the city.—Christian Observer.

Rev. S. M. Frierson writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Unity, Coryelle county, Texas:

A Sabbath School was begun at Turnersville, in this county, six weeks ago, which now numbers over seventy-five scholars. It is encouraging to see that at a season when schools of this class usually die out, this one increases in numbers and interest.

Rev. W. S. Kennedy informs the Texas Presbyterian that a storm recently passed through Lockhart, destroying among other houses the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. It has not yet been decided whether the Presbyterian congregation will build separately or in connection with their Methodist brethren. The Presbyterian organization is feeble, but had been lately much encouraged by the large congregations attending upon the stated means of grace, and the lively interest taken in the welfare of the church by nearly all of our members.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting was held on Sunday night in the First African church in this city, in behalf of the Virginia Bible Society. The colored pastor of the church, Rev. Mr. Holmes, conducted the opening services. Rev. Dr. Hoge, President of the Bible Society, made an address that greatly interested the congregation, which filled the large building to its utmost capacity, and he was followed by Rev. Dr. Read and by Mr. Holmes. A collection was taken up for the Bible cause and a good impression made in its behalf.—Central Presbyterian.

DECORATIONS IN EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.—The Right Rev F. M. Whittle, D. D, Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, has written a letter to the clergy and vestries of the several churches in this diocese, forbidding the use of flowers at Easter or upon any occasion in the churches. The use of fruits and vegetables upon Thanksgiving Day is also forbidden. In the same letter the Bishop prohibits the altar-cloths except one color—in other words, he inhibits the practice of changing the altar-cloths at the different ecclesiastical seasons.—Dispatch.

NORTHERN.

A new Presbyterian church was opened in Newark, N. J., on February 9th. Built of brick, and cost only $4,100.

Bishop Bedell, of Ohio, will soon publish, through J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, a work on "Pastoral Theology."

Hon. Charles Koonce, and the late Dr. Fairchild, of New Jersey, lately founded scholarships in the Western Theological Seminary of Alleghany.

The Woman's Board of Missions connected with the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, located in Boston, has received a gift of $25,000.

Over $1,400 was subscribed in Dr. Taylor's Church on Sabbath before last for the free Christian Church of Italy. $1,000 was, however, contingent upon $5,000 being raised.

The Reformed Episcopal Church of the West continues to reform itself. One of its Chicago rectors announces that henceforth Sunday evening sermons will be finished in twenty minutes, and the Gospel Hymns will be used for evening singing.

We are glad to welcome back the Fayetteville Gazette. By universal consent it was one of the best newspapers in the State, and should never have been allowed to suspend. Mr. Myrover feels confident of firm support in the future and we trust he will obtain it.

We can conscientiously recommend Cramplon's Soap, advertised in this paper. We referred the matter to the head of our laundry, and the report comes back to us, "It is splendid." We never go back on those reports.

SECULAR NEWS.

Satisfactory arrangements are said to have been made between the Central and Raleigh and Augusta Airline Railroads for transfer of freight at Charlotte.

It is proposed to consolidate Salem and Winston, N. C., calling both when united Salem.

The N. C. Senate passed the bill appropriating $50,000 to the Western Railroad.

Tranquility has been restored in Cairo. It is stated that the Khedive's son, Prince Mohamed Tewfik, heir apparent to the throne, will succeed Mibar Pasha as Egyptian Premier.

In the Maryland Court of Common Pleas, in session at Baltimore, in the suit against the Northern Central Railroad, to recover $30,000 damages for the killing of Mrs. Barns, who was run over by a train in June last, the jury yesterday brought in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $10,000.

Dr. T. B. Carr of this city has invented an improvement to the sewing machine, and applied for a patent. By this improvement the sitting in a chair sets a few wheels to work and runs the machine, dispensing entirely with the treadle. The Doctor has secured a patent for an improved ice machine.

A regular meeting of the New Hanover Teacher's Association was held on Saturday last. Prof. J. J. Ladd was present and addressed the assemblage. The exercises are said to have been very interesting.

The Virginia Senate passed the bill providing for the settlement of the State debt.

Yellow fever is increasing at Rio Janeiro. It is midsummer there.

A bill to punish Treasurers of Benevolent and Religious bodies for misappropriation of funds has passed the N. C. Senate.

The Paris correspondents of several London papers predict an early rupture between M. Gambetta, President of the Chamber of Deputies, and his Republican following in consequence of his severe discipline in the Chamber, and the vigor with which he prevents interruption from any quarter.

The North Carolina Medical Association will meet in Greensboro in May next.

Gen. D. H. Hill, President of the Arkansas Industrial Institute, has over three hundred pupils under him, and will ask the legislature for an appropriation to complete new buildings rendered necessary by the increase of students. He addressed the legislature the other day.—Wilmington Sun.

Congress has accepted James Gordon Bennett's offer of an exploring ship.

OUR LOSS.

Within the past few days the inexorable call of Death has come to two of our most prominent and most highly respected citizens.

DOCTOR WILLIAM E. FREEMAN, a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church died in the early morn of Sunday last, aged 63 years. For thirty years he had practiced medicine in this community, and won to himself that affection from many hearts, which the beloved physician alone can attract. He was universally respected as a Christian gentleman, and kind and open-hearted citizen.

COL. WILLIAM STEWART DEVANE, died at his residence in this city on Monday morning last at 10 o'clock, of apoplexy, by which he had been attacked the evening before. He had attended the funeral of Doctor Freeman, being at that time in usual health. His age was 50 years and 11 months.

Not extraordinary brilliancy but solid sterling worth, must be set as the prominent characteristic of Col. DeVane, and yet his conversational powers were exceptionally fine, as all who enjoyed his social intercourse will heartily attest. His integrity was unimpeachable, his friendship sincere, his courage undaunted, his disposition amiable, and his affections ardent, and tender as those of a woman.

His comrades in arms on the bloody fields of Virginia, and the commendations of his superior officers bear witness to his bearing and his worth as a soldier. But the strongest attestation to his legal attainment, and his universal personal popularity is found in his having been nominated some twelve years since, as the candidate of his party for the Judgeship of the Fourth Judicial District, in the first contest for the position before the people. We pass to more sacred ground; what a man is in his family, the man is. We love to claim him as a friend, but here we scarce dare tread. The heart softens, the hand trembles, and—we fail—as we draw near the grief stricken home, deprived of tender husband and doating parent. God of the widow and the fatherless protect and comfort them.

Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

At home on Rockfish, in Cumberland county, N. C., on 7th of January, 1879, JANNETT McDONALD, wife of the late John McDonald, aged 72 years, 6 months and 14 days.

Near the hour of midnight the summons came, and we rejoice to believe that she was ready with her lamp trimmed and burning; and before the natural sun dawned upon the earth, she was gazing upon the Sun of Righteousness and had joined in the song of the redeemed. No murmur fell from her lips during her short, but painful illness. She was perfectly resigned, calm and peaceful. She passed from the Church militant to the Church triumphant. We miss her, yet we believe our loss—though it be inestimable—is her eternal gain. We would not, if we could, call her back to earth's tiresome pilgrimage. In the community in which she lived she will be greatly missed. The poor and afflicted came and confided in her: she went to all and spoke a word of comfort to each. Her errands of mercy were not to the rich, to be repaid, but to the poor and needy. She loved to speak a word for Jesus in her humble sphere. The good which she has done will not be known till the records of eternity are made up. She lived to see all her children, five sons and five daughters, members of the Church. Two of her sons are ministers, two are ruling elders in the church in which their father served so faithfully, and one a deacon. May God grant us grace to live in the faith and die in the hope in which our parents lived and died. Farewell dear mother, thou who taught my infant lips to speak God's praise—my little feet to walk in all His ways.

"Farewell thou well-beloved form
The earth receives no choicer dust than thine;
And o'er thy calm and lovely feeble face be closed
The coffin, till in heaven's bright blissful home
I find, what earth no longer holds—my mother,"

K. MCDONALD.

In Concord, N. C., Feb. 14th, 1879, Miss DOVIE P. ALEXANDER, in the 37th year of her age.

For years she had been a professed disciple of the Saviour; and the gentleness of her disposition, her cheerful self-denials and labors of love for others, beautifully illustrated the religion she professed.

Death found her ready and willing to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

DAVIDSON COLLEGE,
MECKLENBURG CO. N. C.,
1878–'79.

THE NEXT COLLEGIATE YEAR BEGINS ON THURSDAY, September 12th, 1878, and ends June 12th, 1879. It is divided by a recess of about ten days, embracing Christmas and New Year's day, into two Terms.

The necessary expenses for the entire year, exclusive of clothing, traveling expenses, and pocket money, vary from $225 to $250.

There are three fully organized Courses of Instruction:

1. The CLASSICAL COURSE, occupying four years.
2. The SCIENTIFIC COURSE, occupying three years.
3. The ECLECTIC COURSE, designed for those who do not wish to take a regular course but to pursue special studies.

A PREPARATORY CLASS, intended to fit students for the Freshman Class, is in successful operation.

Applicants for any class will be received at any time during the year.

Davidson College is on the Railroad, midway between Charlotte and Statesville.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Two Pictures.

I.

An old farm-house with meadows wide,
And sweet with clover on either side!
A bright-eyed boy, who looks from out
The door with woodbine wreathed about
And wishes his one thought all day:
"Oh, if I could but fly away
From this dull spot the world to see,
How happy, happy, happy,
How happy I should be."

II.

Amid the city's constant din,
A man who round the world has been,
Who, 'mid the tumult and the throng,
Is thinking, thinking, all day long,
"Oh! could I only tread once more
The field-path to the farm-house door,
The old, green meadow could I see,
How happy, happy, happy,
How happy I should be."

The Renaissance.

How many young folk—or old folk either for that matter—when they meet with the word Renaissance in their reading know exactly what it means? They have a vague idea, probably, that it refers to something "artistic" or "old time y"; perhaps even the pretty head-dress of Anne Boleyn, or Michael Angelo's battered face, rises dimly before them; or perhaps some queer high-backed piece of furniture; but that is about all that they really know about it. Is it is not so?

The Renaissance is a term generally applied to the period of time embraced in the latter part of the fifteenth century, and the first quarter of the sixteenth; or, to be quite definite, [illegible] fall of the Greek or Byzantine empire in 1453 to the sacking of Rome in 1527. But it may [illegible] properly, be made to apply to the time extending from the beginning of the fourteenth century to the middle of the sixteenth. The word "Renaissance" means a new birth. Another form of the word, "Renascence," lately used by some English writers, shows more clearly its Latin origin.

During the long night of the Middle Ages ignorance and superstition had lain like an iron weight upon the human mind; but now some [illegible] seemed to be at work, and there was a great awakening in every direction.

Gunpowder, which came into use about the middle of the fourteenth century, caused a great change in the art of carrying on war, and put an end forever to the feudal system, which was the distinguishing characteristic of the Middle Ages.

Then there was the invention of the compass in 1302 by Flavio Gioja, a native of Amalfi, a village near Naples. By this it was made possible for sailors to venture farther out to sea, and it eventually led to the discoveries in America and the East Indies. The account of these brilliant achievements reads almost like a page from a fairy-tale.

The Portuguese were the foremost in all the grand maritime enterprises of the latter part of the fifteenth century. They discovered the Madeira Islands, the Azores, the Cape Verd Islands, [illegible] the western coast of Africa. [illegible] service of the Portuguese [illegible] that the brave Bartholomew Dias discovered [illegible] southern point of Africa; and afterward [illegible] 1497, that Vasco di Gama first rounded [illegible], which proved, indeed, to be one of [illegible] Hope, for it was from here that he sailed [illegible] the eastern sea-route to that land [illegible] silks and spices of gold and diamonds, [illegible] Indies.

You [illegible] that these bold exploits of the Portuguese [illegible] fired the heart of Columbus [illegible] unknown sea, in [illegible] passage to the Indies. [illegible] well known to you all, that I need make no more than this passing allusion to him.

Not only were there great discoveries made on this [illegible] world of ours, but more marvelous revelations still were made in the realm above us. It had long been believed that "this little round o' the earth" was the center of all created things; but Copernicus proved, a short time before his death, in 1543, that the sun was the center of the solar system. He was aided in his studies by the description of the telescope, which Roger Bacon had written in 1250. It is supposed that some of these inventions were known at a much earlier date in Asia. The telescope and gunpowder were known to the Arabians, and from them, no doubt, had Friar Bacon derived his knowledge. It is certain, too, that the compass in some rude shape was known to the Chinese in very early times. They attributed the invention to Hong-ti, grandson of Noah, 2115 B. C.

But still we have to speak of the most wonderful invention which, more than any other, helped on the progress of the Renaissance,—the noble art of printing. The Dutch claim it for their countryman, Laurence Koster of Haarlem, [illegible] it is generally agreed that Guttenberg of Mayence rightfully divides it with his associates, Faust and Schaeffer. It was the last named who brought metal types into use about the year 1452.

After the fall of the Greek empire in 1453, numbers of Greek scholars left their homes in the imperial city of Constantine, where the barbarous Turks had established themselves.

They carried with them all their worldly wealth,—their precious manuscripts concealed under the folds of their robes. The poor exiles found a warm welcome and a congenial home in Italy, where a taste for classical literature had lately been awakened.

We cannot help thinking how Petrarch, who had died three-quarters of a century before, would have enjoyed the society of these learned Greeks,—he who had loved learning so intensely, and had done so much to cultivate a taste for it in others. He died as he had lived, among his books, for he was found dead with his head resting upon an open volume.

Now every one seemed smitten with a passionate desire for learning, and eagerly embraced the opportunity of profiting by the instruction of these "wise men from the east." Princes, ladies and courtiers were alike enthusiastic. Like a boy with a new toy, they were filled with delight over some newly discovered [illegible] of an old Greek or Latin author. Now the lately invented art of printing came into requisition. Paper had been made from rags since about the year 1300, and, with these new facilities, copies of the classic authors were rapidly multiplied and came into the possession of those who had never dared to own one. Aldus Manutius set up a printing-press in Venice in 1488, and sent forth edition after edition of those splendid classics, called, after him, the Aldine editions, which are to this day the delight and envy of all lovers of rare and costly books.

It was not long before the results of this revival of learning were plainly to be seen. New ways of thinking had come into fashion; a more correct and refined taste had begun to prevail, and thus was effected a complete revolution in the arts of painting, sculpture and architecture.

The new learning was called the "Humanities," and those who cultivated it were called "Humanists;" and rightly, too; for the new learning worked a reform in morals, and so a refinement of manners. The Greek studies of the Humanists led to the translation of the Bible into many of the modern languages, and a purer and more enlightened Christianity was the [illegible].

And so, this movement, the Renaissance, went on. New ideas of religion, new ideas of politics, and of government came into being, and prepared the way for what is called the Modern Epoch. All that is best and sweetest and noblest; all that is most worth having in the life of the present day we owe to it,—the "new birth" that came in the fifteenth century.—Mary Lloyd, St. Nicholas for March.

Billy Doosey's Donkey.

Billey Doosey was a quaint old man, who lived at the corner of the common years ago, when I was a lad; and while he was ready to turn his hands to all kinds of work he mainly depended for his livelihood upon the produce of a small garden and the money he would earn by means of a donkey and a cart. Billy treated his donkey as kindly as it was possible; and although he could afford neither to buy corn for it nor keep it in a grand stable, the animal was always in a good condition, and would draw a heavy load behind him or carry one on his back at a capital speed. We juveniles paid many a penny for a ride on Billy Doosey's donkey.

One day Neddy's unwillingness to "go" amounted fairly to obstinacy; and when Johnny White had paid his penny and mounted in gleeful anticipation, not a step would Neddy budge.

"Make him go, Billy," was the cry.

Thus urged, Billy shouted, whistled and flourished his arms and clapped his hands, but all in vain; only when the stick was applied pretty vigorously did Neddy condescend to start. And when he did go, he did go—as people say—at full speed off across the commons, boys, Billy and all shouting at his heels. It was rare fun.

Presently Johnny White began to feel uncomfortable. Neddy was going at full speed toward the big pond, and not the slightest use was it for Johnny to pull with all his might at the reins. The cry was now, "Stop him, Billy! Make him stop!"

To this Billy could only reply, as he came panting along far in the rear, "Pull, Johnny!—pull!"

The catastrophe came at last. Rushing full tilt to the edge of the pond, Neddy there came suddenly to a standstill, and over went Johnny splash into the water. A pretty picture he looked, I can tell you, when we pulled him out!

Just as we had done so Billy Doosey came panting up, and was assailed on all hands with, "Why didn't you stop him?"

"Boys," said Billy as soon as he could speak—"Boys, I could make him go, but I couldn't make him stop. And do you mind, youngsters, as you go through life, do not get into bad habits, for it'll be easier to start than to stop. 'Specially take care what sort o' company you keep. Fight shy o' them lads that swear and smoke and tell lies and drink. If you get started there, you'll maybe find yourselves shot over into a deeper pond than that you've fished Johnny White out of."

They were simple words, but the old man's advice was good, and many of us, I doubt not, remembered it long after.

We took Johnny home, and he was put to bed; but he had a terrible bad cold after his famous ride and bath. He is dead now, poor fellow! As he grew up he took no heed to Billy's counsel, but seemed never so happy as when he could get with those who delighted to do just what the old man so earnestly cautioned us against. He got into disgrace early, and more than once, before he was twenty, was Johnny taken off to the county jail. When he found his character was altogether gone, and he could get no work, he tried his hand at being a soldier. He was not in the army long. Drink was his besetment, and at last was his death. He died in the hospital from injuries received in a drunken quarrel.

It is many a long years since we used to play together on that common, but I often have those days brought to mind, for I never see a youth neglecting his Sunday-school, and spending his time at street-corners and associating with evil companions, without thinking of the old man's words about it being easier to start than to stop. Some lads I have seen who have withstood the temptation a long time, and then given away at last. Some of these have become the worst when they have at length broken away from the restraints of home and friends; and sometimes, as I notice how such a one goes from bad to worse, I think to myself, "Poor fellow! I am afraid he has started off on Billy Doosey's donkey."—Christian Weekly.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Soldiers on Skates.

The idea of utilizing ice in military operations is by no means new in Europe; and although history does not record any famous battle actually fought on frozen water, the annals of offensive and defensive manœuvres provide many instances where generals have "taken to the ice." It is the Norwegians, however, who have most regularly organized and perfected the art of skating as an adjunct to the military system, and in Norway there is actually a part of the army which does service on the ice. A French paper records that in 1742 two companies of "skaters" were incorporated with the landwehr, and that five years later the militia was made to include six companies of 100 men each, which were ranged all along the Swedish frontier, and ordered to act in conjunction with the line regiments drawn up in the same districts. Since that time there have been various regulations relating to the skater soldiers, and there was in 1804, or thereabouts, an addition to the army of a corps of skater-chasseurs. The [illegible] forming part of the Norwegian forces is composed of "skielœbers"—a name which, strictly speaking, is not very well rendered by the English term "skaters." The special accoutrements include an apparatus which we should rather call snow-shoes, consisting of a pair of long and thin boards fastened to the feet, the left one being five feet in length, and the other only about a yard. The lower part of these skates or shoes is fitted with iron, and they are turned up in front after the fashion of a Chinese shoe. It is said to be astonishing with what speed and accuracy the "skielœbers" can direct their course. They are also provided with an iron-shod stick or pole more than twelve feet long, which they use either as a drag by trailing it behind them between their legs, or to help themselves along as with an alpenstock when going up hill or against the wind. The baggage of these very light armed troops is meanwhile conveyed in a sledge which one single man is able to drag over the ice and frozen snow.—Scottish American Journal.

Overworked Women.

Here is a woman who from dawn till dark is busy with the actual work of a household, with its cooking, sweeping, dusting, mending, and general moil and toil. There is never one working consecutive hour in which she can, without a sense of neglected duties, rest absolutely. She spends day after day in the seclusion of home, without anything sparkling and merry to inspire her, with no very ennobling thoughts, except in the direction of religion, and her religion is too often a compound of ascetic self-denial and sentimental fervor, rather than of high principle and holy love. When she is unequal to the performance of her tasks, she takes tea, and as her nerves become more diseased, more tea. With neuralgic pain often seizing her in the beginning of that slow decline which saps the life and happiness of so many of our women before they reach middle age, she is irritable. Little trials cause her torture, and as she sees herself constantly falling below her ideal, she loses heart, thinks herself a miserable sinner, and very likely doubts her claim to the name Christian. Doubtless she will gain spiritual help by praying, but she had better confess to a physician than to a clergyman. She does not bear petty crosses with unfailing sweetness, and perhaps says many a hasty word of which she repents, only to repeat the fault again, despite her prayers and struggles. What ails her is not temper, but tiredness, and tea, and too hot rooms, and a lack of variety and cheer in her life. Doubtless God could keep one in a holy and patient frame of mind who constantly violated every law of health, but there is not the least warrant for believing that He will do so, because if human suffering means anything, it means that we are to learn by it, not only spiritual truths, but that the soul and body are like yoked oxen—if one lies down the other must, or be sorely cramped. No delusion is more common than that illness is conducive to saintliness. The most devout Christian will have the nightmare if he eats half a mince pie before going to bed, and a crusty temper next morning, and his spiritual agonies will not save him in the future, unless he adds to his faith knowledge.—Woman's Journal.

Why the Whale "Spouts."

Whales swim very swiftly, the spectacle of a whale careering along the surface of the water being one worthy of remembrance. At frequent intervals the whale is seen to "blow" or "spout"—these terms being employed to indicate the ejection of water, or what looks like that fluid, from the nostrils. In the whalebone whales the nostrils are situated on the top of the head, and are named "blow-holes." On the supposition that the water ejected from these apertures consisted of that which, as already remarked, is continually being drawn into the mouth, the "blowing" of these animals appeared to be susceptible of ready explanation. But it was ultimately seen that there was no plain anatomical justification for the idea that water could pass so readily and constantly from the mouth to the nose, whilst a much more feasible explanation of the "blowing" of these animals can readily be found. Thus the water which is taken into the mouth appears to be strained off, as we have seen, by the whalebone plates, and escapes simply by the sides of the mouth-cavity. When, on the other hand, the whale "blows," the animal rises to the surface, the act of "blowing" being in reality the effort of expiration, or "breathing out" the heated air of the lungs, preparatory to taking in a fresh breath of air. As the whale begins to blow just before approaching the surface of the water, the effort must result in the water which lies above the head being carried up into the air in the form of a column or jet; whilst the heated air from the lungs is expelled when the animal has reached the surface, and, being condensed by sudden exposure to the outer cold, appears in the form of the fine spray or vapor which is last exhaled.—Scottish American Journal.

"This One Thing."

Wherever there is fickleness you may say with truth to him who is characterized by it, "Thou shalt not excel." The man who is continually changing his occupation, or constantly turning from one situation to another, fails to better himself in anything, and lives only to illustrate the proverb about the "rolling stone." The ancients had a saying, "Beware of the man of one book;" by which they marked their appreciation of the quality of persistence, and affirmed that he who has mastered one subject thoroughly is always a more formidable antagonist than your helluo librorum, who so overloads his brain with the productions of others that it is impossible for him to exercise the power of original thinking. Daily we see that he who has "focused" himself upon one subject is pushed into the front, while those who spread themselves over many, or give themselves now to one thing and now to another, are rarely heard of among men. He who is always changing from object to object finishes nothing, and his life at last resembles a heap of detached stones, which, if he had but kept to one plan, might have been built into a stately and commodious abode.—Christian at Work.

Antidotes to Dyspepsia.

Sleep will do a great deal to restore the tone of the stomach where dyspepsia results, as it often does, from overwork. Stout people, who have it from over-eating, should work out of doors, accustoming themselves to hearty work by degrees. The prescription given by an old physician to alleviate dyspepsia, is to drink half a cupful of boiled water, just as hot as one can swallow it, half an hour before each meal, and I have known of its giving great relief. The hot water stimulates the energies of the stomach, and dilutes the torid juices which it secretes. A wet cloth, cold or hot, as feels best, worn on the stomach will greatly strengthen it. If the food is carefully selected to suit a weak digestion, dyspepsia will cure itself. Strong chicken broth, without a particle of fat, may often be taken when other things irritate. Raw beef, very finely minced, like meal, and set in a covered [illegible] in a hot oven until it turns pink, but not brown, can be taken by the worst dyspeptics. White of egg beaten to a froth, or a spoonful of whipped cream, often will not offend. Dyspeptics should eat sparingly, a spoonful once in an hour or two, rather than attempt a small meal three times a day. Bits of ice, swallowed whole, and frozen cream often relish. But the cream should be entirely without sugar. A bit of licorice, or parched dandelionroot, or cherry bark, chewed and kept in the mouth, strengthens the digestion sensibly.—Correspondent Toledo Blade.

SECULAR NEWS.

The steamship Sorrento, on its way to Europe, lost 91 cattle and 168 sheep.

A resolution according $5,000 to Joseph Segar of Virginia, has passed the United States Senate. This is full of expenses for prosecuting claim to a seat as Senator from Virginia in 1865.

A passenger train on the Selma, Rome and Alton Railroad went through a rotten bridge near Selma, Ala. The whole train (except the engine) was wrecked. Several lives were lost, and many passengers seriously wounded. A car with [illegible] mail, baggage and express car, and one passenger car were burned.

[illegible] General of Gen. R. E. Lee, and [illegible] President of the Columbus [illegible] Company, fell dead of apoplexy [illegible] at his desk this evening. [illegible] over sixty years of age. He graduated at West Point from Virginia, was promoted [illegible] Major during the Mexican war, [illegible] master in Texas prior to 1860.

Col. W. [illegible], a short time since [illegible] of the Raleigh Observer, has been appointed [illegible] Secretary of State-ship and [illegible] the 19th inst. All of which is in the highest degree satisfactory.

A bill has been introduced into the Legislature to abolish the Department of Agriculture.

RICHMOND, Feb. 19.—The House of Delegates to-day adopted the report of the Court of Justice Committee, embracing a resolution declaring that the State of Virginia is not liable for the certificates issued under the acts of 1871 and 1872, for one-third of the public debt apportioned to the State of West Virginia, except as expressed on their face, to provide for the payment of such proportion of amount thereof as may be derived from a settlement with West Virginia in regard to the debt as it existed at the time of the dismemberment of the State.

The discussion of the bill providing for the settlement of the State debt was begun in the Senate, and the House will take it up to-morrow as the special order. The indications are that the bill will pass in the Senate without much opposition, but in the House the fight will be obstinate.

Bishop Foley of Illinois, died on 19th inst.

Spruille Braden, a graduate of an English nautical school, who could not enter the English navy because that would involve his renunciation of American citizenship, has been appointed Ensign in the U.S. navy.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—The Times, in an editorial article, says neither England nor France would be disposed to witness with indifference the success of a coup d'etat which would place Egypt under the personal rule of the Khedive.

The London papers, commenting on the Egyptian crisis, consider that the Khedive, even if he did not continue the demonstration, will take advantage of it for attempting to restore his personal power.

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

And other chronic ailments.

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.

[Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 21, 1878.]

"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and blood; secondly, for its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt be not quite in the right place, it can be very easily readjusted so as to cover the parts affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfection, has been hailed with delight, not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment, and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession, who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."

PULVERMACHER'S

are indorsed and approved by the most eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, and by well-known writers, who refer to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands, in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

WE NEED DEFINITION.

No institution in the world is better defined than the Presbyterian church. The definition of the Confession of Faith is able and clear—that of the New Testament is abler, and clearer—and yet in some quarters, no church is more thoroughly understood. The reason is that few persons read the Confession, and very few read the New Testament with care and attention. Most people form their opinions of the gospel, not from what they read, but from what they hear. And from the time of our Lord until now, there has been a host of agents active in misrepresenting the great doctrine of salvation by Grace.

The misrepresentations which I note now are two. The first is, that the Presbyterian church teaches Fatalism. The logic runs thus: The doctrine of Election is Fatalism. The Presbyterian church teaches Election—therefore it teaches Fatalism. When circumstances are favorable, this statement is boldly made in public, but ofttime it is conveyed to the public mind by a quiet under current, no less effective because quiet. This statement being persistently made, and rarely denied, the end is accomplished—many, very many persons believe honestly that the Presbyterian church does teach the monstrous doctrine of Fatalism. Said a very intelligent physician to the writer not long since, I am astonished to learn that your church does not teach Fatalism, the conviction that it did drove me reluctantly into a different denomination. This is one of many such cases that have come under my observation. This impression though thoroughly false, is in many places thoroughly popular. It is not always manifest, but often latent; and constitutes an immense obstruction to the progress of the church.

The second misrepresentation is: That the Presbyterian church alone teaches the doctrine of Election; and regarded as the only defender of this doctrine, so hateful to wicked men, and weak theologians, it receives all the odium which ignorance and heresy have to bestow. And this, in the face of the fact that three-fourths of the converted world believe this doctrine just as we believe, and teach it.

There is no shadow of exaggeration in saying that the church has suffered, and is suffering incalculably from these misrepresentations. There is an imperative necessity that it be better understood; and to be understood, it must be better defined by the Pulpit. Our ministry too rarely believe that sensible persons will not believe these flimsy objections to the Presbyterian church. But sensible persons do believe them, and are being constantly led off from truth and duty.

Should we not be more earnestly careful to have the world understand that the "Election of Grace" is one of the most clearly taught, as well as one of the most precious of the doctrines of Revelation; and that it is believed, and rejoiced in by the vast majority of those who honor God and love the Lord Jesus?

M.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

A SERMON ON HONESTY.

It is a short and simple sermon. The merest child can remember and understand it. It is of universal and perpetual application. The learned and unlearned, men in high places and men in low places, in business matters connected with church and with State, in private and in public transactions, will find something in it that greatly concerns them. It is a very old one. It was delivered about 3,500 years ago, and yet this great age has not taken away from it any of its freshness and interest. The place where it was first delivered is a high and notoriously celebrated mountain in Arabia Petria. It was delivered under circumstances the most solemn and powerful, and in the audience of a vast multitude. It was regarded of such vast importance and so very sacred, that it was at the first written on a table of stone. The author and writer is Jehovah. You will find the sermon, now recorded in the wisest and best of all books—the Bible—a book that unsparingly condems every species of dishonesty, even that one complained of by "our esteemed friend of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN."

But we are keeping too long the sermon from the reader. Turn to that division of the book mentioned above, called Exodus, chapter 20, and verse 15, and you have it. Here it is, "Thou Shalt not Steal."

If any one would like to have a minute but simple explanation of this sermon, we recommend to him the 141st and 142d Questions of the larger catechisms of the Presbyterian church.

Now, Mr. Editor, we think we may safely say that if this sermon is heeded, there will be no more complaint of eight hundred salaries paid with five hundred dollars, people will cease to read newspapers, the result of poor editors' toil and money, without paying for them. Merchants, doctors, teachers and mechanics, will have their old bills, and new ones too, settled; the hearts of toiling farmers will leap for joy as they receive the payment of long since eaten bread and meat, and many a homeless fellow, many a distressed and suffering widow, and many a penniless orphan will suddenly wake up to find themselves in circumstances of comfort and wealth, and will conclude that one of the old jubilee years had returned. And many more now living in splendor, wearing fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, will rapidly disgorge and restore their ill gotten gain, and after a constrained transit through the halls of justice to the cell of corrections, will conclude, that, after all, "honesty is the best policy." And if the sermon I send you is well observed, the cry of the honest and oppressed poor will not again, for their defence, cause to be drawn, the lance of an unknown Knight.

MINUTES OF SYNOD.

We have them at last; somebody is at fault about our minutes. Who he is, and who ought to find him out and stir him up a little, it may be difficult to say. But certainly we ought to have the minutes in hand much earlier. The Synod of South Carolina met at the same time that the Synod of North Carolina did, and their minutes have been published two months or more. We have a new Stated Clerk and the delay might be accounted for on the grounds of his inexperience; but this will not do, for we know he had the manuscript ready early in December, and he has given us the minutes as soon as usual. For years we have had to wait beyond all reasonable time after the adjournment of Synod. The Synod will have to look after this matter. But our clerk will no doubt, in a short time get the matter so in hand, that we shall not have to wait so long again. His work was done in good time, and well done. The minutes are so neatly and correctly edited that he will be excused for the delay.

In looking over the minutes, it is gratifying to see the full and satisfactory report of the treasurer, and to know that Synod could act wisely and safely in reducing the assessments of Presbyteries one-half—a retrenchment which will be appreciated. If this matter had received more attention a few years ago, we might have avoided the debt due Union Seminary. Mecklenburg Presbytery is behind $150 for 1876 and 1877 and $37 50 for 1878—a matter which should be looked after by the sessions when they make out reports to Presbytery this spring, the time when the annual assessments of churches in this Presbytery are due.

The ministers do not give any statement about the relative progress of the Church during the year. The Committee on the statistics reported that there was nothing in them for Synod to consider, and compiled the report of Synod for the General Assembly, which is all the Committee did. Doubtless the Stated Clerk felt grateful and relieved by the Committee for doing this work, which usually devolves on the clerk.

But it seems the Committee ought to have canvassed the Presbyterial statistics, and reported the deaths of ministers, suggesting suitable committees to prepare brief minutes of deceased brethren for record, and order of day for hearing and considering the same, the number of ministers and churches added to the rolls, and the number of licensures during the year, &c.—thus showing in their report, if Synod had made progress during the year. To be sure all these are in the reports of Presbyteries; but the statistics of Presbyteries are usually read (and heard by a few), and ordered to be published in minutes and that is the end of them.

R. Z. J.

[We are authorized and requested to say by the publishers of the minutes of Synod, above refered to, that no blame for delay can in anywise attach to the Stated Clerk. The publication was delayed on account of unavoidable circumstances pertaining to the office of publication.—ED. N. C. P.]

CHARLES KINGSLEY.

I have been reading "Charles Kingsley, his life and memories."

I propose to jot down some thoughts on him, and this biography of him.

The best and truest estimate of Kingsley, that I know of, is the view of him given in Peter Bayne's "Essays." "However opinions may differ," says Mr. Bayne "in regard to Kingsley all are agreed that his voice is that of a noble, earnest, generous-hearted man; that his whole nature vibrates with strong and perpetual sympathy with his fellow man." The general influence of his books he regards as good, albeit the intellectual food they furnish is slight. This latter statement is just, Mr. Kingsley was in no sense a great thinker on anything, though he wrote some very brilliant novels. He was not a man to see things as they appear in the dry light of the intellect. He saw everything suffused in the emotions and passions, and was swayed by the influence of stronger and more impassioned men. His own impulsive nature and ardent feelings played strange tricks with his reason. Yet he was a remarkably gifted man. His was a mind at once quick, versatile, many sided. He loved nature as a poet, almost with the passionate love of Wordsworth, and also studied almost every branch of science with equal delight. He was a most entertaining talker and wrote with great power when his imagination was kindled by the fervor of his passions. Yet there is a taint of extravagance, crudeness, convulsiveness, about all he wrote.

This biography shows much about Charles Kingsley to admire. His sympathy with the poor, his efforts for their good, his hatred of wrong, his devotion to the interest of his parishoners, his fulness of life, intellectual, emotional, physical; his immense industry, always working, studying, writing, preaching, visiting the poor and sick, always seeking to do some good thing for his fellow man. A man too, earnest in his religious duties, and preaching fervidly the truth as he held it. A true, faithful, generous, much-loving, much-working, lovable man. All this I think one will find in this Life and Memories." Yet as a religious thinker and guide he was not a man I can admire or even have much respect for.

I cannot much respect, nor admire any man whose master and leader was F. D. Maurice. Of all English theologians Maurice is my special and pet aversion. Not because he was a "broad churchman," not because his religious notions were utterly wrong, but because he seems to me a patterer with words and with truth, using religious words and phrases which have established meanings and then explaining them away; because he blows hot and cold at the same time; because he was always in a mist, vague and shadowy. He never got beyond the man who saw trees as men walking, yet kept insisting that he and his followers were the only ones who did see.

Peter Bayne once hit him off exactly, when he described him as making a speech "weak and windy to the effect of conse that you should, and you shouldn't." It is this playing fast and loose with every thing, this want of definiteness about Maurice, that imparts to his writings a constant cant, as distinct, as well defined and as nauseating as sulphuretted hydrogen. His forte was seeing through a millstone. Now to me there is something radically unsound, weak, shilly-shally about a man who can find any inspiration in Maurice—a whole continent of mists and vapers.

Kingsley's notions on religion seems to me lacking in body. To much a sort of sentimental gush, I really think Henry Ward Beecher and Mr. Kingsley are about on the same platform. They say they preach Christ and Him crucified, but it is not St. Paul's version of it, I think.

When you read the Psalms and Prophets and Epistles you feel the God therein set forth is not the God of Maurice and Kingsley.

That angust and holy one who inhabiteth eternity and before whom angels bow and cry holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty, is changed into a being whose chief, perhaps only, characteristic is Love. Of course they deny all this, and say they believe in a just God, and a God who punishes sin. Yet you feel that their God is on much better and easier terms with his sinful creature man, than the Scriptures assert.

It is a strange phenomenon that in proportion as men differ from all other men they are dogmatic and certain all others are wrong; and this seems especially true in theology.

Every now and then a set of men arise like Kingsley and Maurice who imagine the whole church view of God and sin and redemption, is all error. They have found the truth. All the creeds of the great historic churches go for nothing. The old view, the church view of the atonement, Christ a sin-bearer, God a being whose holiness demands punishment for sin, Christ's righteousness, our righteousness. All this must be thrown aside for newer and profounder views. And so they cackle and splutter and write congratulatory letters to each other and imagine they have made a great end in theology, and have created a new departure. But they die and their works do follow them so closely that they too die, and are buried in the same grave, and the world goes its way, and they are forgotten and what seemed a star turns out to have been only a rushlight now gone out. Meanwhile the old simple gospel as the church generally understands it proves, as it always has, itself to be the wisdom of God and power of God unto salvation.

As a pleasant record of an English rector's life—work and studies, this biography does well enough. But to me it has offered little nutriment spiritual or intellectual. The sick heart will find no healing there, the inquiring, troubled, doubting, truth seeking mind will find no profound truth there.

A biography is interesting and beneficial as it is the record of a life full of stirring events. The life of a great traveller or warrior, that of a fonuder of a new school of thought, some man who created an epoch on the religious, or social, or civil world. Such as Luther, or Wesley, or Bacon, or Howard. Or as it reveals some unique and original character as Lamb or Foster, or as it contains a record of a brilliant set of men, their doings and sayings, such as Boswell's Life of Johnson, or as it is the record of a singularly pious and devoted man furnishing a stimulus to religious activity, or if the life of a mere scholar and thinker its value to me consists in letters, or diaries, or conversations full of rich and profound thought on interesting subjects.

The Life of Kingsley is valuable for none of these reasons. Put this book against so much hard cash—my verdict would be keep your money.

TALKING.

Finery and feeling do not always go together. On the contrary some men are most sparing of speech when their feelings are most deeply engaged. There is awful silence in the ranks before the first gun is fired, and little talking heard during the dreadful progress of a battle. When a ship is laboring for her life, and every moment may decide her fate, there is no talking.

WORK WITHOUT CEASING.

"Work, work, work, all day long and every day. There is no let up. Everybody puts their work on me. I get no thanks. All this I could bear, but not a day passes over my head without a tirade of fault-finding from some one who is not doing the tenth part of what I am doing for the community and the Church. Why don't you do this? What did you do that for? Don't you think that was a mistake? are the querulous questions fired at me day after day by those who do not put even their little in blood-earnest to the burden!" Such is the complaint one hears often. It is true in every syllable. It comes from the lips of good men and women, who have large and loving hearts, who love to work, and to whom idleness would be misery. Perhaps a word or two here to-day may be of service to them. We say then: There are those who find fault and they are—well, never mind what; but there are others who say nothing because they are satisfied and pleased. A good wife complained that her husband sometimes found fault with his food but seldom or never praised it. The puzzled husband, who had intended no evil, after some cogitation assured his help-meet that when he said nothing it was because he was gratified. So those who do not praise you are satisfied with you. Besides, whether you know it or not, other men know just what you are worth;—and whether you know it or not the words of our Lord are fulfilled in you, "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." Only be cheerful hereafter, and if possible more abundant in your service, imitating Him who came among men to minister and not to be ministered unto.—Christian Intelligencer.

A SONG OF STOUT WORKERS.

BY JOHN STUART BLACKIE.

Onward, brave men, onward go!
Place is none for rest below;
He who laggeth faints and falls,
He who presses on prevails!

Monks may nurse their mouldy moods,
Caged in musty solitude;
Men beneath the breezy sky
March to conquer or to die!

Work and live—this only charm
Warms the blood and nerves the arm;
As the stout pine stronger grows
By each gusty blast that blows.

On high throne or lowly sod,
Fellow workers we with God;
Then most like to Him when we
March through toil to victory.

If there be who sob and sigh,
Let them sleep or let them die;
While we live we strain and strive,
Working most when most alive!

Where the fairest blossom grew,
There the spade had most to do;
Hearts that bravely serve the Lord,
Like St. Paul must wear the sword!

Onward, brothers, onward go!
Face to face to find the foe!
Words are weak, and wishing fails,
But the well-aimed blow prevails!

TIRED MOTHERS

If there is any class of persons who need tenderness and encouragement it is the tired mothers; weary limbs, sad hearts and puzzled brains all attest to the fact. There ought to be special privileges granted to tired mothers as much as to invalids. Those who have passed through this trying ordeal know how to sympathize, know how to excuse many of the shortcomings of those who are passing through the narrow gateways, the thorny paths, the rough highways, where temptation holds high revelry, and the angel of peace sits in shadow.

Tired mothers! always anxious, scheming, planning and economizing how they can manage every detail of domestic life with least expense, for children are such a drain upon the resources of one's time, heart and pocket. Mothers doing double work, triple work themselves, to save for this, or that, until the nerves are strained and shattered to a degree unbearable to themselves, and particularly offensive to others. Let me entreat you, fathers and husbands, deal gently with the wife and mother; cheer and brighten her life by all the means in your power, for she needs your help in many ways, to buoy her up and sustain her, that she may be nerved with fresh vigor to impart to the little ones who are a constant drain upon her life and energies.—Woman's Exponent.

THERE'S THE LORD'S ANSWER

A devoted minister in Scotland recently related the following incident as an illustration of the way our Father answers prayer: "Many years ago, when in my country charge, I returned one afternoon from a funeral, fatigued with the day's work. After a long ride, I had accompanied the mourners to the churchyard. As I neared my stable door, I felt a strange prompting to visit a poor widow who, with her invalid daughter, lived in a lonely cottage in an outlying part of the parish. My natural reluctance to make another visit was overcome by a feeling which I could not resist, and I turned my horse's head towards the cottage. I was thinking only of the poor widow's spiritual needs; but when I reached her little house I was struck with its look of unwonted barrenness and poverty.

"After putting a little money into her hand, I began to inquire into her circumstances, and found that their supplies had been utterly exhausted since the night before. I asked them what they had done. 'I just spread it out before the Lord!' 'Did you tell your case to any friend?' Oh no, sir; nasbody kens but Himsel' and me! I kent He wadna forget, but I didna ken hoo He wad help me till I saw you come riding ower the brae, and then I said, "There's the Lord's answer!"' Many a time has the recollection of this incident encouraged me to trust in the loving care of my heavenly Father."

FARADAY'S LOST CUP.

Mr. Pentecost, the evangelist, replying to the charge of folly made against those who believe that God will raise the dead, gave this beautiful illustration: "There is a story told of a workman of the great chemist Faraday. One day he knocked into a jar of acid a little silver cup. It disappeared, was eaten up by the acid, and couldn't be found. The question came up as to whether it could ever be found. One said he could find it, another said it was held in solution and there was no possibility of finding it. The great chemist came in and put some chemical into the jar, and in a moment every particle of the silver was percipitated to the bottom. He lifted it out a shapeless mass, sent it to the silver smith, and the cup was restored. If Faraday could percipitate the silver and recover his cup, I believe God can restore my sleeping and scattered dust."

THAT'S ENOUGH FOR ME.

"What do you do without a mother to tell all your troubles to? asked a child who had a mother, of one who had none. "Mother told me to whom to go before she died," answered the little orphan. "I go to the Lord Jesus; he was my mother's friend, and he is mine." Jesus Christ is in the sky. He is away off, and he has a great many things to attend to in heaven. It's not likely he can stop to mind you!" "I don't know anything about that," replied the orphan. "All I know is, he says he will, and that's enough for me." What a beautiful answer that was! And what was enough for this child is enough for us all.

Great God, how solemn is the thought,
That I am known by thee;
O may it always cheer my heart
That "Thou, God, seest me."

THE BIBLE.

The writing of a few obscure and despised Jews in a little corner of the earth is an orb before which the lights of classic Greece and Rome and modern civilization pale and disappear. It is the household Book of the Christian world. It is the life and the inspiration of the best literature of the ages. Architecture, and poetry, and music, sculpture and painting, and eloquence, have delighted to bring their honor and glory to it. In its devotion and service human genius has had its grandest developments; human freedom has discovered its secret and guarantee, woman her elevation, man his Master, and both their friend; human heroism has achieved its noblest triumphs; human morality has found its strength and vigor; human philanthropy has exhibited its largest self-sacrifices; human love has risen to its loftiest heights. As was said of Christ, "Never man spake like this man," so it may be said of the Bible, never was book written like this Book. It is the Book of books. It is the God of books. It is the Book of God.—Dr. T. H. Skinner.

DON'T SHIRK.

The habit of shirking is a great evil in our land. Sad and bitter are the experiences of multitudes who have lost positions of emolument and trust by shirking duties and responsibilities devolving upon them. They saw their mistake after it was too late. It is a bad sign to see a young man contracting the habit of shirking. You may set it down at once that sooner or later he will be a drone in the great hive of human industry, living without any purpose in life and scorned by all who have willing hands, and follow up whatever they can find to do. Young men, if you want to gain the confidence and esteem of your employer, never shirk from a duty. If over-tasked lay in your complaints, and you will always get a hearing. If you begin like a shirk, you may set it down as a fixed fact that the habit will follow you through life, and instead of a "success you will be an utter failure."—Selected.

THE MONEY VALUE OF A MAN.

The number of the population has often been reckoned, not its value as a part of the actual wealth of the nation. A moment's consideration will show what an important part is played in the structure of the national wealth by the natural and acquired powers of body and mind. They are essentially articles of wealth, and have a distinct economic value. For instance, all wages may be considered to be paid for powers, either innate or acquired, in the human being. The lowest in the point of value, because the most plentiful, is, of course, physical power, or mere muscular effort, with spade, shovel, or hoe—the kind of labor least elevated above that of the horse or ox. The next is mental power, in other words those faculties of the mind which enable the possessor to manage complicated affairs, to exhibit discretion and judgment, to acquire knowledge and apply it to the needs or culture of society, whether as lawyer, physician, judge, author or artist. Such powers are not only more than mere brute force, but require for their full development a special education and training; and, in consequence, demand and obtain more ample remuneration. The last is moral power, or character, without which, indeed, both physical and mental power lose much of their value. Without moral power, or character, there can be no guarantee that the duties which mind and body are fitted to discharge will be punctually and satisfactorily performed. In order that their labor may command its highest price, the ploughman in the field, the barrister in court, the physician in the sick-room, the judge on the bench, must alike inspire their employer, client, patient or suiter, with the idea that they possess not merely the physical and intellectual qualifications requisite for their respective tasks, but that the exercise of those qualifications will be invariably associated with a due sense of honor; in other words, that they may be trusted. And such a combination of moral with physical and intellectual qualities distinctly adds, be it remembered, to the economic value of the laborer.—Leisure Hours.

ANNIE GALE.

In a sweet spot in one of the Western States lives little Annie Gale. Not long ago she was led to embrace Christ as her Saviour. The news of her conversion soon spread through the place. One day a friend called on her father and said, "It's all nonsense for your Annie to think she has been converted. She was just like a little angel always; she was good enough before. If Dan Hunter, now, could be turned around and made a Christian of, I'd believe in it." Annie heard the conversation, and her heart beat with pity for poor Dan. She knew him to be one of the worst and vilest of characters. Impelled with love for his soul, she went to his wretched dwelling and began to talk to him in tender tones about Jesus, and God's love to the chief of sinners. After referring to her own conversion, she asked him if he was not a sinner, and if he did not need the same Saviour whom she had found? Poor old Dan's heart was touched; he wept, he fell upon his face, and cried, "Lord, ha' mercy on the worst of sinners!" God heard that earnest, penitent cry, and Annie left the old man praising the mercy which could save a wretch like him. It was Dan's business now to tell to all the story of God's love. He would say, "It's the same Gospel, the very same Gospel, that so blessed little Annie Gale. You wouldn't think it could be, such a dreadful sinner as I've been; but the same good Lord who takes little children in His arms and blesses 'em, saves the chief of sinners too. It's true! Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." (John 6: 37.)

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the Weekly Review, London:

The Hon. and Rev. Algernon Stanley, M.A. (Cantab), sometime of Cuddesdon College, and vicar of the Church of the Holy Cross, St. Pancras, has resigned his benefice and has been received into the Church of Rome.

The Old Catholics have lost a priest. M. Geoffroi, who was cure of Courtemaiche, in Switzerland, has re-entered the Roman Catholic Church; and a special pastoral issued by Bishop Lachat expresses the hope that other heretical priests of the Bernese Jura will be persuaded to follow Geoffroi's example.

DECREASE VALUE OF ESTABLISHED CHURCH PROPERTY IN BRECHIN.—On Tuesday a pew in the west part of the Cathedral, or old church, which belonged to the representatives of a pre-Disruption elder, Mr. John Duke, for which he paid £40 forty years ago, brought on this occasion only £25, having been offered at the upset price of £20.

The Wesleyan Thanksgiving Fund is progressing beyond general expectation. Towards a total of £204,000 contemplated, £52,000 has already been promised, and there are good grounds for hoping that the result will far exceed the amount originally fixed upon. The metropolitan districts are expected to subscribe £50,000. A cheque for £3,000 has just been received by the committee from an anonymous donor styling himself "A Well-wisher."

One of the most remarkable facts in German university life is, says the Examiner, the extraordinary decrease for years past in the number of the students of theology. The decrease is so great that in several States there has been an insufficiency of candidates for the pulpit. Until now Schleswig-Holstein was an extensive nursery-ground of the theologians, but there also a falling off by nearly 40 per cent. has recently occurred. At Kiel there are at present 24, at other German universities 28, students of theology of Schleswig-Holstein by origin—altogether 52. Six years ago there were 90 of them, whilst 50 years ago there had been no less than 161 students of theology at Kiel alone, almost all of them being Schleswig-Holsteiners.

The United Presbyterian says: Professor Charteris, at a recent meeting of the Established Church Presbytery of Edinburg, averred that amongst the many other evils which Dissent perpetrated, "it secularised religion." We really felt not a little astonishment when we read this statement, and asked—"What next?" For we had always been of opinion that one of the chief uses and purposes of Dissent was to separate religion from certain secular bonds and influences which had operated on it injuriously.

From the Christian Signal, (London.)

ARMAGH, IRELAND.—For the Moderatorship of the next General Assembly, the Presbytery of Limavady has nominated the Rev. Jackson Smyth, of Armagh.

NEW DEER, ABERDEENSHIRE.—A party from the parish church, numbering about three hundred persons, has seceded, and formed themselves into an Independent Church. The neighboring Congregational minister, the Rev. W. Matheson, Stnartfield, attended a meeting of the congregation last week, and after hearing from him a statement of Congregational principles, most of those present formed themselves into a church and and elected office-bearers. The church is not in connection with the Congregational Union, it being necessary that the Congregational churches in the district should recognise it as in fellowship with them, before they can be in connection with the Union. The secession has been caused by the Presbytery and Assembly refusing to sanction the appointment of a minister chosen by the people.

Lord Beaconsfield has requited the warlike bishops who voted for the Afghan war by promoting a canon over their heads. What indignation there will be on the episcopal bench that the see of Durham has escaped them all! One of the main prizes of the Church given to a man, not on account of his position, nor as a reward for his political fidelity, but in recognition of his ability and worth! But if the bishops are annoyed, everybody else seems pleased. Canon Lightfoot certainly deserved the honor as well as any man who could have been chosen.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to nominate the Rev. Joseph Barber Lightfoot, D.D., Canon of St. Paul's, and Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, to fill the See of Durham, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Baring. Dr. Lightfoot was born at Liverpool in 1828, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a scholarship in 1848, and graduated B.A. in 1851 as Senior Classic and Chancellor's Medallist. In 1853 he was Norrisian University Prizeman, and he proceeded M.A. in the next year, having been previously (in 1852) elected to a Fellowship in his college. In 1854 he was ordained deacon by the late Bishop of Manchester, by whom he was also admitted into priest's orders in 1855. Dr. Dr. Lightfoot has been successively appointed tuter of Trinity College (1857); honorary chaplain to her Majesty; Hulsean Professor of Divinity at the University of Cambridge (1861); Examining Chaplain to Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury (1868); Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral (February, 1871); and one of the Deputy Clerks of the Closet to her Majesty (February, 1875). He has published editions of St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians and Philippians, and of the Epistles of St. Clement of Rome, 1869; "On a Fresh Revision of the English New Testament," 1871; sermons; and articles in periodicals.

MISCELLANY.

The Athens archæological Society is in treaty for buying up the houses on the site of the Temple of Delphi, and transferring the village to a short distance off. Excavations will then be undertaken.

The initial velocity of a shot, or, in other words, the rapidity with which a projectile flies at the outset of its career, is now measured at Woolwich by an electrical instrument, the invention of Major Le Boulenge, a Belgian officer.

The editor of a New Hampshire paper is so extravagant as to use for everyday work the desk and bookcase of Daniel Webster. At least Daniel is said to have used them, which amounts to the same thing for all practical purposes of advertisement and so on.

The Chinese government is maintaining in the City of Hartford, at an annual expense of $100,000, a school where more than a hundred Chinese boys are going through an educational course that is to last fifteen years. This school was established through the influence of Yung Wing, who had the good fortune to be brought to this country to get an education. He was twenty years in bringing about the plan he formed when only seventeen years of age. He is now a mandarin of high degree, and the school he has founded will, in a few years, send back across the Pacific a hundred young men who, in China, will be statatesman and philosophers.

Dr. Joseph A. Seiss has published a book in which he endeavors to make out that the Great Pyramid is an "inspired creation," intended to teach the truths of Christianity, and that it is the mounment spoken of in Isa. xix: 19, 20.

The sixth Irish stew dinner was given on Wednesday by the London Cottage Mission, to several hundred poor children, in their Condor Street Hall, Limehouse, E. The hall was well filled three times with the little ones. They ate ravenously, and fully enjoyed the substantial meal which had been provided for them. The dinners lasted three hours, and no hungry child was turned away.

The parables of our Lord have been rendered into Pushto verse by an Afghan poet; and whilst other books will not sell through the bigotry of the people, this poem has had a very fair circulation. The Afghans speak Pushto and Persian. In Pushto the New Testament is printed, and the Old Testament is in course of translation, and in Persian they have the whole Bible, so that the Afghans are not without the Word of God.

Forty years ago there were only three native Christians in China connected with the Protestant missions; to-day there are at least 14,000; and the number is rapidly increasing. The influence of Christianity is steadily extending, and open doors are waiting the laborers. The future progress of the truth must, however, largely depend upon the native Church and the development of a native ministry, but this ministry must be trained for the work and be thoroughly consecrated to it. For this purpose the training school and the missionary are needed.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 1879.

A STANDARD PRESBYTERIAN REVIEW.

Is there any representative Presbyterian Review in America? This question is discussed by our religious contemporaries. It is agreed by all that the Princeton Review no longer deserves to bear its time honored name. It once represented clear cut Presbyterianism. It was fully orthodox. It never discounted the authority of the Bible; never sneered at or sought to undermine the foundations of sound morality. But now while unquestionably able, and reaching out to a wider range of philosophical and scientific discussion, commanding and deserving patronage, it is not as of old a representative of solid, conservative, Biblical Presbyterian doctrine. It is no longer emphatically a Presbyterian Review. Dr. Atwater's withdrawal is a decided testimony against its latitudinarianism; and Dr. Draper's usual inuendoes against Protestantism, in his article in the January number, would not have appeared under the old régime.

Some may be disposed to look to the Catholic Presbyterian as the standard theological magazine for our church. But it can never occupy that position. It will doubtless be sound in the faith, and be of inestimable value and interest to the church throughout the world. But its whole design, the characters of the articles—suitable to its mission of promoting union, spreading general church intelligence, and strengthening church love,—and the varied nationality of its contributors, unquestionably militates against its being the organ for theological, philosophical and critical discussions, that will satisfy the wants of the American Presbyterian Church.

We have a well established Review, with a noble history, and now giving able and sound doctrinal disquisitions, and criticisms to the church, and that can meet adequately the demands of the American Church. This is the Southern Presbyterian Review, published in Columbia, S. C. It is "an open journal, favoring free discussion within limits. More than ever it is desired to make it a representative of our whole Church, as its name imports, and a faithful exposition of the Calvinistic theology and the Presbyterian Polity." This is its distinct announcement, and no opinions will be allowed to be expressed therein, subversive of any doctrine of the Gospel. If the whole Presbyterian Church will now throw its strength, talent and support into this Review, we will then have one worthy of American Presbyterian scholarship, and that will be indeed an honor, a delight, and an impregnable defence for our American Presbyterianism. Let our contemporaries, and clergymen and elders and Christian laymen, who love sound and vigorous doctrinal literature, and who have not been reading this Review recently, just examine the last two numbers, and we think they will conclude that they have not far to seek for an able, fearless, and well established vehicle and representative of American Presbyterian scholarship, with past historic fame, and wide and hopeful outlook for the future.

DABNEY'S WORKS.

Rev. Dr. R. L. Dabney has well-earned the gratitude of the South and the Southern Presbyterian church for his contributions to their literature. His works "Defence of Virginia and the South," "Life of Stonewall Jackson," "Sensualistitic Philosophy of the Nineteenth Century Considered," and "Dabney's Theology; being Syllabus, References and Discussions on Systematic and Polenic Theology."

The last work named, to which we would call special attention is in its second edition. It contains 903 pages royal 8vo., published by the St. Louis Publishing Co., and sold at $5 00 per copy. To Ministers and Theological Students one-fifth off. Commendations of it are frequent as a luminous exposition of the faith, and on every side it is approved for the clearness, conciseness and vigor of its statements. The author possesses indeed all the characteristics of a great and useful theological writer. A limitless fund of theological knowledge, with a grasp, a power and a scope of intellect which reduces any subject, however intricate, in his hands to a very trifle. This work is called the very best of Dr. Dabney's productions, and is pronounced by highest authorities superior to any other work on Theology now before the public. It is specially commended to students of Theology.

Either of the foregoing books may be obtained by mail, of the author, at Hampden Sidney Post Office, Prince Edward, Va. Postage on Theology, 32 cents; on Life of Jackson, 25 cents; on Sens. Phil., 15 cents; on Def. of Va., 9 cents. One-third discount to "the Trade" for cash.

UTTERLY WRONG.

A missionary of the American Sunday School Union reports that a Presbyterian church of thirty-six members has recently been organized in due form at Shoe Heel, in Robeson county, where, four years ago he organized the first Sunday-school known in that district. The place was then called Scuffletown. A young man who then assisted the missionary to clean up the old wagon shed in which the meeting was held, and to arrange the seats, and who furnished the tallow candle by whose dim light the exercises were conducted, is an officer in the new church; and others who came to that meeting "walking in darkness," have since been led into the "great light" of the glorious gospel.

The impression made upon the mind of the ordinary reader by the above, which we clip from the Christian Intelligencer would be entirely erroneous. True it is that very few who read the article will know the locality, or the parties, individual or general, who are referred to, and thus, but only in this particular, injustice will be avoided; yet the statements made will contribute in no small degree to intensify the impression on the Northern mind, that we are living in a land of heathenish darkness. Let us make some counter statements which may serve to correct.

Shoe Heel has never been called Scuffletown. The latter place is some ten or fifteen miles distant from Shoe Heel, and is inhabited by mulattoes. The general character of the population in times past at least, is indicated by the name bestowed upon the district over half a century since. The district acquired fame as whilom the residence of the leader of the Lowry gang. On the contrary the Shoe Heel district is inhabited and has been from time immemorial by Scotch Presbyterians and their descendants. No people anywhere have enjoyed better opportunities of religious and secular education than those we are now considering, and their reputation as a community will compare with any North or South. We shall give particulars as to their advantages as we proceed. There is no congeniality of tastes or habits, of course, between the two places named; they are in all things except distance as far apart as the poles. Robeson county for a century or more has been distinguished for its schools, and Floral College three and a half miles distant, only very recently discontinued, enjoyed for at least a quarter century extensive patronage, in part because of its exceptionally fine moral advantages.

At Floral College is Centre Presbyterian church, which was organized long before the memory of the editor of this paper; always flourishing, numbering nearly 200 members and employing a pastor his whole time, until the death of the recent incumbent. Centre church has for a great number of years been noted for having one of the most prosperous and well-conducted Sabbath schools in the State; one at least of the ruling elders of Centre church has for a score of years perhaps, resided at Shoe Heel. He was at the time the Union School was organized, we believe, Superintendent of the Centre Sabbath School, and the children of Presbyterian families in and around Shoe Heel, of sufficient size, attended the Sabbath school of Central church (only three and a half miles distant) with their parents, who were members of that church. The following Presbyterian churches are near Shoe Heel: Lebanon, four miles distant, Laurinburgh six miles, Smyrna seven miles, Laurel Hill ten miles.

We have said enough we think to redeem Shoe Heel from any impression of heathenism. Now as to the details. The wagon shed was a building, constructed for a buggy repository, and selected no doubt because the only place in the small village which could be made suitable for the purpose designed. The Union school gathered the children too small to attend Centre Sabbath school, or those whose parents for denominational reasons may have preferred sending them to a union school. The young man who assisted in preparing the "wagon shed" was at the time, or certainly had been, an elder in a church elsewhere. He had removed to Shoe Heel and was then a prominent worker in Centre church and Sabbath school.

For several years past, until his demise, Rev. A. Baker pastor of Centre church preached statedly on Sabbath afternoons at Shoe Heel—and to results from the preaching here, and the desire of the citizens to promote their convenience, by colonizing from Centre and other churches, is no doubt to be assigned the existence of Shoe Heel Presbyterian church.

We have taken pains as to these facts—some of them are personally known to the writer, and others he has obtained from undoubted authority.

The Sunday School Union has done and is doing great good we believe—but such loose statements should be avoided.

PUBLICATION COLLECTION.

In addition to what we have heretofore said about this interest of our Church we have a few words more. It should be remembered that the whole management of this business has been changed. The committee now publishes entirely by contract and receives from the publishers (Messrs. Whitted & Shepperson of Richmond, Va., and the Presbyterian Publishing Company of St. Louis, Mo.) a royalty, which is sufficient to meet a considerable part of our committee's expenses, and if the Church will give its full patronage to our papers and books the amount received will pay all the committee's expenses. These expenses have been reduced to about $3,350.

Now, in the Secretary's report to the last General Assembly the excess of liabilities over the assets, regarded then as good, was $7,300 nearly. But a large per centage of the open accounts will be lost, and quite a large amount of the sum—nearly $5,000—reported as "notes and subscriptions in hands of agent," promised to aid the publication cause, will not be paid. So we suppose the actual debt of our Publishing Committee cannot be less than $10,000, and may be considerably more. Besides this we owe $31,000 on the Publication House; but the house is considered good for this balance, and is now in the market by order of the Assembly.

What we need to do, and are appealed to at this time to do, is to wipe out our pressing debt of $10,000 or $15,000. It is a debt of honor on our Church. Be it that it is a sad misfortune to us, yet when we think of our ability as a Church it is a small debt, and easily paid, if we rouse to the duty. It is better to get rid of a disagreeable thing at once.

Can it be done? Yes, and easily, too. Our Church in North Carolina can pay more than half of it, and without any serious sacrifice. There are comparatively few churches in our Synod that could not give an average of fifty cents to the communicant, which would yield $8,500. But last year only 118 churches reported contributions to this cause, and they gave only SIX CENTS to the communicant, while 99 churches failed to give anything. Thus our whole Synod averaged only four cents per capita. This ought not to be so. No poverty that ever has afflicted us can justify it or its recurrence. God will not bless our Church, thus unfaithful to Him and His cause. Only $544 from North Carolina in a year to the publication work! Let us at least, this year, average twenty-five if not fifty cents a member. And if our Church at large will do likewise we will launch out on a clear sea, under favorable auspices, for our Master's work. Our contributions will thereafter be spent directly in the circulation of a sound Christian literature. Our benevolent, Sabbath school and colportage work, calling so loudly for activity, may be gloriously developed. The business of the committee is now conducted according to the mind of the Church, and all should rally to put it on a sound and strong basis for the future. We do hope that our churches will awake and address themselves to this emergency, and do themselves honor, and secure supreme satisfaction, by a liberal and sufficient contribution.

We recall the subject of our Sabbath school papers to emphasize.

Before Presbyterians of North Carolina pass by those aids provided for their special use by their own Church, let them at least give them a fair trial. It will cost them nothing save the postage necessary to send an application. It will very materially contribute to the enlargement of the benevolent operations of the Publication Committee. Remember that if the entire strength of our patronage is brought to sustain their Sabbath school publications, the royalty paid by the publishers would pay all necessary expenses of the committee, and leave a wide margin for the gratuitous distribution of religious literature. Thus, while we are reaping the benefit of most excellent aids in Sabbath school and family instruction we are also helping the committee to give to him that needeth.

SHADES OF PIUS!

The present Pope is pursuing a policy directly opposite that of Pius IX. He pays no bishops who have not received authority from their civil governments to act as bishops. He is, or some persons are for him, encouraging the Catholics of Switzerland and Italy to resume their political rights and exercise the elective franchise. He has declined according to the request of Belgian Romish bishops to interfere in Belgian affairs which do not affect matters of faith or spiritual interest. Lastly, he is ont of favor with the Jesuits who ruled his predecessor. What about infallibility?

CHURCH DEBT CANCELLED.

It is with pleasure unalloyed, we announce that the debt of $14,552 77—principal and interest—of the First Presbyterian Church of this city has been paid, and the church and its property is now free of incumbrance.

In such times as these it required an earnest and a general spirit of sacrifice to accomplish this result, and herein is one great cause of rejoicing, that the congregation possessed that spirit in a measure so large. But even where there is a general willingness to co-operate in such enterprises, there needs some individual possessing tact to plan and to push, and the inflexible tenacity of purpose which will never stop short of success. Every one will freely accord to Mr. Geo. W. Williams, chairman of the Board of Deacons, the credit of having been the one who possessed and employed the essential qualifications referred to.

The creditor, it should be noted, himself contributed liberally to the result.

No excitement, but calm, clear, deliberate, cold-blooded determination that it should be done, was what did the work. And now we commend the example to other churches in like position. Come out and keep out.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

The State Board of Health would deserve well of their fellow citizens, if they had done no more than call attention to the effect of drinking water upon the sanitary condition of our people. The Board very shortly after its organization procured statistics as to the condition and character of the wells and latrines of the city of Wilmington and their relations to each other.

In prosecution of these inquiries the special case of a family in Wilmington, was noted. The whole subject is interesting, but we cannot go into details here. The health of the family referred to was not generally good, and after several changes in the premises upon which they resided, without result in improved health, the water from a well on the lot was suspected and a specimen of it, tightly corked, was sent to Dr. A. R. Ledoux for analyzation. The following is his reply:

Department of Agriculture, North Carolina, Agricultural Experiment and Fertilizer Control Station, at the State University.

* * * * * * *

"The well is without doubt most dangerously poisonous. Not only is the water filled with bacteria, but there are other living organism feeding upon the animal matter present, whose movements can be seen by the naked eye.

"There are no unusual inorganic constituents present, but the organic matter renders it very unhealthy.

"Comparative tests give the following result:

"If we represent pure water by 1000, the organic impurities in sample bring down its quality to about 100.

Yours sincerely,
A. R. LEDOUX."

From this it is evident that an exhaustive prosecution of these inquiries, not only for Wilmington but the entire State, is in the highest degree desirable.

The North Carolina Medical Journal for February contains a full account of the survey of the premises made after this unfavorable analysis, and this reasonable conclusion is adduced:

From this lesson about our drinking water, we may work out the the problems of our water supply. Indeed, we had better say we must work it out, or be prepared for disastrous outbreaks of diphtheria, and typhoidal disease.

And the Journal further adds this information, which should be gratifying, and makes an appeal which should be heeded:

It is this and like matters that our State Board of Health has undertaken to elucidate. It is the design of this Board to investigate every town in the State as soon as we have means at our command; it is our hope that with wide-spread information we may be the means of improving the sanitary condition of our towns. Let the cities and towns of the State come to the help of our Board. If the State seals up its treasury against the call for organized help, let our towns act independently and save themselves at least.

In this connection we are authorized to say that an article will appear in the next Medical Journal from the pen of Professor A. R. Ledoux, of Chapel Hill, pointing out the dangers of contaminated water and the methods of detecting its impurities.

Copies will be sent gratis to any address on application to Dr. Thomas F. Wood, Secretary of the Board of Health. P. O. Box 535, Wilmington.

It is the policy of the Roman Catholic Church now, with most unblushing effrontery, to deny everything in history that tells against it. Here is what the Interior says:

Quite a sharp controversy is now being conducted in the daily press between Father Damon, a Catholic priest, and Rev. Mr. Snydet, the Unitarian minister of St. Louis. The points so far in controversy involve the reliability of Protestant history of the Reformation, and the relation of the Catholic Church to modern civilization. We have all been surprised heretofore at the assumption of Catholicism with reference to historical facts, but never before were we so astonished as when Father Damon made the claim, a week or so ago, that the Catholic Church never persecuted heretics, never opposed free schools, never denied the Bible to the people, and always was the pioneer in science and civilization. After that, there is no use for history.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States

Will meet in the Second Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky., on the third Thursday (15th day) of May, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M. The opening sermon is to be preached by the Rev. T. E. Peck, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly.

The undersigned Committee on Commissions, will be in attendance at the Lecture Room of said church, on Wednesday, the 14th of May at 8 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of enrolling the names of Commissioners.

JOSEPH R. WILSON, Stated Clerk.
WM. BROWN, Permanent Clerk.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will meet at St. Andrew's church, Moore county, N. C., Thursday, April 24th, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The usual blanks have been forwarded to the churches; those should be accurately filled and handed in when Presbytery meets in April.

J. P. MCPHERSON,
Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Harmony stands adjourned to meet at Darlington C. H. April 9th, 1879, at 7½ o'clock P. M.

W. A. GREGG, Stated Clerk.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE NEXT ASSEMBLY.

I desire at this time to inform the Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published upon a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the report as published of the last Assembly—the only one of which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer—and mortified by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee having charge of the business, their hearty assent to publish the report upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from restrictions imposed by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method of publication which has unavoidably prevented me from making the last report as complete as I desired, I hope, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the church with what it has never yet enjoyed, prompt information of the proceedings and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Rev. Jos. Y. Allison, elected stated supply for churches of Shoe Heel and Centre, is a young minister who was licensed about two years since by Concord Presbytery. We trust he will accept the invitation tendered, and return to the Old North State. He will be heartily welcomed.

We desire to move along harmoniously with our contemporaries of other denominations in our own State, and in general we do. From the Biblical Recorder we become widely separated at times, for just as everything seems most serene our friend takes to water, whither for lack of instincts sufficiently aquatic we cannot follow. Hence we cannot be said at all times to get along together swimmingly. But when the Recorder says that "Baptists have always been a peculiar people, and their religion * * * has ever been a strange religion," we feel that we are very near agreeing.

So much in pleasantry: We would not have it regarded otherwise. And now we have to say that we have noted with pleasure our contemporary's position with regard to the preaching of women, and Dr. Pritchard's views on liquor prohibition. On the latter subject we prepared an article with some startling statistics, but it was crowded out. We believe our religious papers should advocate this measure, yet it is so inwrought with politics that the how and when to deal with it to best effect, is a question requiring consummate wisdom and tact.

William Third, King of England, is quoted by Macaulay as saying, with reference to one who was throwing every possible obstacle in the way of his government: "He has set his heart on being a martyr and I have set mine on disappointing." On this principle alone can we account for the leniency of Rev. David Macrae's Presbytery in dealing with him. The reverend gentleman has been addressing large audiences at Brechin in Scotland, and ridiculing and denouncing the Westminster Confession of Faith. If we had the ear of his Presbytery we would suggest that the course of James Second as indicated by the words, "He has made up his mind to be a martyr, and it is fit he should be one," is far superior to the one at present followed.

The question which is at present receiving from Christians and philanthropists the greatest attention is that of "Tenement-house Reform." On Sabbath of last week several ministers of New York city addressed their congregations on the subject, and in the evening a crowded meeting was held in the church of Dr. Tucker, in Madison square, which was addressed by numerous speakers. Here are some of the facts elicited. We state them in the most concise form: In some parts of New York city there is a population of 800 persons to an acre; in tenements 25 by 100 feet there are 75 to 130 persons; half the children of New York city, say 60,000, live in tenement houses; 28,000 children are born in these houses every year; 11,000 children die in them per annum; 20,000 children are committed by the magistrates yearly from them; at least 50,000 persons, old and young, are sent to prison from them; nearly 15,000 go to hospitals and other institutions from them. One half the population of New York city, it is said, lives in these abodes. As many as nine persons frequently live in one room. As an unavoidable consequence of this state of affairs the tenement houses reek with diseases of the most loathsome kinds and vice in its most horrible forms. The attempt to reach the masses by establishing missions in the poorest quarters, is frustrated by the fact that the parties to be benefitted are surrounded by the influences and circumstances above stated.

It is a significant fact, as has been noted by others, that the attempt at reform led to a call, first of all, upon the pulpit for its aid. The leaders of advanced thought—where were they? Where are they ever, when practical good is to be accomplished?

It is something to see the need of reform and to accomplish it, but it is, as stated by the New York Sun, an economic question which requires sound practical sense for its solution. Let us hope that the earnest Christian men who have the matter in charge will, by God's blessing, work a mighty change for the better in this matter.

To prevent any misapprehension, or to correct any that may exist, we desire to say that we do not regard persons who are in arrears to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN as guilty of criminal wrong. We believe that in many cases—in fact we know that in many cases—persons hold on to the paper because they hate to part with it, and because they hope to, and conscientiously intend to, pay for it. To all such we say hold on. We do not regard you as defrauding us. Many, very many, neglect through oversight or forgetfulness, and we confess we would be glad if they wouldn't forgot. It would make matters so much easier for us and them if they would remember. Occasionally by inadvertence a reminder, or a pretty sharp call gets to persons who have plainly stated their circumstances to us, and who have our full consent to the delay. In all such cases we beg that the parties will overlook. We cannot note each case so exactly as to prevent this.

What is to become of Egypt? It is said that there is an annual deficit of her revenue of ten millions of dollars. Taxes have been increased until now they amount to about ten dollars a head on every laboring man in the empire. The army now reduced to ten thousand men is not paid, and riots have occurred. Hopelessly bankrupt as the government is, it is not impossible as suggested by an exchange that Egypt will in a short time be sold to the highest bidder; in which event not improbably, Great Britain as the richest country in Europe, and the most interested may buy her out, and then there will be hope for a restoration of prosperity.

Give us the pence—that are due us—and we care not who gets the pounds.

The question of the propriety of opening free libraries on Sunday is one which the Bishop of Manchester has been considering. His observations do not seem to be very favorable. He confesses to disappointment at finding that where the experiment has been made, the people attending read newspapers, which they might read any other day; moreover the public-house-going class, whom it is specially aimed to benefit, do not attend.

The Town Council of Salford, Eng., were individually appealed to by a committee of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association to prevent the opening of the Salford Public Library or Museum on the Lord's Day. The Council discussed the question, and by a vote of 34 to 15 refused to permit the Library to be opened.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL AIDS OF OUR COMMITTEE.

MR. EDITOR: Editorial notice of this subject has been taken since the meeting of the Synod emphasizing the claims of these publications to the patronage of our people.

Synod took the following action:

Resolved, that in the selection of Sabbath school literature the preference should be given to the publications of our own committee by our ministers, churches, officers of Sabbath schools and heads of families.

Statements were made on the floor of Synod to the effect that the circulation of the Children's Friend, Earnest Worker and Lesson Papers of our committee was far too limited in the bounds of our Synod, considering its size and the growing interest in Sabbath school work, and that there was room for the belief that the publications from other quarters are extensively used. How far these statements are trustworthy, as being reasonably correct, let the following facts and figures show. I have been at some trouble to get at them, but they are reliable, having been obtained by courtesy of the publishers themselves.

First, the report of Bro. Vass, Synodical Agent of Sabbath Schools for 1878 (see appendix to minutes of Synod) gives us approximately at least the number of teachers and scholars in our Sabbath schools throughout the State. And it is probably an underestimate to give the figures in round numbers as follows: Teachers 1200, scholars over 8000—let us say 10,000 in all. In this estimate there is left out, of course, that very large number of families in our church—some of them in town but more numerous in the country—who do not send their children to the Sabbath school (in many instances because there is none) but who do, let us hope for charity's sake, provide them with the means of Bible instruction at home. It is a fair estimate, I think, that there are from three to five thousand households of the Presbyterian faith in our Synod, say four thousand.

Now, in the second place, for the figures showing the extent of circulation of our committee's Sabbath school aids among our Presbyterian population of 4000 families and 10,000 teachers and children in our Sabbath schools:

1. The Children's Friend, one of the very best papers of its kind, for its matter, its finish and its cheapness, has a circulation of 1020 copies.

2. The Earnest Worker, an admirable magazine for teachers and parents, edited by a live man, abreast of the time in intelligent and zealous interest in the Sabbath school cause, and costing only 60 cents a year, or 50 cents for five or more copies to one address, 12 numbers of 28 or 30 pages each. Has only 416 subscriptions in the State of North Carolina.

3. The Lesson Papers, adapted to the use of advanced intermediate and primary classes studying the International Lessons prepared under the oversight of our committee by the best talent in our church, and costing $9 per hundred copies for one year and at proportionate rates for six months, as well as for a less number of copies. These Lesson Papers or Leaflets have a circulation of 1262 copies.

On comparison of these figures it would appear that of our families one only out of every four, and in our Sabbath schools one out of every ten teachers and scholars use some one of the above aids furnished by our committee.

The great bulk of our people appear to ignore them, and if they provide Sunday school literature for themselves at all go elsewhere than to our own committee.

I could give the figures by Presbyteries—just how many copies of each kind are taken within the bounds of each Presbytery—but I will only mention that Orange Presbytery leads in the number of copies taken of the Children's Friend, being 304. Fayetteville Presbytery leads in the number of copies taken of the Earnest Worker, being 135. Concord Presbytery leads in the number of copies taken of Lesson Papers, being 459.

I have no desire to comment on this showing. I think our people have only to know these publications in order to appreciate them. Let them try them. The publishers desire to extend to all the opportunity of testing their work. I quote the following from the special notice not long since published by them:

"Specimens (of any or all the above mentioned S. S. aids) or a month's supply for practical experiment sent free on application to the publishers, Whittet & Shepperson, 1001 Main street, Richmond, Va."

Yours truly, F. H. JOHNSTON,
Agent of Publication.

SHOE HEEL AND CENTRE CHURCHES.

SHOE HEEL, N. C., March 1st, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—Rev. H. G. Hill, of Fayetteville, preached at this place on night of Saturday, 22d ult., and on Sunday night succeeding, and at Centre Sunday morning. After service at Centre, a congregational meeting was held, at which both churches were represented, and it was agreed that during the months of December, January and February, the morning service should be held at Centre and the afternoon service at Shoe Heel, but for the other nine months morning and evening services should be held alternately at the two churches, two services on each Sabbath.

Rev. J. Y. Allison, of Monroe, Louisiana, was chosen by the congregations as stated supply on a salary of $950, $400 by the Shoe Heel Church, and $550 by Centre Church.

Yours truly,
D. S. MORRISON.

TO MINISTERS AND ELDERS IN ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The New Book of Church Order will come up at the next meeting of Presbytery (Eno Church, April 23d,) for a final vote. It is highly important that every one who will be called to vote upon it, should do so intelligently or with a conscientious regard for the interests of our beloved church. The General Assembly ordered a copy of the latest revision (1878) to be sent to the Stated Clerk of each Presbytery. All others desiring a copy, could purchase it at a small cost from the "Presbyterian Publishing Co.," Richmond and St. Louis. Not knowing how far brethren have supplied themselves with copies, I offer to send any person, postage free, a copy of the New Book for fifteen cents, enclosed to me in postage stamps with address, if sent within three weeks from date.

of Presbyterial Committee.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Presbytery and Prelacy. By Rev. John W. Primrose, Manson, N. C. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. This tract embraces the series of articles that recently appeared in our columns. Our Committee and the St. Louis Publishing Company have done well in putting them into this permanent form. The tract is neatly gotten up, and our readers need not be told that its deserves a wide circulation. It speaks out plainly and puts down the the truth strongly. See that every prating prelatist has a copy to stop his senseless boasting. Let every pastor and ruling elder at once get a dozen copies.

Eclectic Magazine. The March number of this magazine presents the usual valuable selections from the leading foreign periodicals. It has a very fine steel engraving of Prof. Edison and his phonograph. The leading articles are as follows; Novel Reading, by Anthony Trollope; Historical Aspect of the United States, by Dean Stanley; Count Fersen; About Lotteries; Trafalgar; Supposed Changes in the Moon; Ancient Egypt; America Redeviva; Ostriches on a Cape Farm; Edison, the Inventor, and other valuable but lighter articles. Editorial department full and valuable. E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, N. Y. Terms $5 per annum.

The Westminster Review. The January number of this magazine contains the following articles: Dr. Johnson, his Biographers and Critics; The Papacy: Its Early Relations with Roman Catholic States; The Russians in Turkey; Afghanistan; Niccolo Machiavelli and his Times; India and our Colonial Empire; and Contemporary Literature. Leonard Scott Publishing Company, 41 Barclay Street, N. Y. Terms $4 per annum.

Wide Awake for March comes up for notice. The children are clamorous for it, and it goes direct into their hands. "Royal Lowrie's Last Year at St. Olave's" is pretty and nice, so Mary says. But this is only one of very many, such as, Why Didn't He Catch a Fox, Johnny Skyte and What Came of His Skating, &c., &c. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. $2 a year.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. The February number of this excellent magazine is on our table. Contents: John Caldigate; Present and Past Conditions of Domestic Service; A Medium of Last Century; Two Ladies; Contemporary Literature, and Mr. Gladstone and the Next Election. Leonard Scott Publishing Co., 41 Barclay street, N. Y.

Edinburgh Review at hand. Contents: The New Golden Age; The True Tale of the Comte; Mental Physiology; Memoirs of Mrs. Jameson; Road to India; Campanella and Modern Italian Thought; Walpole's England in the Nineteenth Century; The Discoveries at Olympia; The Government and the Opposition. Leonard Scott Publishing Co., New York.

The Poor Old Tramp. Music, from W. H. Thompson & Co., East Liverpool, Ohio.

American Agriculturist. The March number of this excellent magazine contains as usual many interesting and instructive articles for the farm, garden and household. Published by Orange, Judd Company, 245 Broadway, N. Y.

Through the kindness of Prof. W. C. Kerr we are in possession of Part III. of the Geological and Natural History Survey of North Carolina. Botany.

We prize the book very highly. It contains an enumeration of forty-eight hundred species of plants, and at the time of publication the largest enumeration of flowering plants in America. The book is an authority with European botanists, and is becoming very rare. The Legislature of North Carolina did itself credit in having this work published.

The London Quarterly Review. January number at hand. Contents: Lessing; Aggressive Nonconformity; The Reflection of English Character in English Art; Prince Bismarck: Our Schools and Schoolmasters; Is Political Economy a Science? Dr. Smile's Works on Self-Help; Russia and the Indian Frontier; and Party Government. Leonard Scott Company, 41 Barclay Street, N. Y. Terms $4 per annum.

The Nursery. This monthly magazine for youngest readers, is excellent both in its selections and illustrations. Its principle pieces for March, are How Old Billy goes Coasting; The Dove; The Cooky-Tree; Chick-a-dee's Song; "Good-night, Papa;" Baby; Our Little Home; and several others equally as good. John L. Shorey, 36 Broomfield Street, Boston. $1 50 per year in advance.

The Gold Room. This, the eighth number, of the "Atlas Series," published by A. S. Barnes & Co., N. Y., contains a well written history of the "New York Gold Room" stock Exchange, and Clearing House. By Kinahan Cornwallis. A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 and 113 Williams Street, N. Y. Price 20 cents.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

The Sabbath school Convention for the State of Texas will be held at Corsicana, April 26th, next.

Eight additions to the church at Lexington, Va., on Feb. 16th, five on profession of faith and three by letter.

A Sabbath school at Turnersville, Coryelle Co., Texas, has seventy-five scholars. It was commenced in January.

On the 16th, ulto., Rev. Thomas Drew was installed pastor for half his time of Roanoke church in Roanoke Presbytery.

Rev. N. Keff. Smith of Bolivar, Tenn., has received a call from Third Presbyterian church of Atlanta. It is supposed he will accept.

The Sunday School Convention of Louisiana held in New Orleans, on Thursday, 20th ult. and days following, was a decided success.

Rev. J. H. Zively has removed from Austin, Texas, to Elgin, in Bastrop county of the same State. P. O. address changed accordingly.

A blind young man is studying in the Theological Seminary at Hampden Sydney, Va., and makes good progress especially in Hebrew.

The Lexington Gazette speaks of the sickness of Rev. Dr. J. L. Kirkpatrick for two weeks. Let us hope he will soon be able to resume his duties at the University.

Seven additions to the church at Duffields, West Va., and prospect encouraging. A prominent politician eighty-one years of age was baptized—Rev. John A. Scott, pastor.

Rev. Dr. Riddle who is now quite infirm, asks for a dissolution of his pastoral relation with the Presbyterian church at Martinsburg, Va., over which he has been pastor many years.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Wingate, President of Wake Forest College, and one of the most eminent Baptist divines of our State, died at his residence on 27th ult., in his 51st year.

Rev. E. A. Penick, brother of the Episcopal Bishop Penick of Africa, had been called by the vestry to the rectorship of Grace Street, Alexandria. This is the church lately vacated by Dr. Sprigg.

There has been excellent feeling in the church at Greenville, Ky. Two additions and it is hoped further fruit will soon appear. Rev. Charles Hill pastor was assisted by Rev. W. D. Morton and Rev. J. C. Tate.

The Christian Observer says: "Rev. Mr. Betts has accepted the call to Providence in Lawrenceburg churches and will shortly remove from Sharpsburg and Giliad, leaving vacant a large and inviting field." We do not find name of Mr. Betts in our minutes.

Rev. W. L. Monroe of Rockport, Ind., has been holding a series of meetings at the Midway church beginning with the Week of Prayer. At another point in the country also there have been several additions.

We have heretofore referred to the First church, Atlanta. The meeting there was of twenty-nine days continuance. Rev. Dr. Plumer, Rev. N. Bachman and Rev. J. W. Bachman assisted the pastor, Rev. J. H. Martin. Thirty-one persons professed and nine were received by letter.

Rev. J. E. Latham, a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary, Va., is at work supplying Big Creek church and conducting Van Rensselaer Academy in Palmyra Presbytery. We hear most favorable reports concerning him in both these departments of labor.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

In the First Presbyterian church, Richmond, Va., Sabbath before last, it was announced that three persons had been admitted to the communion on profession of faith; and in the second church on last Sabbath, that fourteen had been admitted on profession of faith, and seven by certificate.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. T. A. Hoyt of Nashville, Tenn., preached a sermon from the text: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, whereupon the Legislature of Tennessee passed a resolution of censure, but the action was afterwards reconsidered and rescinded. The objection is said to have been that Dr. Hoyt said: "Departure from high rectitude will involve the State in guilt and disgrace, incur the odium of the public opinion of the world, involve the loss of self-respect, and result in a double condemnation that could not be endured. The fountain of corruption in the seat of authority would through a thousand channels, infect the whole population."

A correspondent of the Central Presbyterian writes, from Bay View, Va., Feb. 17th, that they had had protracted services at Belle Haven for the last week; between twenty and thirty concerned on the subject of religion. As to the number of conversions we can't speak definitely yet. The meeting is still in progress. Rev. J. G. Anderson, of McKemie church, renders valuable assistance. We have reason to be greatly encouraged in this mission.

Rev. John W. Davis writes to the Central Presbyterian, January 12th, 1879: "Mrs. Davis and I are well. She studies with a teacher every morning. We are fitting up a room in the lower story of the house, and in a few weeks Mrs Davis will begin to receive visits from Chinese women and try and do them good by telling them of Christ and his salvation. I preach in the afternoons: for several weeks the weather has been very fine—cool and clear—and I have fine audiences. Miss Safford has returned to China from Japan, her health greatly improved. Mr. Dubose and his family are well."

Rev. W. E. Burke, Feb. 24th, writes to the St Louis Presbyterian: "On the 2d day of February I commenced a series of meetings at Augusta Church in Callaway county, and continued twelve days. Rev. F. Mitchell came the second day of the meeting and did all the preaching from that time. Two were added on confession, and one by letter, all grown men. The Church was edified and unified. Warm and tender feelings prevailed. Several awakened and serious souls were left unblessed when the meeting closed. We are very hopeful that they may yet soon be able to rejoice in full assurance of life eternal. We thank God and take courage."

NORTHERN.

Bishop Grace of St Paul, Minn., is making arrangements to build a new Roman Catholic diocesan seminary.

Dr. Reuben Nelson, senior manager of the Methodist Book Concern, died in New York city last week, in his sixty-first year.

Rev. Dr. H. C. Potter's church (Grace Episcopal church) has contributed during the past ten years $1,082,368 for missionary work.

The Rev. John K. Karcher of Wisconsin, who recently left the Protestant Episcopal Church for the Roman, has returned to his former connection.

The Rev. Noah M. Wells of Vienna, Mich., is said to be the oldest Presbyterian minister of the United States. He is in his ninety-seventh year.

The Massachusetts Legislature has been petitioned for a law providing that no church which promotes lotteries shall hold its property exempt from taxation.

The Rev. Egbert Cleve, who has been working in Columbus, O, to build up a Reformed Episcopal Church, has at last gone into the "Mother Church" and united with the Cathedral Society.

There seems to be a very general revival among the country churches of the Northwest. Illinois Baptist churches at Joliet, Sciota, Windsor, Wyoming, Auburn, Bethel, Metteon, Lincoln and Freeport are having profitable revivals.

An endowment of $130,000 is wanted to establish two additional professorships in the Harvard Divinity School, one of Theology and the other of Ecclesiastical History. This school is the only one of the character in the country without a regularly endowed ecclesiastical professorship.

A church has been organized by the Rev. J. B. Fitzpatrick at Cedar Keys, Florida, and is under the temporary charge of Rev. S. S. Moore, a licentiate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has recently determined to enter the Reformed Episcopal work.

It is proposed to raise $25,000 as a special fund to enable the Baptist Publication Society to enlarge its work, to employ Sunday school missionaries, and to supply the infant Sunday school with the Society's books. One gentleman has subscribed $5,000, and others have followed till the total sum subscribed is $16,000.

Rev Dr. Joseph Anderson of Waterbury, Conn., in an anniversary sermon February 9th, said that the Congregational churches in the State during the past fourteen years had increased by eight, the vacant pulpits diminished by nine, the installations decreased by nineteen, and the number of acting pastors increased by thirty four. Of the two hundred and ninety-eight churches in the State, only fourteen have the same pastor they had fourteen years ago.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopædia is the work of John Kitto, D D, F. S A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc. It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the North Carolina Presbyterian one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4.00 for paper and cyclopedia. Publishers price is $5 00

ECLECTICISMS.

THE BEST OR THE WORST.

Watchman:

A man who is most attractive to "the young folks" may be the right man, provided the young folks when drawn to his preaching will hear what is likely to be for their salvation; otherwise, he is the worst possible man for the place. The man who is "liked" by the largest number may be the man to call, provided he is liked for the right reasons.

WORLDLY WISDOM.

Christian Guardian:

A little boy had two cents given him by a friend, one for his missionary box and one for himself. He lost one of them, and concluded it was the missionary cent that was lost. There are a great many children of larger growth who, if they lose some part of their income, also conclude that it is the money which was to be devoted to religion or literature that has been lost.

STAND UP FOR THE TRUTH.

Exchange:

There are but few who have the moral courage to act up to their convictions. Many see the light and rejoice in it. They take a noble stand for the truth, but do not maintain the stand they have taken. If there is a thin place in your garment, it will be found by the searching winds of winter; so if you are wanting in moral integrity, persistent opposition from your friends will drive you from the position you have taken for the truth. A vessel may appear sound which, when the storm arises, cannot bear the strain that is made upon it. Many a one can talk well in meeting who, so far from sealing his testimony with his blood, will not consent to bear in consequence of it the slightest reproach.

WHAT IT IS GOOD FOR.

Presbyterian:

The religious paper is the minute-hand marking the periods of the Church's mean temperature; the ebb and flow of her life. The religious paper is the weekly commentary on the word of God as it appears in doctrine, conviction and providences. This is all lost in the family that takes no church paper, and the result is too apparent. Your children have no church esprit de corps—no traditional love for the Church of their fathers. When they leave home they are like driftwood floating into an eddy that draws, offering no resistance from conviction or spirit, to other forms of church doctrine and worship.

RECEIPT FOR REVIVAL.

Cuyler:

Hence comes a practical hint for all those churches which are thirsting for revival blessings. Are you suffering from a parching drought? Then fill up your souls afresh from the fullness of Christ. As soon as you begin to draw up the living waters from the well there will be an overflow of converting influences among the congregation and the community.

THE RIGHT MAN.

London Congregationalist:

One thing above all others we would say to members of parishes who are looking for a minister: seek for a man who will best meet your own highest individual wants. Do not be asking for a minister who will fill the empty pews in the church, but for one who will fill and satisfy your own souls. In the long run he is the one who will fill the pews.

WOULD YOU SLEEP WELL?

Exchange:

What you give to Christ and his cause is all that you really save. All that you are laying up on earth shall utterly perish. All that you give to Christ is so much treasure laid up in heaven. Lay down this paper and go at once and look after the man of God and supply his wants. You will sleep better to-night and be a happier man to-morrow.

MARRIED.

☞ No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Blue Spring Township, Robeson county, N. C., February 27, 1879, by Rev. Hector McLean, Mr. DANIEL McPHATTER and Miss MARY, daughter of Duncan A. Currie.

In Mecklenburg county, on the 19th ult., by Rev. G. D. Parks, Dr. J. R. IRWIN to Miss MAGGIE HENDERSON.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, We have heard with unfeigned sorrow of the death of our beloved co-presbyter and brother, HENRY A. WALKER, who after a long and wasting illness, quietly fell asleep in Jesus at the home of his sister in Milton, N. C., on the 18th inst., and

WHEREAS, In this affliction we have for the first time been bereaved as a session in the removal by death of one whose judgment we respected and on whose counsel we leaned, therefore be it

Resolved, 1 That we bow in humble submission to the all-wise dealings of our Heavenly Father, who has for His own good purpose seen fit thus to sorely afflict us.

2. That as a session we be reminded to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit serving the Lord, knowing that we are but stewards and at such a time as we think not the Master cometh.

3. That we humbly extend our heartfelt sympathies to the family of the deceased in whose bereavement we are also bereaved, and

4. That a blank page in our minutes be inscribed to our brother's memory, and that these resolutions be read from our pulpit and a copy of them be forwarded to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.

By order of the session of Tarboro Presbyterian church, F. S. ROYSTER, Clerk of session.

Feb. 23d, 1879.

DIED.

☞ Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines are charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

At Company Shops, Alamance county, N. C., on February 8th., MR. J. G. MOORE, in the 49th year of his age.

He had been a communing member of the Presbyterian Church for some years. A good citizen, a generous friend, and a kind and affectionate husband and father has been taken, leaving a wife and three children afflicted by his death.

On the 25th of January, 1879, at her late residence, on upper Black River, Sampson county, MRS. MARGARET ANN MURPHY, aged 55 years.

In the death of Mrs. Murphy her children have lost a kind and affectionate parent, and the church of Black River Chapel a valuable member. Patiently and meekly she awaited her end, having passed several years on the bed of affliction, when her Christian virtues had ample scope to illustrate and enforce the grace of Christ reigning in her heart. Her fortitude under her trials, and submission to the will of her Heavenly Father, were the constant themes of her friends, as they watched and witnessed month after month, her sore affliction in her wasting body and mind. Her memory is cherished by many relatives and friends, whose record they will embalm in their hearts as a fit memorial of her worth and excellenc of character. A FRIEND.

In Mecklenburg county on the 28th of January, MR SAMUEL C. McNEELY, in his 23d year

An only, and model son—an earnest, working christian, the light of his happy piety will linger as a heavenly radiance around his home and church for years to come. His influence in school and college, connected with the stand he took as a student, gave promise of great usefulness. Though so young, but few members of old Sugar Creek have borne so bright a testimony for Jesus and His grace. COM

FOR THE FAMILY.

At The Church Door.

BY AUSTIN GRIFFIN.

The bell now rings for evensong,
Full toned and sweet,
And seems with angel voice to say,
"Come, come, ye sons of men, and pay
Your worship meet."

Here let me leave the world behind
With all its care;
Lay down awhile my weary load,
E'en at the gate of this abode
Of peace and prayer.

Here let me keep my foot aright,
And pure my heart;
Put on humility—for near
Is One who reads my soul most clear
In every part.

Here let me ask of Him who said
"I am the Door,"
That I through Him may entrance find,
And e'er dispose my heart and mind
To love Him more.

Going Home.

A TRUE STORY.

Little Mattie awakened on Thursday morning with a sore throat. Friday the disease had so increased that the doctor was sent for. Saturday, Sunday and Monday she grew worse rather than better. Tuesday the doctors held council together upon the case, but there was nothing to be done; after a day of much suffering and restlessness, at half-past ten that night she died. She was eleven years and six months old.

About an hour before she died, she became more quiet, as she lay with her arms around her mother's neck. Presently rising on one elbow, the other arm remaining as it was, she said:

"I want you to pray, mother."

All immediately knelt and offered the Lord's Prayer. Mattie joined in a clear, distinct voice, although previously she had spoken and had been understood only with great difficulty. After this, was repeated another little prayer in verse, with which she had been familiar:

"Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
Look upon a little child;
Pity her simplicity,
Take her, Lord, to dwell with thee."

"Mattie," said her mother, "you are very sick. Have you thought that you may die?"

"I don't know, mother," she replied quickly, "I am not afraid to die. You know that if I do I shall go to heaven, and heaven is so beautiful. Jesus is there, and it is so nice, so nice there."

"But what shall I do without my little Mattie?"

"Oh, mother, you will come, too. I shall be waiting for you—waiting by the river, and father will be there, and Walter will be there, and we will all be so happy. Emma, sister Emma," continued the dying child, "where are you?"

Emma heard the feeble but earnest call, and was instantly at her side.

"Here I am, Mattie," she said.

"Emma, I want you to come to heaven, too. Give my love to Mrs. Leach, and to all my Sunday School class, and tell all the children how much I love them, and want them to come to heaven to meet me. Good-by, grandpa," she continued, taking his hand, "you will come, won't you? and grandma, too?" and then turning to Mrs. L——, a lady who had come in to spend the night, she added, "you must come, too; and give my love to Hannah and Walter (Mrs. L——'s children), and tell them to love Jesus and come to heaven."

When these words of affectionate remembrance were finished she began to sing, "I love Jesus. I love Jesus."

Then came other messages of love to other friends, and neighbors, and playmates, with similar wishes for their welfare; and after these, some expressions of desire about her burial, for she fully and calmly realized that her end was near.

"Mother," she said, "I dont care where you put me."

"Is there no place," rejoined her mother, "where you would like to be buried?"

"No, mother, for you know it is only my body which will be there; my soul will be in heaven with Jesus."

The grief of the little circle around her bed grew greater and greater. But she patted her mother's cheek fondly and soothingly, saying:

"Don't cry, mother! Don't cry, Emma! I am not going to leave you just yet. I will stay just a little while longer with you."

She then gave some directions concerning the distribution of a few little keep-sakes but as the moments passed, she was evidently failing.

"Mattie," said her mother, "you are tired now. Perhaps you had better rest."

"Oh no, mother," she replied, "I am not tired. I have wanted to tell you of this so long, and I am so glad to get a chance to tell you now. I love to talk about it. It is so nice, so nice there."

"Mattie," said her mother, "it gives me a great deal of comfort to have you talk so, and I cannot grieve as I should if you had not said this. It would be wrong. I know you will be happy."

After resting a few moments, the sick girl spoke again.

"Now, mother," said she, "I would like to be put at the head of the bed—I would like to sleep."

Her mother immediately complied with her request, commencing at the same time to sing, "Shall we gather at the river?" prompted to do so by the little sufferer's remark that she would soon be "waiting at the river."

Mattie joined her mother in singing one verse of this sweet hymn, and then loosing her arms from her mother's neck, around which they had been lovingly resting, turned over upon her pillow, and for a few moments lay very still. Presently she broke the silence by attempting to sing, "Jesus loves me," but her strength was only equal to two lines.

"Mother," she said, "are we almost home?"

"I think so, Mattie," was the answer. "Mother wishes she was as near home as you are."

"There's Jesus!" she exclaimed, in a moment, very joyously.

"Mattie," asked her mother, "do you see Jesus?"

"Yes, I do," was her quick reply.

"How does he look to you?"

"Beautifully! Beautifully!" she exclaimed, adding in an instant, "and there's father and Walter, too!"

"Where's mother?"

"Here is mother, Mattie," the mother answered, raising the child so that she could see her whom her eyes sought for in vain in the group that hovered before her. "Can't you see me, my child?"

"No," was her faint reply. Her earthly sight was failing as the spiritual vision came. And in a moment more, without a struggle happy in the presence of the heavenly ones she recognised and gone to him before—she passed away, to be at rest forever with the Lord.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Congregationalist.

Lord Macaulay's Love for Children.

It is one thing to be fond of children, and another never to get tired of them; and Macaulay, Hannah says, was one of those who never got tired. He often spent the whole morning at her home playing with the children, and then after luncheon carried one of them off for a long walk. But the great treats for him, as well as for them, were the excursions into the city to see the shows. These did not come often enough to suit either him or the children—twice a week is said to have been the average he would have liked—and they used to last till the little ones, to use his own expression, "could not drag one leg after the other." The afternoon's diversions began with a bountiful luncheon in London, to which Macaulay always added some knick-knack for which the children had an especial contempt, for the pleasure of seeing them reject it with scorn. The afternoon's sight were the lions and bears, the panoramas and the wax-works, or even the British Museum. One day he tells their mother in a letter how, all the other exhibitions being exhausted, he took the children to the National Gallery, and how, while Charley and Margaret played the connoisseur, George said, honestly, "Let us go; there is nothing here I care for at all;" and again, "I don't call this seeing sights; I have seen no sight to day." All of which seems to have amused Macaulay greatly. The elaborate process of sending a valentine to his niece Alice is recorded at length in his diary. February 12th he buys a superb sheet of paper and writes the valentine. February 13th he sends it off to his sister Fanny at Brighton to be forwarded. February 14th the whole entry of the day is about the valentine; how Fanny came at three with the children, Alice in perfect raptures, and begging quite pathetically to be told the truth about it. When they were alone together she said—the little witch—she was going to be serious, and down she goes on her knees, lifting up her hands in supplication:—"Dear uncle, do tell the truth to your little girl. Did you send the valentine?" And then he had to own it. Macaulay would do almost anything to please his favorites; he even tried to like their dogs, and dogs he was not fond of. In one place in his diary he denounces the animal as "a beast that is always spoiling conversation." But when the dog was a pet of the children, that was another matter, and he bought things for it at the shops, and made poetry about it to an extent which made the children happy, if it had no particular effect upon the dog. When he was busy upon the second instalment of his history, he would spend some precious time inserting a gold piece in the seal of a letter to his nephew George, so that it might slip past the post-office authorities, and would transmit it with the casual remark that while the best part of a lady's letter was in the postscript, the best part of uncle's was in the seal. One day, coming out from a collection of pictures, he saw a more delightful picture, he says, than any there. It was four pretty little sisters, from about eleven to six years old, riding in a donkey-cart in a deep shady lane, and quite beside themselves with delight at the treat. They were laughing and singing in a way that almost made him cry with a sense of the beautiful, and when he asked them to go on, they sang like little larks. Whereupon all the silver he had in his pockets went to buy dolls.—D. D. Lloyd, in Harper's Magazine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Male Dress.

The dress of the civilized man, especially the dress which he wears in the evening, causes him poignant but seret sorrow. He makes many feeble efforts to console himself, and in the gaudy cricketing and boating costumes of the clerk, the undergraduate, and the subaltern, the natural vanity and the crude barbaric taste of man may easily be recognized by the philosopher. It is a pleasant thing to go to the Lillie Bridge running grounds when the young gentlemen of some one of the monstrous shops are holding their yearly athletic contest. They gleam in bright blue; they flash past you on the rapid bicyle, in purple and green, before the eyes of their lady friends and of reporters. In the country, too, men can venture to be themselves. In "Lothair," Lord Beaconsfield describes with sympathy and admiration the costumes of their noble guests. They array themselves in velvet knickerbockers, with purple stockings, and scarlet neckties, fastened with rings of gold. Every one remembers the Persian apparatus, the Oriental magnificence of the dressing-gowns and smoking-coats worn by Guy Livington's men. They were alone by themselves in the smoking-room; for in those innocent old days, when Mr. Lawrence was thought a daring writer, ladies had not invaded that sacred place. Alone they were, yet they flaunted for their common delight in garments so fanciful and gay that it is a pleasure to read about them. A man thinks of them with inward comfort on a foggy day, when he is dressed in drab and black, as he thinks of some hours of sunshine, the gift of a departed summer. What men would like is manifest enough; they would like to vie with women in colors and stuffs, in velvet and silk and cloth of gold. We flatter ourselves we could know what are the best sorts of lace if we gave our minds to it, and that the taste of men in this matter is not dead but dormant. Oliver Goldsmith and La Fontaine, the most careless and not the cleanest of mortals, ruined themselves for peach-colored coats and for Venice point. The loveliest dirty ruffles fell over those inky fingers of La Fontaine, and his dubious shirt had the most exquisite collar, which duchesses envied. Men are not degenerate; they are as vain as ever, as anxious to display their charms in what they think a proper setting. It is the way of the world and a commercial civilization that is against them. Lace ruffles would interfere with business; the mud and dust and smoke and soot of London would ruin the velvets and satins and the embroideries of silver. Men are compelled to wear the cloth of frieze instead of the cloth of gold; but they do not relish the necessity.—Saturday Review.

American Locomotives in Switzerland.

English people are wanting work, and yet for some reason or want of it our locomotive builders allow a country nearly 2,000 miles farther away from Switzerland than we are to supply locomotives to that country. It is stated that the enterprise of our most energetic competitors in manufactures has sent a locomotive to Geneva specially in order to test its capabilities of producing steam from the anthracite coal found in the Valais. This cannot be used in Swiss or French locomotives, as at present constructed, but the experiment with the American appears to have been an entire success. The furnace arrangements of the American locomotive are said to be admirably adapted to the employment of this coal, which is not unlike, in its behavior in the fire, to that used in America. The engine will run with fuel which would bring the ordinary continental locomotive to a standstill; and the system, if adopted in Switzerland and other parts of Europe, as some such doubtless will be, will effect an important saving in coal to those countries, and give work to others.—London Engineer.

The History of Diphtheria.

It is often said that diphtheria is of modern origin, a penalty for the unsanitary conditions of modern civilization. Dr. MacKenzie, senior physician to the Hospital for Throat and Chest Diseases, in London, finds the disease to be a very ancient one. The first description of it occurs in the writings of an Indian physician, a contemporary of Pythagoras. He next identifies it "askara," a fatal epidemic frequently mentioned in the Talmud. In the seventh century diphtheria was widely prevalent in Europe, and extensively fatal. In 1802 Dr. Cullen, of Edinburgh, seems to have described the disease under the name of cynanche trachealis; and in 1826 Bretonneau's classical work appeared.

"After this," writes Dr. Mackenzie, "the disease seems to have passed from the minds of English physicians and its very existence to have been almost forgotten." From such forgetfulness the medical profession was thoroughly aroused by the great epidemic of the years 1858–'9, since which time diphtheria has not appeared in England with anything like the same malignancy.

Railway up Vesuvius.

It is thirty years since a concession was granted for a railway up Vesuvius. It has been promised many times, but never so positively as now. The plan proposed involves the construction of an iron elevated railway about three feet high above the ground, on which is to run a train of eight cars operated by a steel cable. Each car is to be furnished with two automatic brakes. The cable will be double, in case of accidents. The actual tension on it will be 2,000 kilogrammes, but it will be made to support a tension of 33,000 kilogrammes. A small station with a restaurant will be constructed on the cone and another at the foot of the mountain. The ground has been chosen where there is least danger from an eruption, and all the material is movable, so that it can easily be taken up and stored in the observatory in case of eruption. It is expected that the railway will be completed before the summer of the present year.

Different Kinds of Paper.

You've often held paper up to the light and have seen the tracing of trade-marks and other designs. These are made with wire on the surface of the dandy-roll; and so the pulp continues its journey, going through a great deal of tribulation in the way of suction pumps and pressure to relieve itself of moisture, until finally, after passing between a cylinder filled with steam and one of felt, we find a continuous sheet of dry paper. After being pressed between polished iron rolls the paper is passed through a machine with a revolving knife which comes in contact with a stationary blade, and thus the paper is cut into sheets.

But the Professor must hurry on, for there are other things in the paper line to talk about.

Wall-papers. The Professor shares with others a blank memory concerning the subject of wall papers before the year 1550, at which date he is quite sure they were made in Spain and Holland. The common grades are made of woolen, hemp and jute waste, while for the best finer materials are used. In old times the paper used to be printed by hand with blocks or stencils, but now cylinder printing is adopted. This process is similar to calico printing, a detailed description of which would take too much time this week. Some of the delicate patterns are still printed by hand. Striped wall papers are sometimes colored by passing the plain paper under openings through which the colors are brushed or run. You have often, no doubt, seen the raised, velvet-like surfaces on the wall paper. This is called flock printing. The pattern is put on in varnish, and then colored flocks of woolen cloth, in the form of powder, are spinkled on.

Papier-mache.—This material has a French name, but it seems to have had an English origin nevertheless. Paper moulded into forms was used in making the ceilings of some of the houses built during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. In 1772 an Englishman took out a patent for a process in which the papier-mache was made by pasting sheets of soft paper together over moulds. You must have seen the material, but do you know that it can be made so solid and hard that even car wheels may be built with it?

But I'll tell you where the process is about as useful as anywhere, and that place is the newspaper and book-printing office. A paste formed of flour, starch, alum and water is spread over a sheet of thick, soft paper. This is then covered with three sheets of tissue paper, one over the other.

When the type of a newspaper page is ready for the printers, this paper matrix, as it is called, is powdered with French chalk and laid upon the type. A brush is passed over the back to get the form of the type (as the Professor has already explained in his talk about "Newspapers"), and then another sheet of matrix paper is placed on the back of the first matrix, and both are brushed hard to unite them. A blanket is placed over all, and type and matrix are run under a drying press and kept there until the steam has thoroughly dried the matrix. The latter being placed in a mold and the type removed, the paper face of the matrix receives melted type-metal without injury, and a duplicate plate is made. A matrix may be used for twenty or thirty duplicate plates if necessary.

By this process a newspaper having a large circulation may use several presses on the same printed matter by having duplicate plates made, as it takes only about fifteen minutes to prepare a plate from the matrix. Before the papier-mache process was known, the London Times used to set the entire type of the paper twice each night in order to print the large number of copies necessary to fill orders.

Of course in this case the paper was printed directly from the type itself.—Christian Union.

SECULAR NEWS.

45 Years Before the Public.
THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

CATARRH
Is a terrible disease. Its fearful effects are corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. Thousands, not knowing the great danger in neglecting this disease, die with consumption. In a few years or months it may rapidly develop, and quick consumption announce it is too late.
CONSUMPTION The terror of humanity that yearly carries thousands to an untimely grave, not sparing the young, the talented, nor the beautiful.
ASTHMA which makes life so miserable its victims almost wish for death.
Minister's Sore Throat, Catarrhal Deafness, and BRONCHITIS the advance guard heralding the near approach of consumption.—For these and all Pulmonary Diseases, Dr. M. W. Case's Treatment by the use of his
CARBOLATE of TAR
INHALANTS IS PLEASANT, THOROUGH, AND SUCCESSFUL. SATISFACTION always GUARANTEED.
Balsams and cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar that the mere breathing vaporizes them into a dense smoke. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. As the oils and balsams condense on the air passages and lungs, their capacity is wonderfully enlarged and the hollow chest soon becomes rounded and full.
HOME TREATMENT sent to any part of the United States or Canada, to be returned if not satisfactory.
To consumptives beyond the possibility of cure the Inhalants always give great relief, and often cure cases considered hopeless. CATARRH is readily cured by breathing the vapor and forcing it into the diseased cavities of the head and out of the nose, and is the thorough method by which this terrible and almost universal disease can be permanently cured. PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

OF THE REV. ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER, D. D.

This is a duodecimo volume consisting of 398 pages, published by the American Tract Society. It may be said to consist of four divisions, though not formally separated as such, comprising (1) about forty short articles, written in the latter years of his life, for the American Messenger; (2) seven standard tracts on high evangelical themes, for the Tract Society's general series; (3) six small books written in a remarkably simple style, and issued in larger type for common readers, and (4) selections from his correspondence with the Society.

It is not our purpose, in calling attention to this little book, to bestow praise upon it or its author, for both have been done by persons competent to the task. The writings themselves have been before our people for many years, whilst the life of Dr. Alexander has been admirably written by his gifted son, Rev. James W. Alexander, and both are accessible to all who wish to become better acquainted with this great man and his writings. But our purpose in this brief article is to set forth to all literary and learned men of whatever profession, to ministers of the gospel especially, one peculiar trait of his character, if not strictly peculiar, was possessed by him in an eminent degree—we mean his modesty and humility. Dr. Alexander labored incessantly for nearly forty years, as first professor in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, fulfilling the duties of his professorship with consummate ability, watching over the students as a father, and guiding, in an eminent degree, by his affectionate advice their future course; constantly appealed to for counsel in all the varied interests of the churches, and of the cause of benevolence, and with a discernment of character, a sound practical judgment and a singleness of purpose for the welfare of the Redeemer's kingdom, that gained universal confidence. No wonder that a gentleman of another denomination, possessed of enlarged views and a liberality, once declared to the writer that if he had the power he "would make Dr. Alexander archbishop of all the churches in the United States, for, sir, he is the wisest and greatest man now living." But with all his greatness he was a remarkably humble and modest man. He seemed to know nothing of his own greatness. One who had been in terms of the closest intimacy with him for many years stated that "he had never heard Dr. Alexander allude to his own influence."

We will make a few quotations from the fourth division of this book—his correspondence with the Tract Society—in proof of the statement. On the 31st of August, 1825, having been applied to, he wrote, "I am so convinced of the efficacy of this mode of diffusing the knowledge of truth, that if I thought myself capable of writing good tracts I would be willing to spend the remainder of my days in that service. But when I have made some efforts in that way I have not succeeded in gaining my own approbation. I would prefer that anything I may write may be communicated as anonymous." Again, on the 25th of February, 1826, he writes: "If I receive nothing you may conclude that I have failed in my attempt. If such a communication should be made it is my sincere and earnest request that, unless it meets the views of the committee satisfactorily, it may not be published. I have no feelings that need be in the least consulted in such a case." Again, on the 24th of August, 1829, he writes: "If I could persuade myself that I was able to write in that peculiar style of plainness, simplicity and spirituality, in which tracts should be penned, I would even rob the sleep of some of its hours to furnish a greater variety of subjects to the American Tract Society." Again, on the 22d of March, 1837, being asked for a volume, he replied, "without any affectation of modesty, my clear conviction is that there are already in print much better books than I could write, and that there are other persons much more competent to supply what is wanted than myself. Almost everthing which I have ever published has been drawn from me by some peculiar circumstances; otherwise I never should have appeared before the public as an author. My 'Letters,' to which you kindly allude, were commenced at the earnest request of some of my old friends in Virginia, and were not expected by me to circulate farther than they would be conveyed by the Watchman of the South. I have now brought them to a close principally because it is painful to me to be so long before the Christian public. Dr. Plumer has earnestly solicited from me a series of letters on 'Experimental Religion,' but I have not thonght that I could execute such a work as it ought to be done." Once more only: When reqnested to contribute more than he had done to the American Messenger, which at this time had reached a circulation of one hundred and fifty thousand—though afterwards its circulation went over two hundred thousand—on the 11th of December, 1849, he replied: "I would certainly have furnished more articles than I have done if I had not believed that yonr numerons correspondents could supply you with articles better snited to the taste of the publishers than any which could proceed from my pen. Vivacity and originality are not to be expected from aged men. And they have less relish for such composition as pleases the young, and by its point and striking thonght engages the attention of most men, than they once had. As, however, I take pleasure in scribbling when the fit comes upon me, I shall, from time to time, give you the offer of some of my lucnbrations, and if they should not suit your views no offense will be given to the writer by their not being inserted. Never publish an article of mine unless you really approve it."

We think that will do for this time to prove that Dr. Alexander was, in fact, an humble and modest man. There is a plenty more, of which the above is a fair specimen.

We close with a few practical remarks:

1. What a contrast does the conduct of Dr. Alexander present to that of some of us—mere pigmies—who not only sign our initials as finals to our articles for the paper, but some have their names printed in full at the top! He preferred his articles to be published anonymously, and in several instances had to beg that his name be omitted. And not only so, bnt in the short articles he furnished the American Messenger, most of which are signed A. A., and which every one who took the Messenger looked for as soon as it was opened, he was so annoyed on hearing of it that he signed some Senex and some Rednax and some he did not sign at all. That which tickles the vanity of little men was only a sonrce of annoyance to Dr. Alexander.

2. The wonderful power of the "press," is a second reflection. Very distinctly do we remember when his "Letters" came ont in the Watchman of the South, with what eagerness they were read. We know the fact, that those who took the paper had to lend it to from three to half dozen families jnst to read these "Lettera," and that many a time, a paper was retnrned to its owner, so shattered and flimsy by constant handling, that it was hardly fit to be filed away—for we used carefully to file away papers in old times. We know another fact, and it is worth knowing, that these "Letters" of Dr. Alexander were re-published,—the next week after they appeared in the Watchman,—in every religious paper in the United States. Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian and Congregationalist. At the time of their publication we made a calculation of how many persons there were who read these "Letters," and we came to the conclusion, that they could not be fewer than one million a week. What a congregation! And yet these "Letters" were written by a man so hnmble and modest, that he did not think he could write a book.—and never did write one, or even a tract that was not "drawn ont of him by pecnliar circumstances."

We had other reflections to make, bnt it occnrs to us that they had better be omitted—for divers reasons. D. L.

WE ARE IN DANGER.

LENOIR, N. C., Feb. 13, '79.

Mr. Editor: In an editorial in a recent number of the PRESBYTERIAN "Our Danger" is set forth in a manner calculated to awaken us to a sense of the situation. That we are in great danger is plain to be seen. The sums promised our ministers, in many instances, is less than they can live upon, though making a respectable average. Orange Presbytery promises an average of $850, Concord $862, Fayetteville $725, Wilmington $750. I have not at hand the sum promised by Mecklenburg. These sums, if equally distribnted, would look something like a living, at least in the country. It must be borne in mind, however, that many of the larger chnrches pay very mnch more than the average amount, and thereby the smaller churches have their average amonnts greatly reduced.

But worst of all we do not pay the sums promised. From the last minutes of our General Assembly we see that Orange Presbytery pays, not $850 average, but $505; Concord not $862, but $515; Fayetteville not $725, but $497; Wilmington comes nearer her promise, and pays $725, and Mecklenburg Presbytery pays an average of $439. Wilmington comes almost up to her promise, bnt the others fall fearfully short of their assnmed obligations. Trnly this is an alarming state of affairs, when church members, Presbyterians, after assuming an obligation to snpport the Gospel, will so far fall short of the measnre of their dnty.

Under our laws for the prevention of the payment of honest debts, it is becoming unfashionable to pay. The delinqnent has only to refnse, then take shelter behind the protection the laws of the land give him, and the creditor may whistle, and the debt goes unpaid. Are we Presbyterians willing to shield ourselves in the same way from our obligations to our pastors?—that too from obligations voluntarily assumed? Do we not stand in pressing need of being worked over.

Another great evil in many of our churches is that a very large proportion of the members never subscribe to, nor pay aught of the minister's salary. The writer speaks of his own knowledge, in saying that in many churches of fifty, sixty, one hundred or more members, the funds for all church purposes are paid by twenty, forty or sixty members—this too where all are able to pay. All are able to indulge in the conveniences and many of the luxuries of life, but are too poor to pay anything for the support of the Gospel at home, much less to onr foreign field.

This is all wrong, and should be corrected, bnt how to correct it is the great question. Should our ministers preach more of moral honesty; should our sessions take vigorous hold of delinquents, say "pay that thou owest;" shonld our deacons be more pressing in the claims of our Master and His cause? What is the remedy? I doubt not your books (the accounts of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN) would make a bad showing for onr church, in the way of unpaid subscriptions to the paper; this too by members of the church in good and regular standing.

Mr. Editor, I do not like to scold, bnt it does seem to me that some one must speak out; these evils are running to such an extent that every man that claims to be honest ought to complain. C.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

There shonld be no conflict between Science and Religion. What is the Christian religion? It is a benign influence exercised upon the heart of man by revelation from God. What is Science? The word is derived from "scio to know," or in other words is the mode of acqnring and treasnring np useful knowledge. There are many modes pursued by scientists in the acquisition of knowledge, indeed their labors embrace every department where investigations are wont to be made. Bnt those who investigate the cosmogony and history of the material world, more particularly, arrogate to themselves the name of scientists, and many of them become skeptical. They are often actnated with inordinate pride from the presnmed importance of their studies, and indeed stultify themselves in the supposed profnndity of their investigations. The conclnsions reached are often more guesses or theories, which indeed answer the public for a season, bnt are doomed to the shades of oblivion as soon as a new theorist promulgates the result of his researches. They attempt too mnch and get beyond their latitnde. However grand, interesting and profonnd their investigations may be, they have no right to encroach upon the domain of revelation, which is an emanation from onr great God and spiritnal in its natnre. Let them search to their satisfaction the mysteries of eras, ages, cycles, waters, igneous and chemical forces and influences upon the earth. They cannot acconnt for its creation and preservation without revelation. And moreover those who are, or pretend to be materialists, are incompetent witnesses, not having been blessed with an infnsion of the Holy Spirit; for how can a man judge of that which he knoweth not? or how can a materialist pronounce npon what is spiritnal?

Common sense as well as our own consciences teach us that we are surrounded by circumstances under the control of a higher power than onrselves. They also teach us that there can be no evolntion without an evolntionist; that there can be no force or power without a sonrce, and that there can be no world with all its concomitants without a God. Those are self-evident trnths. It has pleased Almighty God to reveal to mankind light enough to save onr sonls in a future state of existence. This no man shonld ignore. It has not been his will to expound to us all the mysteries of this world; and they are no doubt proper and legitimate snbjects of investigation. But when the materialistic scientist attempts to invalidate the revelations of the Most High for the salvation of man, he occnpies ground, where angels fear to tread, and deserves to be deprecated or anathematized. The Christian religion has withstood the shocks of satanic and other influences for more than eighteen hundred years, and if apparently at times, it has been put to a disadvantage, always in the end it is victorious and so will be, and Science must yield when properly pursued, to its divine influence. CHRISTIAN FAITHFULNESS.

A very intelligent child of thirteen years, said to me a short time ago, I do not think I will ever be a Christian. Why not? said I.

Because I think my time has passed. Before the last communion, when the pastor urged the members of the church to take to those who were not, I thought surely some one would talk to me because I felt so dreadfully, but nobody said one word to me, not even my parents or sisters.

Why did you not ask your parents, or some friend for advice?

I did try to do so, bnt could not, I was ashamed to let them know how badly I felt.

When the communion day came, I did not feel near as unhappy as I generally felt when I had to be separated from the rest of the family. After that, I thonght I wonld wait until my birth-day, when I knew my parents would talk to me, bnt I did not mind that as much as I had always done before, and so, I think it is too late now for me to be saved. After trying to convince her that Satan was only deceiving her by making her think that now was not the accepted time, and urging her to go to the Savionr at once, I left her alone with God, and thought long and sadly upon the snbject snggested by her remarks. May there not be some in every christian community who feel from time to time as this child did, and are growing hardened and indifferent because no one ever talks to them about their souls? Christian brother and sister, are there any unconverted persons round you, who can say you have never said a word to them about their souls?

If we do love our Blessed Lord, let us not be afraid, or ashamed to speak often of Him, not only to each other, but to those who may be waiting sadly for some one to tell them how they may find relief from their burden of sins.

CHRISTIAN "GIVING UP."

It is a pitiful thing to see a young disciple going about and asking everybody how much he must "give np" in order to be a Christian. Unfortunately, many of those who take it upon themselves to instruct him give him the same impression of Christian discipleship—that it consists chiefly of giving up things that one likes and finds pleasure in. Bnt a man in solitary confinement might as well talk about what he must "give up" if he is pardoned out of prison, or a patient in consumption about what he must "give up" in order to get well. The prisoner must give up his fetters, and the invalid his pains and his weaknesses—these are the main things to be sacrificed. It is true that the one has the privilege of living without work, and the other the privileges of lying abed all day; these are privileges that must be relinqnished, no doubt. And so there are certain sacrifices to be made by him who enters upon the Christian life, bnt they are "not worthy to be compared" with the liberty and dignity and joy into which the Christian life introdnces us; and to pnt the emphasis npon this negative side of the Christian experience, as so many are inclined to do, is a great mistake.—Sunday Afternoon.

THE HAPPIEST PERIOD OF LIFE.

What, then, is the happiest period of human life? I am sure there is only one answer. It is now. If I am doing my duty, to-day is the best day I ever had. Yesterday had a happiness of its own, and np to this morning it was the best day of all. I would not, however, live it over again. I string it, as a new bead, on the chaplet of praise, and turn to the better work and the higher thonghts of the present time. Of all the many days of life, give me to-day. This should be our feeling always, from the cradle to the hour when we are called to come up higher. Childhood is best for children, manhood is best for men, and old age for the silver-haired. We will all join in a chorus of common thanksgiving to God, and when asked "Which is the happiest period?" will say, Childhood, manhood, and old age, alike. "O Father, it is now!"

PLEASANT MEMORIES.

We may not realize that our actions of to-day afford food for memory to-morrow. Then try to live aright. In youth, as we all remember, hope was our gnide, anticipation and expectation were the animating sentiments; the mind looked constantly forward, plans and purposes were its chief activity. In matnre years, as most of us know, realization takes the place of hope; the mind concerns itself more with now. Clearly there must be, as years accumulate, a gradnal trnrning of the mind toward the past; memory will become the chosen companion; we shall live more and more in what we recollect. Youth dwells in the fntnre; manhood in the present; age in the past. To ponder upon former years enters into the heart life of age just as do the hope and prospect of years to come into that of yonth. Each person is forming that element for his age by his life now. The hasty words, the foolish deeds, the neglects and omissions, the transgressions of to-day are the seeds for so many mortifications and sorrows to grow rank in the white-haired years. Whatever is wise, right, generous, self-sacrificing, honorable in the life of to-day, is a plant which will ripen thick with peaceful and pleasant memories in the days when memory is chief factor in happiness.

JESUS TO THE FRONT.

A friend kindly sends us the following extract from a letter written by a lady in Tuskaloosa, Ala., dated Febrnary 14th.

"Our lamented friend, Mr. Dickson, is still speaking to us. We have received a tract from Philadelphia, called 'Jesus to the Front.' A lady of his congregation married a Roman Catholic. He wished her to become of like faith with himself. She consnlted Mr. D. He told her she could decide for herself, which she would have in front, Jesus or Mary. Her response was, 'I will die before I will give up Christ.' It (the tract) is just as loyal to Jesus as his own ambassador; just as bold and fearless in utterance of truth; just as meek and lowly in heart as if the words were from his mouth new, warm and vitalizing. Mr. D.'s theme forever was, Jesus is my King!"—Southern Presbyterian.

HAPPY WOMEN.

In marrying, men shonld seek happy women. They make a terrible mistake when they marry for beauty, or for talent, or for style. Oh, what blessings are those happy women! How often their little hands guide the ponderous machine of life, with almost an invisible tonch! How we look forward through the weary day to their fireside smiles! No one will ever know until the day of judgment reveals, how much we owe to these helpful, hopeful, uncomplaining, happy women.

Nature has given women two painful but heavenly gifts, which distinguish them and often raise them above human natnre—compassion and enthusiasm. By compassion they devote themselves; by enthusiasm they exalt themselves.—Lamartine.

THE ETERNAL GLORY.

A father dying leaves to his child a package, sealed, and inscribed, "Not to be opened till you come of age." The child often looks wonderingly on the sealed package; but he respects the father's dying will, suffers the seal to keep the secret, and wonders what surprise is in store for him in the future. The Heavenly Father gives to each one of his children such a package, labelled "The Eternal Glory: Not to be opened till yon come of age." Many a curious eye has gazed on the sealed package; many a curious imagination has ventnred a guess at its secret contents, bnt they still remain unknown. A surprise is in store for us when school is over, and we gradnate and enter into the true life of our eternal home.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRAYER.

Lord, I find David making a syllogism in mood and figure. Two propositions he perfected:—"If I regard wickedness in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. But verily God hath heard me, he hath attended to the voice of my prayer."

Now I expected that David should have concluded thns:—"Therefore I regard not wickedness in my heart." Bnt far otherwise he concludes:—"Blessed be God who hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me."

Thns David hath deceived, but not wronged me. I looked that he shonld have clapped the crown on his own, and he pnts it on God's head. I will learn this excellent logic; for I like David's better than Aristotle's syllogisms, that, whatsoever the premises be, I make God's glory the conclnsion.—Fuller's Good Thoughts in Bad Times.

THE HAPPY LIFE.

When the prophet Elisha desired in some way to recompense the Shunamite for her kindness to him, and interrogated her; the reply—most modestly given—was "I dwell among mine own people." She tronbled not others, nor did they her; she dwelt in peace, in a happy quiet. So with the Christian, whose life is "hid with Christ in God;" it is a life of quiet assurance that says to the tnrmoils—the afflictions—of time "none of these things move me." Nothing is able to dismay, nothing able to hurt. And this is secnred, just as the branch of the tree lives, by drawing its life from the root; it is that which makes it flonrish and grow and increase in strength. So the "with Christ't brings the peace and the ready acceptance of God's will in all things; "Christ is all and in all" to him. The things that fret and vex others make no alteration at all with the Christian—or should not—therefore is his life a happy one.

JESUS ONLY.

Thou one staid Rock in life's tempestuous sea,
To Thee I come!
Henceforth—all else unstable - but in Thee
I find my home.
Rest of my soul, once weary, peaceful now,
The central object of my spirit's joy art Thou.

Though all should cast me out, yet still in Thee
I'll put my trust;
Mine is a treasure time and tide defy,
And moth and rust.
Give me, O Lord, the sympathetic heart
That lives upon Thy love, and cannot live apart.

O Jesus! fix thine image on my soul,
That there I may
Gaze on Thy beauty till I am made whole;
And every ray
From this world's sinking suns that own not Thee,
Dies down in Thine own light and its obscurity.
—London Christian.

THE HOUR BEFORE YOU GO TO CHURCH

I have in my eye at present the hour before you go to church on the Sabbath forenoon. I am anxious about it. The note struck then is likely to give tone to your spirits all the day. Redeem it. Redeem it as much as you can from family duties. Redeem it wholly from "plaiting of hair and putting on of apparel." Redeem it wholly from vain conversation. How very much the power of the minister's preaching depends on the preparing of the hearing heart! If you come up to the church with your mind crowded with trifles and puffed up with your vanity—what can ministers do? They can do nothing but beat the air. What else can they do if there be nothing before them but air to beat at? It will make a sound, and that is all. I fear that many of my dear people spend more time on the Sabbath morning in putting veils on their faces than in taking the veil off their hearts—more time in trying to make themselves appear before men what they are not, than in trying to make themselves appear before God what they are.—Rev. W. Arnot.

"PAY FOR THE PITCHERS."

A Christian woman once asked for money for the cause of Christ, and the objection was raised, "Why! I thought you preached a free Gospel; and you talk about the water of life being free, without money and without price." "Yes," said she, the water of life is free; but we need money for the pitchers to carry it in." Yes, ours is a "free salvation;" bnt we must pay for the Bibles and tracts which tell about it; we must pay passage on the ships and railroads which carry our missionaries to the heathen; we must supply them with food and clothing, and means to bring up their children, while they give their time to the work of telling "the story of the Cross" to the heathen, and translating books and Bibles, or learning the language, so that they may speak and write it. And the money for this purpose ought to come from every church of Christ, from every believer in the Saviour, however rich or poor, in its due proportion.—The Presbyterian Journal.

THE BLIND GIRL AND HER BIBLE.

Dr. Bell relates that a blind girl, residing in France, had for many years perused an embossed Bible with her fingers, bnt becoming partially paralyzed, the sense of touch in her fingers was lost. Her agonv of mind at the deprivation was great, and in a moment of despair she took up her Bible, bent down her head and kissed the open leaf, by way, as she snpposed, of a last farewell. In the act of doing so, to her great snrprise and endden joy, she felt the letters distinctly with her lips, and from that day (he adds) this poor child has thns been reading the book which is her one great comfort.

"STRONG IN HIM."

"The other day," said Norman Macleod, "I was requested by a brother minister, who was unwell, to go and visit a dying child. He told me some remarkable things of this boy, eleven years of age, who, during three years of sickness, had manifested the most patient submission to the will of God, with a singular enlightenment of the Spirit. I went to visit him. The child had suffered excruciating pain; for years he had not known one day's rest. I gazed with wonder at the boy. After drawing near to him and speaking some words of sympathy, he looked at me with his blue eyes—he could not move, it was the night before he died—and breathed in my ear the words, "I am strong in Him." The words were few, and uttered feebly; they were the words of a feeble child, in a poor home, where the only ornament was that of a meek, and quiet, and affectionate mother; bnt these words seemed to lift the burden from the very heart; they seemed to make the world more beautiful than ever it was before; they brought home to my heart a great and blessed truth. May all of us be 'strong in Him!'"

Let the timid trembling Sunday school teacher take conrage from this thought, Weak in self, but "strong in Him." What are our difficnlties with such a foundation as this for strength.

GOD KNOWS BEST.

It takes just so many turns of the potter's wheel to make a vase or a cnp, and the pitcher of life reqnires just so many turnings of the wheel of grief. God's wheat is not ready to be taken into the garner until the hoofs of calamity, and the hoofs of persecution, and the hoofs of death have trampled it ont. Do you realize then, that you are in God's keeping? Each person is as much under the searching care of God, the fatherly care of God, the motherly care of God, as though he were the only person in all the world, in all the universe.—Christian Intelligencer.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From London Weekly Review:

It is said that a relic of Luther will soon be seen at a London bookseller's. It is a Bible formerly belonging to him, and containing sixteen autograph lines, with his signature and the date 1542.

The Pope has intimated his desire to raise Dr. Newman to the rank of Cardinal, bnt, with expression of respect for the Papal See, Dr. Newman has excused himself from accepting the purple. It is understood that some years ago the late Pope offered the prelacy to Dr. Newman, who declined it in the same spirit which has caused him now to shrink from the higher dignity.

According to a correspondent of the Tablet a leading Roman Catholic publisher has said that the reading part of the Roman Catholic public in London does not nnmber more than 600 persons. The correspondent thinks that the majority of his co-religionists buy none of the non-Roman books. To this he attributes the repeated failures in starting and keeping up Roman Catholic periodicals, and he regrets that very little is done to give support to those who devote their time and talent to forming a Roman Catholic literature in England.

The Positivist Liturgy, which is creating some discussion in Comtist circles, has been issued in a handsome form, printed on green tinted paper, with gold border. The "prayer" is addressed to the "Great Power, the highest hnmanity, whose children and servants we are, from whom we derive everything, and from whom we are bound to render everything. May we all seek to know Thee better." Another portion of the Liturgy speaks of that time when "Thon (hnmanity) shalt, visibly to all, take to Thee Thy great power and reign." The book seems harmless enongh, from a Positivist point of view, but some eminent members of the sect are strongly opposed to its use.

From London Christian Signal:

GLASGOW.—The Rev. Dr. William Symington, senior pastor of Great Hamilton-street Free Church, Glasgow, died last Sunday, at the age of 55 years, at his residence, Westercraigs, Dennistoun. The reverend gentleman succeeded his father, the Rev. Dr. Symington, in that charge. His father and nncle were the leading divines of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, the latter having written works of great authority with that body. The deceased and his congregation joined the Free Church at the union in May, 1876.

BEQUEST TO THE FREE CHURCH.—The late Dr. Alexander Binnie Webster, of No. 13 Warriston-crescent, Edinburgh, amongst other legacies, has bequeathed £400 to the sustentation fund, £400 to the aged and infirm ministers' fund, £300 to ministers' widows' and orphans' fund, £300 to the missionaries' widows' and orphans' fnnd, and to the committee for the Highlands and Islands the residue of his estate, which is expected to yield full £10,000. Besides this, another snm of £500 will eventnally accrne to the Highlands and Islands Committee.

The idea of creating several new members of the Sacred College has just been abandoned, and the Vatican is studying a plan for augmenting the nnmber of Cardinals holding Episcopal office, so as not to increase the burdens of the Pontifical Budget. It has been customary with the Pope to present to Archbishops without exequaturs a sum of 700 francs a month, and to Bishops 500 francs; but since the 1st of Febrnary these subsidies have been snppressed. Cardinal Nina, the Pontifical Secretary of State, publishes a letter explaining that the Holy See has not the means to support these charges. In consequence of these measnres the opposition to the Pope manifested by the Ultramontanes is daily becoming more active. The Pope will receive a deputation of Catholic journalists from all parts of the world on the 22d inst. The Holy Week services will be performed in the Sistine Chapel.

A gentleman at Leeds, Mr. Arthington, who has already made great sacrifices on behalf of the South African mission field, has offered to the Baptist Missionary Society a steamer worth $2,000 to extend the navigation of the Congo and the spread of Christianity. The offer has been accepted. The same gentleman was the originator of a previous mission into Central Africa. San Salvador is stated as being the centre fixed upon for future operations. Further, the late Rev. William Campbell has, by his will, bequeathed to the London Missionary Society the reversion of £2,000 for the purpose of promoting a Canarese native ministry at Bangalore.

THE POPE'S FINANCES.—The progress of the fnnd for saving the Pope from bankruptcy makes slow success. Every week a pathetic appeal is sent ont from some bishop or high functionary, begging the Catholics of England to come to the rescue. A week ago the Vatican itself called for a special collection in all the churches. Last week the Bishop Nottingham called upon the faithful to strain every nerve, to do all they can to meet an urgent necessity, bnt the resnlt of his rhetoric was exactly £2 10s. It is whispered that matters are not better in France. There the Pope is at present unpopnlar, because he is coqnetting with Bismarck. Italy and Spain alone come cheerfully to the Holy Father's aid.

From General Sonrces:

It is said that some twenty Jews have recently been baptized at the ancient abode of Cyrus and Ahasnerus, and others, the Ecbatana of Scriptnre, the modern Hamadan, where the descendants of the captive Jews still live."

A terrible famine has prevailed in India. At Cashmere two-thirds of the inhabitants have died or fled. Missionaries in the Pnnjaub have aided as far as possible, but still the suffering is heartrending.

MISCELLANY.

There are five Protestants in the present French Cabinet.

About twenty "Robin" dinners have been given during the last fortnight to four or five thousand of the poor children of London, the expenses being met by the readers of Hand and Heart.

The London Post's Berlin correspondent say: 'The Chinese Government have purchased machinery and engaged experienced engineers and spinners in Germany to establish cotton mills in China so as to free that country from dependence upon English and Russian imports."

The missionaries of the New York Port Society board vessels when they come in, inviting the crews to church, and when the vessels leave port, put packages of reading matter and loan libraries on board. During the past year 684 packages of reading matter were placed on ship-board and 1,229 bibles and testaments were given out. The society has 254 libraries afloat.

A Columbns machinist has been at work eight years on a clock. At the first qnarter hour a locomotive runs an open space; at the second a miniature bell tolls in Independence Hall, and Washington walks into sight; at the third, the twelve Apostles bow to Christ, Peter denies his Lord, and a cock crows; at the even hour there is music, and a skeleton hastens along, bearing the legend, "Time flies." Every noon Lincoln appears with the Emancipation proclamation.

Switzerland has lost one of her leading statesman; a man who to the world at large was utterly unknown, bnt who within the borders of the Alpine republic for thirty years led a most usefnl, active, and honorable life. Dr. Drebs began his official career at the age of 24 as a subordinate justice, bnt speedily rose until he occupied the highest position in the gift of the Swiss people. He was three times elected President of the republic. Various works on jurisprudence evidenced his industry and ability as a writer. Paralysis of the brain was the cause of his death.

In Glasgow, Snnday morning breakfasts for poor persons are furnished at Evangelistic Hall, in James Morrison street. On recent Sundays, as many as 2,000 hungry persons have been present. At 7 o'clock the eating begins. The menu is simple, consisting chiefly of hot tea and large sandwiches. The tea is furnished in mngs, the sandwiches in clean white paper. One hundred and twenty pleasant young women wait on the guests. A choir of thirty or forty young ladies furnishes sacred singing while the eating goes on. When the breakfast is over, a short Gospel service is held. Attendance on this is not compulsory, though many a poor fellow whose empty stomach has just been filled with gratuitous breakfast feels that it would be hardly the fair thing to tnrn his back on the meeting. A missionary waits on people who leave word that they would like to have a call from him at their homes or lodgings. The breakfasts have been regularly served since 1874.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 1879.

RETRENCHMENT AND REFORM.

Great words these! And in view of past extravagant expenditures and present financial distress, the people are demanding that the words be reduced to the practice signified by them. We are well content to leave with our law-makers the shaping of legislation in general, bnt we cannot forbear a snggestion just here. Undoubtedly it is well to curtail salaries and discharge supernumerary employes, &c., but all this is comparatively trifling in comparison with what might be done by snppressing the liquor traffic—by enacting a prohibitory law. This is precisely what we mean: Provide that no liquor shall be bought or sold within the limits of the State of North Carolina.

What, is it asked, destroy all the revenue derived to the government from the sale of spirituous liquors? Just so, and in a tenfold degree destroy the necessity for the revenne. Do away with, as being unnecessary, a large part of the prisons, and their keepers, of policemen, and criminal courts, and almshonses, and all the paid employes of all. Do away with idleness and poverty and crime, and snbstitute thrift and happiness and religion and health. Will you please look at this statement:

"Cost of alcoholic drinks in the United States annually:

Direct outlay for drink	$725,467,028
Seven per cent. on the 10,000,000,000 which the nation should possess, but has been destroyed by the traffic	700,000,000
Direct loss of wages	7,903,844
Ten per cent. on the capital employed in the manufacture	25,848,081
Ten per cent. on capital employed in saloons	36,254,700
Charity bestowed on the poor	14,000,000
Loss by sea and land	50,000,000
Court, police, hospital expenses, charity, litigation, insurance	207,266,550
Total	$1,866,642,703

This nation received in return for this traffic, 500 murders, 500 snicides, 100,000 criminals, 200,000 paupers, 60,000 deaths from drunkenness, 600,000 besotted drunkards, 600,000 moderate drinkers who will be sots ten years hence, 500,000 homes destroyed, 1,000,000 children worse than orphaned. And if the country shonld be searched from the center to circumference, it would be impossible to find any good resulting from this traffic, or a single reason why it should exist longer."

If that seems too large, here are figures furnished to a member of the British Parliament, upon inqniry, from the Treasnry Department of the United States. It is official and represents only liquors upon which tax has actnally been paid. Not nearly all that is consumed, as every one knows:

"The returns for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, are as follows—

Spirits distilled from whatever materials, gallons	57,459,989
Ale, beer, lager beer, and porter, barrels	9,902,353
Imported spirits of all kinds, gallons	1,386,670
Imported wines in casks and bottles, gallons	5,723,469

The following is a statement of the amounts of special or license taxes paid to the government by dealers in liqnors during the same year:

Retail dealers in spirituous liquors, $25 each	$3,840,469
Wholesale dealers in spirituous liquors, $100 each	419,729
Retail dealers in malt liquors exclusively, $20 each	147,801
Wholesale dealers in malt liquors exclusively, $50 each	42,000

Thus it appears that there were upwards of 166,000 liqnor dealers in the country that year.

From the above, and other data, the Hon. Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, estimates the amonnt of money annually expended in the United States for liqnor by consumers to be nearly $596,000,000.

Respectfnlly,
GREEN B. BAUM, Commissioner."

The Raleigh News furnished not long since this estimate:

"Not less than six millions of dollars are spent in the bar-rooms of North Carolina in a year. The last annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue fixes the nnmber of liqnor saloons in the State at 1,884. It is fair to assnme that they average $10 per day for drinks sold, or $18,840 for the lot. Dednct the fifty-two Snndays, and we have a grand aggregate of $5,899,820. Add what is sold on Sunday in violation of the law, and the figures will easily reach $6,000,000. The sum of ten cents a glass will cover sixty million drinks. For this the Moffet law would return $1,500,000 taxes."

As to the Moffet law, we desire its adoption if prohibition cannot be secured. Bnt on principle we are opposed to all licensure of liqnor selling, because it makes the State a party to the commission of the very crime it pnnishes.

We go no fnrther than to give some estimates of the immense quantity of liqnor drank, and the vast amonnt of money a thonsands times worse than wasted in this traffic. That crime and poverty are in due proportion no observing person will deny, and that the vast amount of governmental expenses accrne from crime and poverty needs no demonstration. All this leaves ont of account the reverse, of health and wealth and happiness from improved morality. These hints are thrown out hastily. We have at hand the most satisfactory evidence of the value of a prohibitory law in Maine, where it has fought its way through all possible opposition until now both political parties favor prohibition, and it wonld be political death to any candidate for office to oppose it.

It is too late now to expect anything by our present Legislature, and in fact from any Legislatnre it could never be soon enongh, to accomplish prohibition without first secnring the approbation of the people, Bnt it is well nevertheless to bring this matter prominently before the people. The time must come when absolnte prohibition of the sale of liqnors by law will be an accomplished fact. It mnst come, for there is no other way to arrest the tide of ignorance, poverty and crime which is swelling into such alarming proportions.

Rev. W. H. Clagett closed a meeting at Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 14th ult. Sixty-eight persons joined the Presbyterian church, and some persons other churches. Assisted by Wm. Hamilton, he began a meeting at Holton, Kansas, on the 16th ult.

ONCE MORE.

And once more only (unless there shonld arise some reason now unforeseen to justify a continnance) we discuss the question of the preaching of the Gospel by unlicensed persons.

Our neighbor of the Southern Presbyterian answers none of the questions we proposed, and excuses himself thus:

"We really do not think it is obligatory on the Southern Presbyterian or on its editor as an individual to answer these questions, or even that it would be becoming to do so. It must be apparent from what we have already said that we regard it as wrong for even an inexperienced student to violate the Church's laws in the way specified; as still more wrong for a presbyter to encourage a young person in so doing; and most of all wrong for one of the Church's servants to whom she has intrnsted her candidates to teach them to despise her authority and to violate her laws. Of course, then, our good neighbor would not expect us to make a witness stand of this journal in so serious a matter."

Which we most heartily approve, and have from first to last acted upon in this discussion. We see no necessity for judicial investigation as to persons. We propose to deal with principles, not men. It seemed necessary to us, however, to know by what authority, if any, the wrong was done, that the best plan to suppress the evil might be adopted.

We most cordially join hands with our neighbor, and while we express our acknowledgement of his courtesy do respond most earnestly to the following:

"Dismissing, therefore, all the personal aspects of the question, we hope that both journals will be found side by side in the future as in the past contending for the maintenance of the laws of the Church, to the promotion of whose interests both are devoted."

And now we address ourselves to the main question. We asked in the offset with regard to preaching by unlicensed students: Is it done? and by what authority?

We give our readers what we have learned. Is it done? Certainly, and has been for very many years, so that those who believe that wrong becomes right by prescription may claim that the thing is no longer an evil. We adduce in support of the above the following from the Southern Presbyterian:

"At different times the Presbytery of Harmony has taken vigorous steps to prevent the violation of law in question; the Presbytery of Augusta has done the same thing, and so doubtless have others. During the last eighteen years at least—and, for aught we know, during the last fifty years—the Columbia Seminary students have had their attention called again and again to the violation of law involved in an unlicensed person's preaching or doing anything generally regarded as preaching. No doubt the same teaching is heard at Union Seminary."

So, too, the following action of the Synod of Virginia in 1860:

"Resolved, That while the Synod does highly approve of young men, while preparing for the ministry and before licensure, conducting prayer-meetings and exercising their gifts in exhortation, it would at the same time discourage and condemn the practice of their publicly preaching the word of God, and in the way in which it is commonly dispensed by the ordained minister."

And the Central Presbyterian, entirely non-committal as to the propriety, but sufficiently explicit as to the fact:

"Whether the custom here referred to, of candidates preaching before licensure, is censurable or not, we are satisfied the professors of our seminaries are not solely nor chiefly responsible. It was done to some extent, and perhaps as frequently as now, before a majority of our present professors were appointed to office, and had the tacit approval, in some instances, of pastors, church sessions and presbyteries."

It is not to be supposed that Presbyteries, Synods and Seminaries would stultify themselves by taking vigorous action to correct evils that did not exist. In fact the preaching of candidates before licensure is quite notorious.

By what authority is it done? By no authority whatever. Dr. Dabney's letter published two weeks since explains the whole matter. Applications are made by pastors and church sessions to the seminaries for the services of the young students. The professors make the requests known to the pupils, and the pupils assume the responsibility and do go off from the seminaries and preach without license or authority.

It would not seem difficult to say just where the fault lies—nor just how it can be remedied. Each Presbytery can instruct its candidates that this is not permissible, and we fully believe that the professors—some at least, all perhaps,—will be glad to have such an estoppage put to the practice. We know that some of the professors regard the practice we are discussing as entirely wrong, mainly from considerations of church order, but also because not advantageous to the candidates themselves. We hold that by this preaching the Form of Government is set aside and ignored. The provision in reference to this subject is not less sacred than any other; and if this may be set aside, why not any other? If a candidate may preach before licensure, why may he not baptize, moderate the session, receive members, &c., &c., before ordination? If one class of persons may set aside the law of the Church at pleasure, why not any class do the same? and what more is our ecclesiastical law than a mere rope of sand?

Bnt this is the most palpable lay evangelism, of which our last General Assembly said:

"The plain teaching of our standards is, that 'The Word of God is to be preached only by such as are sufficiently gifted, and also duly approved and called to that office.'—Larger Catechism, Q. 158. Indeed, the whole doctrine of our Church as to the Ministry, and the regulations under which men are inducted into it, shew that in addition to the call of God, the authority of the Church is necessary to call and appoint them to this work, whether as Pastors or Evangelists; and no amount of apparent or even real good which may be connected with the labors of unauthorized preachers or evangelists can justify us in dishonoring the ordinance of Christ, and by this means undermining His Church."

This was directed, it is true, against the "Lay Evangelists" conducting "Gospel Meetings," &c., and may, perhaps, be thought too severe upon what we are discussing, but it must not be forgotten that students until licensed are private members only of the Church, and that their preaching is lay preaching only. Their audiences, indeed, credit them with authority from Presbytery; bnt this so far from being a redeeming feature, only intensifies the wrong.

We remit the subject to the Presbyteries. With any action or with no action from them, we are conscience-clear.

COLPORTAGE

The Committee of Publication of our Church recommends the pamphlet of Rev. W. M. Wordsworth, Chairman of Colportage of the Presbytery of Winchester and says:

"The revival of interest in the colportage work has led to frequent inquiry as to the best practical methods of prosecuting it, and it has appeared to the Committee of Publication desirable to have, in permanent form, an outline of the plan approved by the Committee and recommended to the Presbyteries."

The pamphlet embodies the plan which has been so successfully pursued in Winchester Presbytery.

Rev. J. K. Hazen, Secretary of Publication, Richmond, Va., will forward a copy to any one who desires it.

WHITEVILLE CHURCH.

This church has made remarkably fine progress since its organization, and despite occasional drawbacks is now in a healthy condition. Accessions are quite regular. There have been five additions since May last. A large, fine organ has lately been substituted for the smaller one, which has been transferred to the Sabbath School. This school is very thrifty, and is growing finely, and is now probably the largest in the village.

RETURNED.

Rev. Dr. Brown has returned to Richmond and resumed his duties as editor of the Central Presbyterian. The Doctor was charmed with Florida and his numerous friends will be glad to learn received very great benefit from his short sojourn there. We welcome him back, and hope it may be very many days before a like trip will be a necessity.

WHITE PLAINS CHURCH.

In charge of H. B. Garris, as is the church at Whiteville, has very largely increased its membership within the past three years. The number of communicants has much more than doubled in that period.

Great improvements have been made in and around the Church, the members generally entering heartily into the work. The church lot has been enclosed, and a beautiful flower garden has been laid out and planted by the ladies of the congregation. The church building has been repaired within and without; a new pulpit now occupies the place of the old one, and the house is tightly sealed—outside it is well whitewashed.

The Sabbath School, which is under the superintendence of Captain D. J. Clark, has been reorganized within the past few months, and numbers over fifty scholars. Young and old attend it.

REV. DR. W. M. WINGATE.

At the request of a friend we reprint from the Biblical Recorder the following in reference to the life and death of Rev. Dr. Wingate, one of the most eminent Baptist divines of our State. It is well to have the record of such lives perpetnated. The tribnte is from the pen of Rev. Dr. Pritchard:

"There was an absolute want of selfishness in his nature, and the heart of a little innocent babe is not more pnre and sweet than was the spirit of this man of God. Never have I seen combined in any human being so much child-like simplicity of heart with such lofty powers of intellect. His trust in God seemed to be perfect, and his spirit always devotional. Christ was literally formed in him, the hope of glory.

"He loved Christ so supremely, he communed with Christ so closely, and he lived for Christ so constantly that towards the close of his life, and especially during his last illness, the glory of Christ seemed to shine in his very countenance.

"It was meet that such a life should be crowned by a beautiful and glorious death, and we are grateful that our Father in heaven so ordered it in his case. His wife told me that the day he died was the happiest day of his happy life. He knew that he was going to die, and when she placed her face beside his and asked him if he loved her, 'Yes, my precious wife,' answered he, and then he began to repeat the words, 'O the precious name of Jesus,' when she added, 'Ah! you love me, I know you love me, but you love that precious name ten thousand times more.' 'Yes,' said he, 'I do love Jesus ten thousand times more than all things else in this world.

"Just before he breathed his last his beloved physician informed me that he seemed to be conversing with the Saviour, as though he was personally present with him, and said: 'O, how delightful it is. I knew you would be with me when the time came, and I knew it would be sweet, bnt I did not know it would be so sweet as it is.'

"All that day his face shone as did that of Moses when he came from the presence of God in the mount, and when the snpreme honr came, the glory of God overshadowed that sacred chamber where the good man met his fate. I felt it to be there two days after his death, as I talked with his stricken wife and bereaved children, and heard them praise God in giving and taking snch a husband and father."

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will meet at St. Andrew's church, Moore county, N. C., Thursday, April 24th, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The usual blanks have been forwarded to the churches; those should be accurately filled and handed in when Presbytery meets in April.

J. P. McPHERSON,
Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Harmony stands adjonrned to meet at Darlington C. H. April 9th, 1879, at 7½ o'clock P. M.

W. A. GREGG, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Wilmington will meet in the Second church Wilmington on Wednesday, 2d April, 1879, at 7½ o'clock, P. M.

JAS. M. SPRUNT, Stated Clerk.

Arrangements have been made with the Railroad and Steamboat lines to extend the nsual courtesy of redneed fare.

Delegates will please report promptly at Second Presbyterian church on their arrival in the city.

The Presbytery of Red River will meet Thursday, April 3d, at 7 P. M., in Vienna, La. The Sessional and Sabbath School reports are required from each church.

CYRUS HARRINGTON, Stated Clerk.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

It has always puzzled us, how any one could fail with liabilities in the millions even though assets were well up in the hundreds of thonsands, but how Archbishop Purcell could fail for six millions of dollars with assets of only fifty thousand is perfectly stunning. From our standpoint of comparatively desperate impecnniosity we can never hope to rise to an adequate conception of such financial exploits. Every one—Protestant and Romanist alike—accords to the venerable prelate honesty of purpose, but it must be conceded that he would make a very poor Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Our venerable and much beloved friend "D. L." will pardon us for not agreeing with him as to the impropriety of persons communicating their names for publication with their articles, to newspapers.

The publication of a name does not imply lack of humility. We ask frequently to have the use of the name; have asked it of our correspondent, though without securing more than initials. And here is a case in point: much as our readers appreciate the articles of "D. L." for their own intrinsic value, they prize them doubly when they know from whose pen they emanate. Ripe experience, sanctified wisdom and lovely Christian character do and of right ought to add strength to any utterances of man. Readers always like to know who writes that they may form an estimate of the knowledge, sincerity of motive, extent or degree of scholastic research &c., &c., upon which the writings are based. We take one case as a clear illustration of our meaning though many might be produced. We ask pardon of the brother for using his name. The articles on Romanism which appeared in our paper a few months since were admirable productions. Had they appeared anonymously, however, readers might have doubted the accuracy of the writer's information, or had misgivings on other points; bnt the name of Rev. H. B. Pratt left nothing to be desired. With that name there could be no doubt as to their absolute accuracy and perfect truthfulness.

We are enabled to state authoritatively that the books of the Treasurer of Publication are kept to record all details accurately, so that the forthcoming Treasurer's Report to the General Assembly will be full, exact and complete. For the first time it will give in one statement the whole, receipts and disbnrsements, assets and liabilities—publishing account and all. Heretofore only receipts and disbursements have been stated, while the Secretary's Report has nsually contained a supplementary statement showing the assets and liabilities approximately.

Our good brother Rev Saml. M. Smith, has left the forlorn ranks of bachelordom, and registered among the benedicts. Our congratulations we extend.

In a private letter to us, Dr. Smith, of Union Theological Seminary, says he would have written earlier, bnt that, for reasons given, our remarks on the preaching of unlicensed candidates did not reach him. The Doctor has thrown a flood of light on the whole subject, and we only wish it had come to hand earlier. We have just a chance to wedge it in before going to press. The subject is certainly now well before the public and the church, and any remarks are in order.

OLD AGE.

Dr. Plumer's tribute to the memory of our departed mother in Israel, Mrs. Vass, the elder, was very beautiful and a fit token of love from one aged and waiting pilgrim to another who had crossed over before him. Thus, I thought, Mr. Greathoart might have written of Christiana, when she entered in at the gate. "At her departure the children wept. But Mr. Greatheart and Mr. Valiant played upon the well-tuned cymbal and harp for joy."

Mrs. Vass was greatly honored not only in having been enabled to live in the glory of God and for the good of her neighbor all her days, but in that during an old age prolonged far beyond the ordinary limit, she still brought forth fruit, and exemplified the beauty of holiness well and clearly when burdened with the weight of near a hnndred years. A very great and nnusnal privilege to be able to walk steadily on to the very last, with hope and faith and love all in active exercise nndimmed, unfaltering and unchilled. This is the especial blessing of old age, and should be the especial design of those who stand and wait with failing strength and increasing infirmities for the messenger who releases them. More good may be done in these last few years, by an example of patience and faith and conrage and cheerfnlness nnder such circumstances than in the busy years of life.

Ninety-six years! what a volnme of history is comprised in that period; and of those who have lived through it were any as much impressed by the great events with which they were contemporary, as we are who can survey them all as it were in one glance? Perhaps none, even of the intelligent and well-informed classes of society.

This winter there died about a mile from Chapel Hill an aged woman who had connted, according to the lowest calculation made by herself or her family, ninety-two years. Some thought ninety-six. She had lived hnmbly and obscurely all these years, only concerned to make both ends meet at the close of each, and often not succeeding. She had raised her children, living first on one poor farm and then on another in Orange county, always poor, hard working, and decent. She sat by the wide rnde fire-place of her old house last fall, looking out with dim eyes upon a world that had never had much for her beyond her daily bread and daily toil. What had the Battle of Waterloo been to her? Or the death of George Washington? Or the French Revolution? Or the accession of Victoria? Or the great Civil War? Or any of the wonderful inventions of the age? She had known of none of all these things. She was contented and cheerful, and waited for death without fear, having been a member of the Methodist Church longer than she could tell. Perhaps she was one of Whitfield's converts. She said that she could not tell how she knew that she wonld go safe when the summons came, but she knew it. And so she did. And this is all we can say of any, just as it was all that could be said of Methnselah at the end of his nearly ten centuries—"and he died." All ends at last; the pains and sorrows, the cares and anxieties, the griefs and fears, the joys and the successes, the triumphs the gains of the longest earthly career are soon summed up and over.

"A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave, Man passeth from life to his rest in the grave."

If it were not that long life is so often alluded to in Scripture as among the special blessings and gifts of God, I should not think it desirable. To outlive the friends of our youth, and our riper years, to survive all our hopes, desires and ambitions, even if our mental and bodily faculties do not fail, surely this is not to be devoutly wished yet we have seen that the grace of God can make extreme old age beautiful and useful as well as venerable. Happy the family that possesses a shock of corn thus ripening for the harvest, and especially blessed are the children brought np to minister to these waiting saints, and taught such lessons by them as no other teachers in life can give.

Twenty-five years ago I transcribed carefully as thinking it good, a sonnet which now twenty-five years later, I feel to be good. Perhaps some readers of the N. C. P. may enjoy it with me. Old age is not without its compensations even in reckoning over its losses.

"Adieu my youth! without one sigh, adieu!
Deceits, enchantments, struggles, longings, dreams,
Delusions, follies; (no light load me seems.)
Take all! Cast to the winds thy retinue,
The mind, swelled out with mists that hide from view
A host of daring thoughts that scorn the wise,—
And wandering Love, fresh arrows as he flies
Transfixing still,—and hatreds fierce tho' few.
An eve serene and still, my soul sore tried
With early warfare, courts. My youth adieu!
But not adieu forever. Yet again
I trust to meet, to dwell in thee;—not vain
And frail, and fallen as now, but born anew,
Stainless, redeemed, immortal, glorified!"

GOOD NEWS FROM MILL RIVER CHURCH.

MILL RIVER, HENDERSON CO., N. C.,
Friday, March. 7, '79.

We are in the midst of a precious season of grace. The Holy Spirit has descended upon us with power. Already thirty-five persons have been brought so directly under the influence of the Spirit as to be led to seek pastoral advice and counsel. Among these are many of the people of God and some backsliders who had brought reproach upon the Church and had for years been cut off from its communion. At our sacramental occasion on last Sabbath four united with the church on profession of their faith, and on yesterday twelve were taken under the care of the session for instruction, oversight and future examination. Nearly all of these are cherishing a hope in Christ, others are awakened and others are believing whose affinities will lead them to other denominations. New cases of interest and fresh triumphs of grace are occurring every day. At the close of the service yesterday for practical consideration, while there was no abatement of interest and no diminution of the congregation, we suspended public exercises until Sabbath. Although the weather has been so beautiful as to invite the farmers to the pressing work of the season and it has thus been a trial of the faith of God's people, secular work has been laid aside and the people have flocked to the house of God. We have had a solid week of gospel privileges. The pastor has been assisted by the faithful and earnest labors of brothers Gammon, Davis and Graves. Realizing our isolated position we had formed a sort of sub-Presbytery of the trans-montano section, and resolved to meet together at our several churches for conference on subjects of practical interest and for devotional exercises. The Lord has smiled on our first meeting and made it the occasion of a rich blessing. Our first conference was on the day for prayer for colleges and schools. After sermon by Bro. Davis we held our conference, the topic selected being Family Religion, after which we held devotional exercises in accordance with the Assembly's recommendation—the other topics discussed, were, The elements of genuine revival—and the Sacrament of the Lord's supper. The congregation evinced a deep interest in the discussions and the opportunity was used for making practical applications and suggestions. Some of the striking features of this work are

1st. God had moved his people to prayer before the services began—the weekly prayer-meetings had been organized but a short time, and prayer had been the theme of pulpit ministrations on several occasions. Some signified their desire to unite with the church, and some of going before the session and making confession and seeking restoration, and some were enquiring the way of salvation.

2d. It was made manifest that the work was not of man, the simplest word of the humble Christian and the plainest exposition of the truth were made the instruments of the Spirit, and each day results were attained which were beyond our faith and expectation. God was better to us than our fears.

3d. Many heads of households who were scarcely embraced in the faith of God's people were snbdned and broken by the power of grace.

4th. Beginning in the house of God the effect of this visitation is that the Spirit is as pronounced in the case of the people of God as in the case of sinners. There have been strifes and divisions here, and some have for years withdrawn from the sanctuary but they seem to be forgotten, and as God's people have been brought near to the Divine Head they have realized the communion of saints and been brought nearer to one another.

5th. God has placed the seal of his approval upon the efforts for faithful administration of the discipline of His house.

Our God is sovereign. His grace unlimited. No difficulties are too great for the Omnipotent Spirit. Blessed be His Holy name.

PREACHING BY UNLICENSED CANDIDATES

U. T. SEMINARY, March 8, '79.

My attention has been called to a paragraph on this subject, in your paper of Feb. 12th.

Concurring fully in the statements and views of my colleague Dr. Dabney, I beg leave to add a few items on the subject, to which you have so properly called attention.

From my earliest opportunities of observation, more than forty years ago, the irregularity of which you complain has been a sore evil in my estimation. I have, while tutor in the seminary two years, and professor twenty-five, discouraged the practice so far as I had opportunity. Of course, as it is a matter entirely under the jurisdiction of the Presbyteries, I have neither claimed nor exercised any official authority in the premises. Students not licensed, have been encouraged to enter on efforts to extend religious knowledge among the young, in the duties of catechumens in Sabbath Schools and Bible classes, holding prayer-meetings and by means of visits to those needing or seeking religious instruction. These are offices of Christian service in which all laymen of intelligence and piety may be fully engaged.

The Presbytery of Augusta overtured the Assembly of 1874, asking some action favoring the employment of candidates in such work during vacations, as a measure likely to be productive of direct good to the objects of such catechetical instruction, and at the same time of indirect benefit to candidates as part of their training. The Assembly declined any immediate action, but referred to a committee the inquiry "whether any, and if any, what changes may be desirable in our methods of training candidates." A report, four members concurring, was presented by the chairman of the committee to the Assembly of 1876, and, on his suggestion, its consideration was referred to the Assembly of 1877. The Presbytery of New Orleans overtured the Assembly of 1877, asking a further postponement of the consideration of the subject. The Committee on Bills and Overtures reported in reply to said proposition a paper based on the report of 1876, which, after an extended and spirited discussion of nearly two days, was passed by a heavy majority, having been amended in some unimportant particulars. Among the recommendations to Presbyteries in their relations to the training of candidates, the following is pertinent to the matter now before us: "To improve candidates in 'aptness to teach' the Presbyteries are advised to provide opportunities for such as need additional advantages by granting them permission for a limited period and a prescribed field of labors, to conduct public religious services, involving the exposition of the Scriptures, and provide for the adequate superintendence of such candidates, and for a reasonable compensation for their services, and no candidate shall assume such privileges except by leave of Presbytery." (Italics used are mine.)

As usual, good legislation does not always secure good action. But so far as our highest Church authority can affect the matter before us, there is no occasion for any action by the professors, and if Presbyteries will take "care" of candidates, there need be no ground of complaint. The action of the Assembly is designed to regulate customs which have grown up in the Church, or rather existed, perhaps for over half a century. As in other similar matters those candidates most forward in this catechetical work are sometimes those needing most of the care of Presbytory, in the premises. But the Assembly proposes to make no invidious distinctions, leaving to the Presbyteries the whole management of the matter. Every Presbytery could, either by a standing committee for this special service, or by its sustentation or evangelistic committee, place this "irregularity" under judicious control, greatly to the benefit of feeble and vacant churches, and of candidates also. To legislation let our Presbyteries add action.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The South-Atlantic is at hand, with several articles of special interest. A very elegant eulogy upon Sarah Helen Whitman is furnished by John S. Long, Esq., of Newbern, N. C.; Col. John H. Wheeler provides a sketch of Cornelius Harnett, which is of special local interest; the gifted Paul H. Hayne is represented in a poem entitled "To Bayard Taylor Beyond Us." Other pieces there are of merit. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, editor, Wilmington, N. C. $3 per annum.

Tracts 185, 186, 187, 188, from the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, Pa. 185, None but Jesus. By Rev. T. W. Hooper, D. D.; 16 pages. 186, Christ in Front. By Rev. A. F. Dickson. 12 pages.

Like the other two tracts already mentioned, by Dr. Plumer ("The Worship of God" and "Christ the Head of the Church") these are directed against the substitution by Rome of something for Christ. The "Virgin Mary" is not offered in the Bible as our Intercessor, nor the priest as our Confessor. These four tracts are excellent, and in very neat and convenient form (24 mo.), and by brethren esteemed in our Southern Assembly. Brother Dickson has gone to his reward, but his works do remain and testify to his godly work. They should be circulated.

(1.) The Worship of God; 16 pages. (2.) Christ is the Head of the Church; 16 pages. By Rev. W. S. Plumer, D. D. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

These two excellent tracts are received from their honored and wise author. They present the truth as to their subjects, in opposition to the claims and false teaching of Rome.

The Work of Colportage. From Presbyterian Committee of Publication. J. L. Shotwell, Agent, Richmond, Va. 10 cents.

Prepared by Rev. M. W. Woodworth, the efficient Chairman of Colportage in Winchester Presbytery, with an introduction by the Secretary, Rev. J. K. Hazen. It will be well for all interested in the best practical method of conducting colportage work to send for and read carefully this pamphlet. No more important work demands our attention. This tract appeared first in numbers in the Central Presbyterian.

The Sanitarian. A monthly magazine devoted to the preservation of health, mental and physical culture. A. N. Bell, editor and publisher, 47 Lafayette Place, New York. March, 1879. $3 a year. Contents: The New Protective Principle in Sanitation, H. B. Storer, M. D.; Diphtheria, New York Tenement Houses, Doctors, or Science of Medical Thought Among the People, W. R. Bartlett, M. D.; Advertising Quackery; Inunction, H. Guard Knaggs, M. D., F. L. S.; Bread, Prof. DeChaumont; Public Health Association, Rev. T. Angell; Editor's Table; Literature for the Month.

The article on "Public Health Association" gives a fearful exhibition of the adulteration practiced in all articles of food. It should arouse action to abate it. "New York Tenement Houses" will interest.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE TWO KEYS.

Christian Observer:

If we would be growing Christians we must be praying Christians and studying Christians. These are the two keys that unlock the treasuries that belong to the Christian.

NEED OF PRAYER.

Bishop Cumming:

The man that has an empty cup may pray, and should pray that it may be filled; so he that has a full cup ought to pray that he may hold it firmly. It needs prayer in prosperity that we may have grace to use it, as truly, as it needs prayer in poverty that we may have grace to bear it.

MORBID DENOMINATIONALISM.

Examiner and Chronicle:

In utter contrast with sound and healthful denominationalism is the spirit of the man who is nothing if not Baptist, or Methodist, or Episcopalian; who sees everything through denominational spectacles, and never opens his mouth except to proclaim the glories of "my Church," and the soundness of "my creed;" who distorts the conviction—which we concede his right to cherish—that his denomination is nearer right than any other, into a belief that his denomination is absolutely perfect, and every other is utterly devoid of excellence, and insufficient for good.

SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

Evangelical Messenger:

Bishop Simpson, in speaking of ministers manifesting the spirit of Christ among men, crowds an immense truth into a short sentence, thus: "To manifest it successfully, you must have it." Nothing could be truer than this. Only a partaker of the divine life, dwelling in the fellowship and power of the Lord, can show forth Christ among men. Christ shines not through opaque selfishness and sin into the faces of men, but through hearts all luminous with the fire of divine life and love. Christ in us, the hope of glory shines out through the veil of flesh. To attempt a manifestation of the spirit of Christ with a carnal heart, is only a species of ecclesiastical legerdemain and spiritual ventriloquism.

"LAW" VERSUS "PRAYER."

Christian Treasury:

Our modern philosophers tell us that God cannot, and therefore does not, answer prayer because the laws of nature are fixed and inexorable; bnt they cannot deny that man can and does answer prayer every day, for at the request of his fellow-men he utilizes or overcomes natnre's laws, and this by the exercise of his will, intelligence, and strength. When a man is asked to shake an apple from a tree, and complies, he utilizes the law of gravitation. Thus man can and does answer the prayers of his fellow man by the control he has over natnre. The "reign of law," which we are told is too strong for the Creator, is not too strong for the creature. Therefore, the creature is superior to the Creator. I believe none but avowed atheists will be able to assert that there is any faulty link in this reductio ad absurdum.

THE GREAT NEED.

Christian Weekly:

"What the Church needs is a deep and genuine revival of religion; not the presence of special religious interest in many localities, nor even in great commercial centres, such as have caused devout thanksgiving in years past; bnt, more than these, the Church needs a revival epoch, a spiritual awakening that, like a tide-wave, shall roll over all Church life, so broad, so powerful, as to form an era in Church history. This alone can bring new life to a dead and formal churchism, and quicken it with a power that will save it from reproach. This alone can stem the tide of worldliness and skepticism spreading over the land."

REPUTATION—CHARACTER.

S. S. Times:

Commonly a good reputation and a good character go together; he who is called worthy is worthy. But a man sometimes has a better reputation than his real character warrants; and again a man's reputation is not as good as he deserves. If the choice must be made it is better to have a good character with a bad reputation, than a bad character with a good reputation. Yet that is not the popular view of the case. Most persons are desirous of being thought well of; whether they deserve well or not. There are few who really prefer to guard their characters at the cost of their reputation; who will yield the good opinion of all their fellows rather than swerve in the least from the right to appear to advantage in the sight of the world. Some who admit that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches" fail to realize that it is better to deserve a good name than to have it. No good name is deserved unless it rests on a good character. Character is the great thing. Let that be sought at every cost—the cost of even reputation, if need be.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopedia is the work of John Kitto, D D, F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with nnmerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopœdia. Publishers price is $5 00

A letter dated January 31st has just been received. The families of all our missionaries were in good health. Mr. and Mrs. Boyle are now living in the country, twelve miles from Campinas, and Mr. Boyle is engaged in the evangelistic work. There are about 180 pupils in the two departments of the college. Mr. and Mrs. Dabney sailed from New York the 5th of February, in the steamer Para, and will soon, it is hoped, reach Campinas, and furnish the reinforcement of laborers so long and earnestly desired.—Central Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

Union prayer meetings are still continued in Richmond, Va.

Rev. Harvey Gilmore has found a field of labor in Berkely county, Va.

Rev. Joseph Brown's postoffice address has been changed to Bryan, Texas.

The postoffice address of Rev. W. F. Wilhelm is changed from Blacksburg, Va., to Lewisburg, W. Va.

Rev. H. F. Hoyt of Darien Ga., has a call to the Presbyterian churches of Leesburg, Newton and Albany.

Rev. Dr. John. S. Moore, of McKinney, Texas, has been called to the pastorate of the church at Sherman, Texas.

Rev. C. E. Chichester, financial agent of Columbia Seminary, has declined a call from the church at Tallahassee, Fla.

Dr. Moses D. Hoge has consented to preach the Baccalaureate Sermon at the next Commencement of Due West (S. C.) College.

The ladies of Danville, Va., have realized about $180 from a supper and dinner given by them. The ladies have formed a missionary society also.

In Dr. Stuart Robinson's church, the Second Presbyterian of Louisville, Ky., a series of meetings are in progress. Dr. R. is assisted by Rev. M. Van Lear.

The First Presbyterian church in Edgefield, Tenn., has been greatly revived. Rev. E. O. Frierson, the pastor, was assisted by Rev. M. L. Frierson and Rev. J. W. Hoyt.

Dallas Presbytery at a late pro re nata meeting placed the call in the hands of Dr. Moore, and a committee was appointed for his installation on the second Sabbath in May.

The congregation of Petersburg, W. Va., is very small, but an earnest effort to repair their church is being made, and the ladies have raised by their Mite Society, of only eighteen members, $134.

Rev. G. A. Russell has accepted a call to the Presbyterian church at Franklin, Tenn., and will enter upon his labors immediately. His postoffice address is changed from Brownsville to his present location.

At the village of Belle Haven, in Accomac county, Va., Rev. B. B. Stinson and Rev. J. G. Anderson have been holding a protracted meeting. Many have been greatly concerned and on February 19th twelve or thirteen united with the church on profession.

At Anchorage, Ky., for several months there has been a good state of spiritual feeling. Ten persons have united with the Presbyterian church since the communion preceding the one held on Sabbath, 2d inst. Of fifty pupils in Bellewood Seminary forty-two are professors of religion.

At the First Presbyterian church Friday and Saturday night Dr. G. B. Strickler, of Tinkling Spring church, preached two powerful and searching discourses to deeply attentive audiences. On Sunday the sacrament was administered, and eleven persons on profession of faith and one by certificate were added to the church.—Staunton Vindicator.

FUNERAL OF REV. ISAAC COCHRAN.—On Sabbath, 23d of February, the Rev. Dr. T. E. Peck, of Union Theological Seminary, preached the funeral sermon of the Rev. Isaac Cochran, at Buffalo church, in the Presbytery of Roanoke. Mr. Cochran had been for many years pastor of this church, ministering to a people who loved and honored him. On the occasion of the funeral sermon, as we learn from a correspondent, the church was full, and but for the bad condition of the roads there would have been many more than could have gotten into the house. A dozen different congregations were represented of all denominations.—Central Presbyterian.

MONTGOMERY PRESBYTERY.—At a pro re nata meeting at Christiansburg, Va., on Wednesday, Feb. 26th, 1879, the pastoral relation between the Rev. W. F. Wilhelm and the Blacksburg church was dissolved, and the Rev. Charles A. Miller was directed to declare the pulpit vacant. Mr. Wilhelm goes at once to Lewisburg, West Virginia, where he is to assist the Rev. M. L. Lacy. Mr. Wilhelm will carry with him from this Presbytery the affection and esteem of all his brethren. He is one of the oldest members of our Presbytery and we give him up with great reluctance.—Central Presbyterian.

NORTHERN.

The Presbyterian Weekly says: Forty seven persons added to Dr. Leyburn's church last Sabbath.

The late Charles E. Morris of Philadelphia bequeathed $1,000 to Holland Memorial Mission in Philadelphia.

Rev. Wm. Johnson of East St. Louis, Ill., expects to join the Syrian mission under care of the Synod of Southern Illinois.

The North Broad street Presbyterian church in Philadelphia has paid off a debt and lifted a mortgage of eighteen years standing.

Central Congregational church of Boston has voted a call to the Rev. Dr. Duryea of Brooklyn. This is the second time the call has been made.

The Rev. Marcellus Herberg, recently an Evangelical Lutheran minister minister, has applied to be admitted a candidate for the Episcopal ministry.

Mrs. Clarissa Cook of Davenport, Iowa, has bequeathed $100,000 to the Protestant Episcopal diocese of that State, $50,000 to found a home for the friendless and other large sums to church societies.

By the will of Mrs. Gridley of Buffalo, N. Y., $5,000 are left to be equally divided between Auburn Theological Seminary and some other causes; $1,000 additional are bequeathed to public charities.

The American Bible Revision Committee has just held a monthly meeting in New York city. The Old Testament Company revised the Books of Kings and Chronicles a second time; the New Testament Company completed the final revision of the Gospels.

The following Presbyterian ministers have lately died: Rev. James W. Clark in Clarinda, Iowa, on February 16th, aged 64 years; Rev. Enos A. Osborne, a member of the Presbytery of Newark, on February 25th, in his 89th year; Rev. L. S. Pomeroy, of the Presbytery of Lyons, of paralysis, at his house in Savannah, N. Y.

The latest statistics give the Episcopal Church in America 48 dioceses, 13 missionary districts, 63 bishops, 3,339 clergymen, 2,900 parishes and 312,718 communicants, showing a large increase in the number of the latter. During the year 66 clergymen died and 193 were ordained. There were 46,054 baptisms and 25,190 confirmations. In the Sunday schools there are 265,554 scholars.

The annual report of Presbyterian Orphanage of Philadelphia has been made. It is the first report, the Orphanage having just completed the first year of its existence. Twenty-one children between six and ten years of age have been in the Orphanage since its opening. The managers desire to build a house for the Orphans in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and will when $20,000 are subscribed.

It gives us great pleasure to announce that the Reformed Church in the United States, formerly known as the German Reformed, has entered upon the work of foreign missions under its own board and management. The Rev. Ambrose D. Gring and wife were recently commissioned, and are now on their way to Japan. He is a son of the pastor of the (German) Reformed Church at Shrewsbury, Pa. He expects to reside for a time at Tokio while learning the language, and to gather information there that shall decide his future location.—Christian Intelligencer.

At his residence, in Iredell county, on the 19th ult., Mr. EBENEZER HOLMAN, in his 74th year. Mr. Holman was born and raised in the immediate vicinity where he spent his long and useful life; died with the confidence and respect of the whole community. He had been a consistent member of the Baptist Church for forty-five years "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace." (Com)

At her father's house, in Rocky River congregation, Cabarrus county, February 19th, 1879, MARGARET J. HARRIS, aged 18 years.

Maggie was one of those characters we sometimes see among men whom all love. Her constantly amiable, cheerful disposition shed upon all with whom she was thrown a magic influence like that of cheery sunshine. To these natural graces a bright, hopeful Christian's faith had added strength and symmetry of character and the self-sacrificing spirit of the Master.

On February 17th (Monday) she was in her usual place at school in Rocky River Academy. It was a cold, dismal, rainy day, and she was suffering with a cold; but with a characteristic unselfishness she said she wanted to encourage her teachers all she could. On Wednesday her disease was recognized as a dangerous type of congestive pneumonia, and though all the attention that agonized love could render, and all the remedies that medical skill could suggest were faithfully applied, before midnight she gasped out her young life on earth, and as we humbly trust entered upon Life Eternal in Heaven.

Her grief-stricken schoolmates and a large number of sympathizing friends bore her body to the church she loved, and after funeral services conducted by her weeping Pastor and teacher, deposited it in the grave in hope of a blessed resurrection.

May her young, joyous, lovely life, leave a fragrance of sweet memories upon the hearts of all her youthful companions. May her sudden, and therefore terrible, and yet hopeful death, warn them "to be also ready," and to seek that Saviour in whom she trusted. And may a merciful God heal and comfort the broken hearts of her parents and brother.

PASTOR.

TO MINISTERS AND ELDERS IN ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The New Book of Church Order will come up at the next meeting of Presbytery (Eno Church, April 23d,) for a final vote. It is highly important that every one who will be called to vote upon it, should do so intelligently or with a conscientious regard for the interests of our beloved church. The General Assembly ordered a copy of the latest revision (1878) to be sent to the Stated Clerk of each Presbytery. All others desiring a copy, could purchase it at a small cost from the "Presbyterian Publishing Co.," Richmond and St. Louis. Not knowing how far brethren have supplied themselves with copies, I offer to send any person, postage free, a copy of the New Book for fifteen cents, enclosed to me in postage stamps with address, if sent within three weeks from date.

F. H. JOHNSTON, Chairman
of Presbyterial Committee.
WINSTON, N. C., Feb. 18, 1879.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE NEXT General Assembly.

At this time I desire to make known to our Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published on a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the published report of the last Assembly—the only one at which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer—and dishonored by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee appointed over the business, their hearty assent to publish the report of the next Assembly upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from many restrictions by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method which prevented me from making my last report as complete as I desired, I hope by a plan of my own, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the Church with (what it has never enjoyed) prompt intelligence of the proceedings, and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time. G. L. WOLFE.

PEACE INSTITUTE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, RALEIGH, N. C.

THE SPRING TERM commences on the 30th January and closes the 11th June 1879.

The Principals feel no hesitation in assuring the patrons of the Institution that never since its organization has every department of instruction been filled by more competent and successful Teachers than during the fall term just ending. The progress and improvement of the pupils has been highly satisfactory in every branch of study.

Large Libraries.

By far the largest library in the world is the National Library at Paris, which in 1874 contained 2,000,000 printed books and 150,000 manuscripts. Which the next largest is it is difficult to say, for the British Museum and the Imperial Library of St. Petersburg both had in 1874 1,100,000 volumes. After them comes the Royal Library of Munich with its 900,000 books. The Vatican Library at Rome is sometimes erroneously supposed to be among the largest, while in point of fact it is surpassed, so far as the number of volumes goes, by more than than sixty European collections. It contains 105,000 printed books and 25,500 manuscripts. The National Library at Paris is one of the very oldest in Europe, having been founded in 1360, while the British Museum dates from 1753, or a time more than 400 years later. In the United States the largest is the Library of Congress at Washington, which in 1874 contained 261,000 volumes. The Boston Public followed very closely after it with 260,500 volumes, and the Harvard University collection came next with 200,000. The Astor and Mercantile, of New York, are next, each having 148,000. Among the colleges after Harvard's Library comes Yales with 100,000. Dartsmouth's is next with 50,000, and then come in order Cornell with 40,000; the University of Virginia with 36,000; Bowdoin with 35,000; the University, of South Carolina, with 30,000; Ann Arbor, 30,000; Amherst, 29,000; Princeton, 28 000; Wesleyan, 25,500; and Columbia, 25,000.—Scientific American.

A Wonderful Candle.

After the company had assembled, they were invited to go to the top of the house. We marched up the stairs in procession, the ladies having taken the arms of the learned men. We were ushered into a large room, from which all the furniture had been removed. Camp-chairs were arranged in rows, and were quickly filled. The room opened into another, which also was filled with camp-chairs. Between the rooms was a high table, on which were mysterious scientific looking jars, out of which came small copper wires in fine coils. The tops of these seemed to be connected together by finer wires. On the table, besides these, were a gas-drop light, a common tallow candle, a little bronze boat containing oil, with a wick at one end, a rather shabby-looking dark candle-stick, or what looked like one, and some other things, the uses of which I did not know.

Fastened against the wall was a large square, made of three colors of silk, broad stripes of blue, red, and green, surrounded by a wide yellow border, and I wondered to myself if it were a banner, and to what nation it belonged.

"In very old times," the Professor began, "people went to bed with the chickens when the sun had set. When they wanted to sit up a little later, all the light they knew how to make was from the blaze of burning wood. After a while, some observing old fellow noticed that when grease fell into the fire, the blaze became much brighter; so he dipped a reed or rush into oil and set one end on fire, and thus rush-lights came into fashion. Old books and songs tell about the farthing rush-lights. They were sold four for a penny, and a very dismal illumination they must have made. Then people began to put oil in cups, preparing a rind of pork to set in the oil for a wick, and burned that. The great feasts of the Romans, in the old classical heathen times, before the birth of our Saviour, must have been most dingy affairs, for all they had for lighting up their tables were these lamps." And here the professor put out all the gas-lights, and applied a match to the wiek at one end of the little bronze Roman boat.

It was highly classical and very elegant in shape; but the light it gave was so utterly dismal that all the company uttered a funny little groan, and a handsome old gentleman, who sat next to me, said:

"Well, after that specimen of old Roman brilliancy, I am quite reconciled to paying my big gas-bills."

"After this," continued the professor, "candles were invented. To show you what the first ones were like, I tried to get as bad a one as possible. It should evolve or unfurl the traditional 'shroud' in the light, and be otherwise disagreeable; but this one, I am afraid, will be far more respectable and well behaved than the tallow candles of our ancestors."

Here he lit the candle, and another dismal groan saluted the forlorn yellow light. It looked as if it had lost all its friends. It sputtered and guttered; tallow tears ran down its greasy sides, and very soon it became,—if not a broken-hearted, certainly a broken-backed tallow candle.

"It was not so many years ago," said the professor, "that candles were in general use, though greatly improved in quality; for the next invention—the argand burner, or astral lamp—could only be afforded by well-to-do people. The flame was fed by the oil made from the blubber of the sperm whale, which was rather expensive; but the lamp made a great improvement in artificial light. Many of us can remember the astral lamp, which gave a soft, pleasant, steady light under its glass shade, quite sufficient to render a room of ordinary size cheerful and cozy. Gas had been discovered, and utilized in places of business a long time before introduced into our better houses; and then it was that petroleum or kerosene took the place of candles in poorer localities, and it is still in universal use.

And now the professor, putting out the hateful sodium light, touched a hidden spring. In an instant—like the winking of an eye—a tiny, but most glorious, star, or what it was still more like, or was really, a bit of imprisoned lightning, flashed out of the end of a coiled copper wire, with thousands of luminous silver rays emanating from it.

"A—h, how beautiful! how superb!" exclaimed everybody.

Instantly, all the colors in the banner on the wall became perfect and true; blue was blue, and green, green, and you know these colors are often mistaken one for the other at night. The colors of the ladies' dresses, soft lavender, blue, pink and gray, were in lovely and harmonious contrast, and diamonds flashed like little electric points. Why, everybody looked handsomer than ever they had before. The fine dark eyes of the professor were sparkling, and his face beaming with pleasure, because he saw that he had given pleasure to others, which after all is the best, the purest happiness. Then he put a white porcelain shade over the electric light, and with the softened brightness, another delighted exclamation passed like a wave over the crown; for you know that light like sound travels in waves, though light beats sound by an infinite number of time in speed. I might as well tell you here that while a sound would be traveling leisurely about thirteen miles in a minute, a flash of light can go the distance of four hundred and eighty times round the whole earth!

The porcelain shade over the electric light made it seem as if a moon, brighter than a hundred moons, had floated down upon us; and yet it was all the time that mere speck of lightning—chained up, bound down hand and foot by the professor.

Soon, by a mysterious turn of his hand, the light darted to another copper wire. This other was an English application of electricity, and has been used a good deal in England,—in dock-yards, iron works, railway stations and manufactories. It was very bright, but it flickered a little. Then he made the light dart to the candlestick I mentioned, which was invented in Paris by a man whose funny name is Jablochkoff. I had to go to the professor's next morning to get this name, for I wrote it first "Bobblejock," then "Bumpterhausen," and then "Butthurpurttles," and none of them seemed right. This candlestick made a lovely light. A large number of them were used at the Paris Exposition, which must have been magnificent at night illuminated by this imprisoned lightning.

The professor said that he had tried to have Mr. Edison present, and tell us of his amazing inventions; but he was so overwhelmed with business connected with electric light, that he could not come. Let us all hope that Mr. Edison will succeed in making electricity the light that will like the sun, "shine for all;" for, besides its being so beautiful, and so true, it will be far cheaper than any light we now have.—St. Nicholas for March.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Effects of Light on Plants.

It is now an ascertained fact that, as a rule, no organized being in the world subsists alone by the nourishment which it absorbs, either in the form of food or of atmospheric air; it has also need of heat and light. Light is the creator of the charming colors, the sweet perfumes, the exquisite flavors which we gain from the vegetable kingdom.

Plants are nourished by absorbing through their roots certain substances in the soil, and by decomposing through their green parts the carbonic acid gas contained in the atmosphere. They decompose this gas into carbon, which is assimilated, and into oxygen, which they exhale, and return to the atmosphere for the use of animals. This, which may be called the respiration of plants, cannot be performed without the help of the solar rays. Charles Bonnet, the well known philosopher of Geneva, was the first in the last century to verify the truth. He remarked that all plants grow vertically and stretch towards the sun in whatever position the seed may have been planted. We have all noticed how plants in dark places direct their stems to the place whence a ray of light issues. He also discovered that when plunged into water they disengage bubbles or gas under the sun's influence. Our own Dr. Priestly took up the subject and gained another step; he burned a light in a closed space until it went out, showing that the oxygen had been consumed, and that in consequence the air had become unfit for maintaining combustion. Into the space he introduced the green parts of a plant, and after ten days the air was so purified that the candle would burn once more. In other words he proved that plants can substitute oxygen for carbonic acid gas If some water-cress, for instance, be grown in water, and exposed to sunlight, the presence of the oxygen gas given off by the leaves may be demonstrated by the re-kindling of a paper the lingering spark of which is introduced into the vessel in which the plant is contained.

Dr. Ingenhoustz observed that plants have the power of correcting impure air in a few hours; and that this marvellous operation is due solely to the influence of the sun upon plants. This influence only begins when the sun has risen some little time above the horizon; the obscurity of night entirely suspends the operation, as do also high buildings or the shade of trees. Towards the close of day the production of oxygen relaxes, and entirely ceases at sunset.

When these facts had been established the explanation was soon discovered: the impure gas which was absorbed and decomposed during the day was nothing but the carbonic acid which is freely given out from the lungs of every breathing animal, the pure gas resulting from the decomposition being oxygen. But the diurnal respiration of most plants is exactly the inverse of the nocturnal, for the gas which they emit during night is the unwholesome carbonic acid. It was discovered also that mere heat could not take the place of light in these operations. There was another point which required elucidation; this was, the relation that existed between the amount of carbonic acid absorbed and of oxygen exhaled. Another Genevese citizen, De Saussure, maintained that the latter is always the smaller quantity, and that at the same time a portion of the oxygen retained by the plant is replaced by nitrogen; whilst Boussingault shewed that the volume of carbonic acid decomposed was equal to that of the oxygen produced.

If plants are placed in colored glasses less oxygen is disengaged that under the influence of white light. Young plants grown in comparative darkness, and consequently pale as to color, have been exposed to different rays of the spectrum, the effect being that in three hours and a half they assumed a green tint under the action of yellow light; whilst an hour longer was required for orange and sixteen hours for blue. It is evident from this that the energy of solar action on plants corresponds neither with the maximum of heat, which lies in the red rays, nor in the maximum of chemical intensity, which is at the other extremity of the spectrum, that is the violet.

If blades of grass are put into tubes filled with water charged with carbonic gas, and exposed to colored rays, and the quantity of oxygen gas disengaged is measured, it will be found that the largest quantity is in the tubes which have been acted on by yellow and green light; afterwards those influenced by orange and red. Jut as aquatic plants send out gaseous bubbles under white light, so do they to nearly the same extent under orange light, but twenty times less if placed under blue glass. These experiments would seem to prove that it is the luminous rays only, and principally the yellow and orange, that act upon plants. To this may be added, that green light produces much the same effect as darkness on vegetable respiration; thus explaining why there is such a slow lingering growth under the shade of large trees or forests where the ground beneath is bathed in emerald light.

There are some curious facts regarding climbing plants; their stems generally turn from left to right round the pole used for support; others follow a contrary direction; while to some it seems to be a matter of indifference. Mr. Darwin has concluded that light is an influential cause. If plants of this class are placed in a room near a window, the stem requires more time to perform the half-revolution during which it is turned away from the light, than for that which is towards the window. In one case the whole circle was completed in five hours and twenty minutes; of this the half in full light only required an hour; whilst the other could not traverse its part in less than four hours and twenty minutes—a very striking variation. Some Chinese ignamas, Diascorea batatas, in full growth were placed in a completely darkened cave, and others in a garden; in every case those which were in darkness lost the power of climbing round their supports; those exposed to the sun were twisting, but as soon as they were put in a cellar they grew with straight stems.—Chambers' Journal.

French Petty Employes.

There is a peculiarly French class, the army of small government employes, who discharge their infinitely insignificant but infinitely diversified functions, throughout the land, on salaries which stretch between £33 and the vast, envied and rare immensity of £160. Of the 600,000 civil servants required by the complicated and inquisitorial administration of France, one-half at least are obliged by their occupations to inhabit the villages. The gardes champetres, the forest keepers, the various foremen of the national, departmental and communal roads, the multiform agents of the tax-collectors, the overlookers of navigation on the rivers and canals, the inspectors, surveyors and overseers of every possible process, thing or deed that can anyhow be inspected, surveyed or overseen, and crowds of other diminutive officials with a line of gold or silver braid on their kepis, are all, by the essentially local nature of their calling, dwellers in the country. How they manage to lodge, nourish, clothe and educate their families on an average pay of about £60 a year is a mystery worthy to be classed among the great enigmas of life; but they do it, and furthermore they constitute a society. In certain villages, indeed, their group composes a recognized aristocracy; they are the great world of the place—they possess the advantages of rank—the Sunday bonnets of their wives and daughters arouse emotion among cap-wearing spectators. All this is paid for by about six dollars a week! Very wonderful. But the people of this category are rendered more remarkable still by a peculiarity which is proper to themselves, which saturates and permeates them—by an unimaginable arrogance to everybody else. They cringe and then bully with a skill which is the most productive and the most evident of their professional endowments, and which sets the beholder wondering what hidden grace there can be in the service of the French government to develop so wonderful a capacity of alternate obsequiousness and insolence in its lower retainers. It is all over France; it sprouts in every wearer of a gold laced cap; but it is more striking in the country than in the towns; for the double reason that there is more space for it in the former than in the latter, and that people have more time to contemplate it.—Fraser's Magazine.

Desolation of Babylon.

It is usual for travellers to dwell upon the utter desolation of Babylon, and to paint its site as a strip of desert, especially woe-begone and unfertile. But the eloquent gentlemen who dwell upon this aspect of the place could not have seen it in the middle of April. The date groves and gardens along the banks of the Euphrates are then things of beauty in their fresh spring verdure, and the plain itself is laid down with crops. Irrigation canals cross it here and there, and give trouble to the horsemen. No grass grows upon this, and there are patches of the level white with the nitre which is to be found here as in other parts of Mesopotamia; but the surface of the soil is on the whole green and pleasant to the eye. The glad waters of the river flow in the bright morning sunshine, with palm and mulberry hanging over its banks drinking in sap and life. The great city which counted its population by millions, and filled the world with a renown not yet forgotten, has disappeared under the dust of 29 centuries; but nature is as fresh and jocund as when Babylon was still unbuilt. Birds sing overhead in the pleasant spring air; butterflies flutter about in search of flowers; balmy odors regale the sense. It is difficult under the circumstances to feel as one perhaps ought to feel for the great capital which once cumbered this ground. Nature does not mourn for it, and it is hard to be sad at the bidding of sentiment when the bright spring hides its grave.—Geary, in Through Asiatic Turkey.

How to Defy Draughts.

No defence against draughts is so perfect as a common silk handkerchief tied over the head, and a silk vest, or one of wash-leather, put on between the shirt and waistcoat, will keep the body more equally warm than a good fire. A wadded coat will enable the chilly man to sit and work anywhere indoors, and so will an extra of thin flannel, worn during the whole of the active day. Just let anyone who doubts what we say try the very simple expedient, when the chilliness becomes unbearable, of putting on his dressing-gown over his ordinary clothing, and in five minutes he will be comfortable, and ready for any work; while he will not suffer, as he fancies he will, when he goes out of doors. The popular notion upon that subject is a mere delusion. You are not strengthened for outdoor life by shivering indoors, but rather weakened, habitual warmth, if not too great, being one of the best preservatives of constitutional strength. A chilly man might as well refuse blankets in bed because they would increase his sense of cold when he got up, as refuse warm clothing indoors because out-of-doors he would not be so sensible of his greatcoat. The object is not to be sensible of a pleasant difference, but to be and remain moderately and healthfully warm—to be insensible, in fact, to ordinary differences of temperature.—Scottish American Journal.

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.
[Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 21, 1878.]
"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and blood; secondly, for its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt be not quite in the right place, it can be very easily readjusted so as to cover the parts affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfection, has been hailed with delight, not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment, and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession, who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."
PULVERMACHER'S
ELECTRIC BELTS AND BANDS
are indorsed and approved by the most eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, and by well-known writers, who refer to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands, in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF RALEIGH.

The church of Raleigh does not rank among our older churches. In fact, the city of Raleigh, with her fair proportions, handsome buildings and pleasant society, is bnt a modern city, laid out in April, 1792. It was in this year that the State House was commenced, and in 1794 the General Assembly, at our State Legislature is called, met there for the first time.

Ten years after the city was laid out the Legislature incorporated the "Raleigh Academy," and the trustees elected the Rev. Mr. Robinson principal of their infant institution. Mr. Robinson having declined the Rev. Mason Petargny and Mr. Chesley Daniel were elected, and entered npon their work in 1802. In the following year the Rev. Drury Lacy of Virginia was elected and declined. In the year 1806 the Rev. Wm. L. Turner of Virginia was chosen to be principal of the Academy and to the "pastorship of the city." Denominational lines do not seem to have been drawn as sharply in the opening of the century as they are now. for Mr. Turner seems to have undertaken this double dnty on the 7th of January, 1807. It was part of the principal's dnty to convene his pnpils in the Academy every Saturday forenoon to instruct them in the Shorter Catechism, the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. Tho stndents were prohibited from attending dancing schools and balls, except under certain restrictions. At this period Presbyterianism of the strictest type seems to have been in the ascendancy.

In the year 1809 Mr. Turner resigned, and removing to Fayetteville, took charge of the church and Academy in that city, and was succeeded by the Rev. Wm. McPheeters of Hyconeta county, Va., as principal of the Raleigh Academy and pastor of the city. He was assisted in both departments by the Rev. Benjamin H. Rice until 1816. Previous to this time the other denominations had organized churches of their own, leaving the Presbyterians behind, occnpying a kind of neutral position. But at length, January 21st, 1816, a meeting was held in the old State House, Mr. McPheeters presiding, and the church was organized by the election and ordination of Messrs. Wm. Shaw, Thomas Emmons, William Peace and John Smith as ruling elders. Two years after this, on the 7th of February, 1818, their house of worship was dedicated to God. From this time onward Dr. McPheeters felt persuaded that the church ought to have a separate pastor, and endeavored to convince the people of the same fact. It was not, however, until 1828, twelve years after their organization, that this object was attained. On the 5th of November of that year the Rev. Thos. P. Hunt of Virginia accepted the invitation of the church and removed to Raleigh. As the church made no application to Presbytery to secure the installation of Mr. Hunt as pastor, he gave notice, November 5, 1830, that he had served out his term as supply. Being urged to do so he continued with them until the close of the ensning session of the Legislature, when he removed to Wilmington and engaged in earnest and useful work in that city. Further notice of Mr. Hunt will be found in the account of the Wilmington church. After the departure of Mr. Hunt from Raleigh the Rev. John Witherspoon of Hillsboro recommended them to secure a missionary of the Board of Missions, to labor there under the supervision of Dr. McPheeters. In 1832 this plan was carried out, and the Rev. Nehemiah H. Harding began to work in connection with Dr. McPheeters. A few months terminated the experiment, and Mr. Harding returned to Oxford. In the meantime Dr. McPheeters continued his oversight of the church, and Messrs. Charles Dewey and Henry D. Turner were elected and ordained elders of the church.

The 31st day of March, 1831, having been set apart by the session as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer, a gracious revival of religion followed. Rich streams of blessing flowed from that outpouring of the spirit. The members of the church were united together, alienations were healed, many were added to the church, and a zeal for the cause of religion was kindled in the hearts of the people.

After this the Rev. Mr. Apthoop preached for them a few months. In May, 1833, the congregation elected the Rev. Michael Osborne pastor, and he took charge of the church the same year. In the time of his ministry here six trnstees were chosen to take charge of the secular interests of the church. The pew system was also abolished and the seats declared to be free. As Mr. Osborne had been called, or invited, to be pastor, and yet no move was made to have him formally installed, he left the church in 1836 and removed to New York.

After being closed for awhile the church, near the end of the year, chose for their pastor the Rev. Drury Lacy, at that time pastor of the church of Newbern. He began his work on the first day of the year 1837, and was installed the first pastor of the Raleigh church in November, 1837. Dr. McPheeters and the Rev. Jesse Rankin performed the installation services. When Mr. Lacy began his work here there were bnt thirty-seven members and a congregation proportionately small. The new pastor, clothed with authority and full of zeal for the glory of God, went to work in earnest, not only in preaching but in urging bn important church enterprises. The church was repaired and refitted, the Sabbath school resuscitated, prayer meetings condnoted in private families, quarterly meetings held by the session, and cases of discipline adjudicated. For three years this preliminary work went on, with no other visible fruits than the regular growth of the congregation in nnmbers. In December, 1841, the awakening began, and on a fast day held in January, 1842, the spirit was poured ont and thirty members were added to the church. Several of these new members became elders of the church, some of them ministers, and most of them have now gone to join the General Assembly of the first born in Heaven.

Dr. Lacy remained here eighteen years and six months, devoting himself with untiring zeal to the work of the Master. At his arrival there were thirty-nine members, and at his departure there were one hnndred and sixteen. It is probable that about two hundred members in all, or an average of about ten or eleven a year, were added during his administration.

At the resignation of the Rev. Samuel Williams, D. D., Dr. Lacy was elected his successor as president of Davidson College, and having been persuaded that it was his dnty to accept the position, to the great sorrow of the church of Raleigh, he removed to Davidson College in April, 1855, and the church was again left without a pastor.

In September of the same year, 1855, the became the pastor of the church, and remained in charge until 1875, a period of twenty years. Mr. Atkinson was graduated from Princeton College in 1841, licensed by Winchester Presbytery in 1843 and ordained by the same in 1845. Ho preached first for six years in Shepherdstown and Smithfield, then in Frederick, Md., six years, and then in the Raleigh First church twenty years. Besides his labors in behalf of the church Mr. Atkinson was a warm and constant friend of Peace Institute, and through his instrumentality mainly the institution was founded. There it stands, a noble monnment, bearing the name of its most liberal patron, William Peace, and a memorial of the pastorate of Rev. Joseph M. Atkinson. In the period covered by this pastorate of twenty years there were added to the church abont an average of thirteen annually, or a total of abont two hundred and sixty. In 1856 the church roll amounted to one hnndred and nine, in 1876 two hnndred and sixteen, or nearly double in twenty years. On the 13th of May, 1875, this relation between Mr. Atkinson and the church of Raleigh was dissolved, and the church declared vacant. Sometime after this the Rev. C. R. Vaughn, D. D., of Roanoke Presbytery, Virginia, began to serve the church as stated snpply. His preaching was very acceptable, and his labors blest among this people, and they would gladly have chosen him pastor, bnt circumstances made him unwilling to undertake the charge. He served the church until 1878, when the church called Rev. John L. Watkins of Roanoke Presbytery, Virginia, who was installed pastor October 19, 1878.

The Second Presbyterian Church of Raleigh was organized on the 15th of May, 1877, with two elders, two deacons and twenty-eight members, under the care of Rev. Joseph M. Atkinson. Eight members have since been added. This little flock has no house of worship, and will be dependent, to a large extent, upon the liberality of friends and brethren abroad for help in providing themselves a sanctuary. With a population of nine or ten thousand Raleigh furnishes an abundant field for evangelistic effort, and by the blessing of God the Second church will grow, and in due time be able to sustain herself and give, besides, to the work of Christ abroad.

This account is abridged from Dr. Lacy's history of the Raleigh Church, notes of Mr. Atkinson, minutes of General Assembly, etc.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

If the definition of "science" given in a former nnmber of the PRESBYTERIAN be the correct one, to wit, "Tho mode of acqniring and treasnring up usefnl knowledge," we are at a loss to conceive how it can conflict with the Christian religion; for science takes in its ample folds all the departments of knowledge, both material and spiritnal. And do not all our snrrondings teach us that many things in this world cannot be explained through materialism. Some of them are invisible, intangible, gaseous, etherial and spiritnal, bnt can be appreciated by their effects and influences. Others, as electricity, may be aroused from their latent state and become visible, tangible, destrnctive or oven controlled to the nse of man. Science has developed all this, and even more. It teaches ns that we are to look beyond onrselves or this earth for information with regard to tha arcana of spirituality, and we find it in revelation from God; and this particnlar department of science has appropriated to itself the wisest, noblest and best of mankind. All ministers of the Gospel are scientists in this line. They have done more to edncate and elevate the human race than all others; and even those who teach skepticism, if it were not for religion, would perhaps themselves be howling savages, little better than the monkey, from whom some of them so far degrade themselves as to claim their origin.

It is dangerous to tamper with science, for it investigates the unknown and spiritual. Drink deep of the Pierian Spring, or taste not. I would rather refer you, dear reader, to the pool of Siloam, which flowed past the temple of the Living God, whose waters are for the healing of the nations. It is not amongst the great and wise alone that we look for spiritnality or religion, but among the poor, the lowly and hnmble, amidst whom our Lord and Master chose to number himself. He oven pronounced the fiat that in such matters "a little child shonld lead us," showing to onr bonighted minds, pnffed np with hnman pride, that God's ways are not our ways, and that faith alone, with self-abnegation, can save us. Oh! the depth, the profundity of the counsels of God! They are past finding ont, but so far as he has vouchsafed to reveal them to ns. Let us therefore snbmit, through faith, to his divine will, and onrs shall be the gain forever more. X.

THE SOUL'S MISSION.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

Thou born to destiny,
Entrusted with control,
O! where and why thine embassy,
Thou living soul?

Thine emanating source
Cannot be nature's womb;
Since when returns this lifeless corse
Low in the tomb.

Thou shalt not there be laid
In death's dominion bound,
And all that is of thee be made
A mouldering mound.

But wherefore hast thou come
Known thus of heavenly birth?
Why on thy mission, was thy home
Made here on earth?

Thine impress and thy name
Speak thine a high behest:
Go, then, thine embassage proclaim,
Nor be at rest.

Earth would beguile thine ear,
And call life's joys thine all—
Would charm in pleasing dalliance here,
Till sin enthrall.

Up from thy lethargy,
And make thy mission known;
Thou wert not sent on earth to be
Naught but thine own.

Thou hast another sphere,
Another work, my soul,
Than thus to linger struggling here
For pleasure's goal.

O! is there not one grief
Borne by another heart,
For which thou mays't yet bring relief
Ere thou depart?

Is there no soul oppress
With sins yet unforgiven,
Whom thou mays't guide to perfect rest
With Christ in heaven?

Up, O my soul! see all
Bids thee thy work assume,
Ere on thy loitering footsteps fall
Death's sullen gloom.

The victor's jubilee,
"O death where is thy sting?
O grave where is thy victory?"
Thou canst not sing;

Till comes the message down,
That all thy task is done;
For not till then shall be thy crown
Immortal won.

THE QUEEN OF ALL.

Honor the dear old mother. Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheeks, but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but those are the lips which have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in all the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the soft radiance of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yes, she is a dear old mother. The sands of life are nearly run ont, but feeble as she is, she will go further and reach down lower for you than any other upon earth. You cannot walk into a midnight where she cannot see yon; yon cannot enter a prison whose bars will keep her out; yon can never mount a scaffold too high for her to reach, that she may kiss and bless yon in ovidence of her deathless love. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves yon by the wayside to die nnpoticed, the dear old mother will gather yon in her feeble arms and carry you home and tell yon of all your virtues until you almost forgot that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her tenderly and cheer her declining years with holy devotion.—The Housekeeper.

A SAINTLY GIRL IN A GARRET.

The Rev Dr. Samnel Manning, Secretary to the Religious Tract Society, London, preached not long ago on "Looking nnto Jesus," and he forcibly showed that the aim of the Society, in each of the sixteen millions of tracts issned every year, was to point men to Jesus as the anthor and finisher of faith. In the course of his sermon he related the following anecdote:

"Some years ago I stood by the sick bed of a young woman racked by a cruel disease, which was dragging her to her grave. She was lying in a poor chamber, and was dependent upon the charity of the church for her snpport in her last days. By patient snbmission, however, to the discipline through which she was called to pass, she had, through the grace of God, been lifted into a region of holy peace and hope, such as I have seldom witnessed. Her poor, mean attic was as the antechamber of heaven, she was always so full of thankfulness and joy.

"At last she came to the hour of death. 'Mary,' said her visitor, 'how is it with you now?' Her reply deserves to be remembered: 'I once thonght,' she said, 'that I should rise above my starting point, that I should get beyond it. I do not think so now, sir. I MUST LEAVE OFF WHERE I BEGAN—at the feet of Christ.' Then she murmured:

"'A guilty, weak, and worthless worm
On thy kind arms I fall;
Be thou my strength and righteousness,
My Jesus and my all.'

Then her eyes closed in that sleep which men call death, bnt as I stood there I knew it to be bnt the awakening into the higher and diviner life. So it is with all of us; we begin with Christ when we begin to live, and we end with Christ when this mortal life is over, for He is the author and the finisher of our faith."—Christian Herald.

FRANCE.

The opening of Père Hyacinthe's church in Paris occurred February 9th without the participation of any of the dignitaries that had been promised, but with considerable eclat owing to the general curiosity which M. Loyson's movement had excited. Cards of invitation were signed "Hyacinthe Loyson, Recteur de l'Eglise Catholique Gallicane," and fixing the hour at 4 p. m. Much earlier than that the chapel, which has been transformed from a café chantant, was densely crowded with an audience which, according to reports, behaved itself in hardly a decorous or orderly way. "It was a relief," says the correspondent of the Guardian, who does not sympathize with the movement, "to think that building was not a consecrated place of worship." The audience, according to the same authority, did not present a religious aspect and contained bnt few, if any, Roman Catholics. M. Loyson, after his preliminary devotion, announced that the regular litnrgical services of the chapel with mass would not commence at present, the Liturgy intended to be used being under revisal by the Primus of Scotland, and the priest who was to assist him, who was expected from America, and without whom he could not undertake the full duties of the church, not having yet arrived. He represented himself as being under the jurisdiction of three Bishops, to wit, the Primus of Scotland, the Bishop of Edinburgh and Bishop Herzog (Old Catholic) of Switzerland, who, he said, would have been present had their vocations permitted. With respect to the purpose of his church he did not claim that it was the foundation of a new church; as for himself he was neither Greek nor Anglican, but remained a Catholic of the Church of France, which he did not seek to dispossess bnt reform. "Woe is me," he declared, "if I preach not the gospel." There was, no doubt, he said, a world of infidelity in France, and he would prefer even superstition to that. But at bottom France was spiritualiste and Christian. People were deceived who thought otherwise. France, he declared, was croyant au fond. She was also Catholic, and would remain so. She would never become Protestant. To restore France to true Catholicism, to reform the Church of France, such were to be the objects and fruits of his undertaking. On the other hand the Cardinal Bishop of Paris denies to M. Loyson the title of Catholic, and rebukes his pretensions in a sharp letter, of which the following is an extract:

"You, perhaps, flatter yourself that you will win from men by your eloquence that testimony which your conscience refuses you; that is another deception in store for you. Around your schismatical pulpit we shall see a few unbelievers attracted by curiosity. No disciples will be seen. Your sect will make no adepts. You will not even attain the success of the Eglise Française of Chatel, which, after a few meetings which resembled theatrical representations, disappeared amidst indifference and contempt. And what sort of a place have you chosen for your pulpit of error? You have chosen the very city in which stands the pulpit of truth made famous by great authors, and once filled by yourself with some splendor. Your hearers, confounded, will seek for the motives which have induced you to pass from one to the other, and they will certainly not find any that can honor the new mission you have given yourself. I will not close this letter, sir, without reminding you that you have ceased to be a Catholic. Whatever other titles it may please you to give yourself, the Church has cast yon out from its pale."—Christian Union.

CITY OR COUNTRY.

It is the old question: the country breeds men and the city devonrs them. It has always been so, and always will be so to the end of the world.

With a mercurial people, intensely ambitious and enterprising, the farm is slow, and you cannot, by any moral force, compel nervous men to stay on it. I recollect hearing my father say that when he was working on the farm driving oxen it did seem to him that he should die. He did not know what ailed him then. Said he, "I know now. I am quick and nervous, and the oxen were slow and drowsy, and we could not get on together; it was a continual torment to me."

Everything in onr economy—the stimulation of the pulpit, the whole newspaper literature, the tendency of onr political institutions, the whole genius of business—tends to stir men np to enterprise, to make their fortune, to trnn ont and do something for themselves, to be abont, to step up lively. And that yon cannot ordinarily do on the farm.

Farming is not the simple thing it has been represented to be. It is a combination of mannfactures and trade. It represents much more nearly the mannfactnring of chemicals than any other thing: yon have the laboratory and minerals in the soil, and you have so to use them as to get ont given products. And then it becomes a commercial operation, because when you have got np yonr goods yon you must go into the market with them, and the condition of the market determines what condition of goods you shall get up. It is a double process of mannfactnring and merchandising, and it requires a peculiar skill that belongs to both avocations, in order to succeed. I think in our older States it takes fully as much brains to be a successful farmer as it does to make a competent merchant.

When you come to consider, then, that a young man is turned out to farming without any capital and with a slender experience; and that pretty nearly everything he produces out of the soil must be produced by means of his own body; and that the returns are slow, and very slender; and that he has to sell everything that he makes that is good to eat, and everything which is indifferent, which he cannot sell, he keeps for himself—it is not strange that boys do not take to farming. Many a farmer sells everything that a hnman being will eat, and uses everything for his hogs and stock that they will eat, and what neither man or beasts will eat saves for himself.

Farming is pretty serious business. It is all very well to talk abont sending men out to work on the farm. Now what is called the allotment system, or spade husbandry, in England has been successful, and if you could take the population from the large mannfactnring towns and give them an acre or less apiece, they could support their families, even if they did not grow rich; but give them fifty acres and they will be poor all their lifetime. Spade husbandry in England has proved very successful; we can learn a lesson from it.

There is no question that if more young men could be induced to leave city occupations and take to agricultnre their health would be better, and if they succeeded they would be a great deal happier; bnt there is no doubt that in farming, as in everything else, there are a great many young men who would fail. What is said about law, and medicine, and merchandising, and other occupations, can be said as generally true as to farmers: "Rise early, and keep your head clear; and maintain truth and integrity, and be very industrious and be extremely frugal until yon are fifty years old—and then you will have enough to bury yonrself."

But, on the other hand, there is not much more than one man in five from the country that is fit to come to the city.

A man may feel that because he is fiery he is enterprising, when he may be over-nervous, over-sensitized, discontented. He comes down to the city, and that very fire in him, when he comes into the fierce competition of the city, burns him out in a short time. He works early and late to maintain himself, and then breaks down in health, and finally goes back to the country or to his grave. Hecatombs of men do so. If he is energetic and powerful, and gets harnessed in business, and begins to succeed, the danger is still greater, for under the enormous drive and pressnre that is brought to bear upon him in the city he soon takes to wasteful stimulus to eke out his strength. There are no adequate social statistics on this point; there out to be. If we could trace the history of young men that come to the city during the next ten years, if we could know the number, and could follow their history—how many remained, how many succeeded, how many broke down, how many died—it would be most instructive.

City or country? There is no answer to the problem save this: that though the country is slow it is safe; it gives abundant scope to skill and energy and life, if men only know it; and the city, though brilliant and exciting, is full of danger to the body, to the brain and to the conscience. It is a maelstrom that sucks down pretty much everything that comes within its circle.—Christian Union.

THE SENSATIONAL PREACHER.

He is apt to think more of saying a "smart," a "telling" or a "taking" thing than of communicating the truth. In this way he nses extravagant epithets, gives exaggerated descriptions, and magnifies or distorts features for the sake of effect. Even so noble a man as Thomas Guthrie once said, in regard to the preparation of a sermon, "It is like the drop-scene in a theatre, and you must lay on the the color thick." But with all deference to such an authority, that advice is exceedingly pernicious. For he who consciously exaggerates, does at the same time blunt the edge of his conscience. Every time he deviates from or adds to the real state of the case he makes himself a worse man. Truth is the girdle of character, and he who loosens that is on the way to looseness in other departments of morality. He is on an inclined plane, and may some day produce the biggest sensation of his life by a terrible fiasco. For the temptation is to go on. His hearers become accustomed to the dose, the appetite "grows by what it feeds on," and, in order to have the effects which were at first produced, they crave for something stronger. He seeks to meet the new demand just as he sought to meet the first, and so it increases until the flippant has become the irreverent, and the irreverent has become the profane, and the profane becomes the impure; or until the odd has become the heretical, and the man who began with throwing aside conventionalities, ends by parting with the central verities of the Gospel. We do not affirm that all this has actually happened in any individual case, but the drift and tendency of sensationalism are in that direction; and, in a day when some who are guilty of it are riding on the top of the wave, it is proper to warn young preachers of the peril that is incurred by entering on such a course.—North American Review.

LOOK WELL TO YOUR FOOTING.

A man was passing along a high road, one day, when he saw a boy standing on the edge of a chalk pit, which was being worked at the time. "Look well to your footing, my lad!" he cried, for he thought it not unlikely that the bank might give way. The boy, thinking he was safe enongh, paid no heed to the kind warning. He did not even care to move, but stood gazing idly before him. Snddenly the edge fell with a terrible crash. Down he went headlong, and was buried in the rubbish. Help was at hand, and the men worked hard to get him ont; bnt twenty minutes elapsed before they could reach him, and when at last they succeeded it was too late. Smothered in the debris, the boy had lost his life because he wouldn't heed the warning, "Look well to your footing." How many a moral and spiritual death has occurred through neglecting that warning! "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—(1. Cor. x. : 12).

CUT THE SHORE LINES.

When a new ship is launched there are loose ropes that hang from her landward side to keep her near the shore. How much this is like thousands of professing Christians! They have everything they need for sailing, bnt they are bound to the shore. The engine may trnn the wheels, the wind may fill the sails of heavenly desire, bnt so long as these shore lines are not cut, the ship will stay just where she is. Let go of the world! Your craft will rot by the shore in spite of all effort, unless you cut loose. Shore lines have ruined many a soul. Yon must let go! The harbor is on the other side of the sea. You are not to drop anchor, nor furl the sail, until you reach the other shore. "For so an entrance shall be ministered unto yon abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." (2. Peter i. : 11).

THE EVERLASTING ARMS.

"When are the everlasting arms underneath us? Tho only answer is, now and forever more. Now, at this moment, beloved, the everlasting arms are underneath us. The life of a Christian is described as walking by faith, and to my mind walking by faith is the most extraordinary miracle ever beheld beneath the sun. Walking on the waves, as Peter did, is a type of the life of every Christian. I have sometimes likened it to ascending an invisible staircase far up into the clouds. You cannot see a step before you, but you wind up towards the light. When you look downward all is dark, and before you lies nothing visible bnt cloud, while beneath you yawns a fathomless abyss. Yet we have climbed, some of us, now for years up this perpetually ascending stair, never seeing an inch before us. We have often paused, almost in horror, and asked in wonder, 'What next, and what next?' Yet what we thought was cloud has proved to be solid rock; darkness has been light before us, and slippery places have been safe. Every new and then, when the darkness has been denser than usual, a darkness which might be felt, when all the past behind us has vanished and nothing has been seen bnt the one step we stood on, we have said, 'How did I come here? What a strange, mysterious life mine has been!' We have almost wished ourselves down on the level among the worldlings, who can always see their way and know what is underneath them. But faith has come to our help again. We have believed: and believing, we have seen the invisible and grasped the eternal; and then we have gone on, have put our foot down again, and anon have run up with joy the shining way. What an ascent we have sometimes made on that ladder of light, so that we have companied with angels, and left the world far down beneath our feet! Now and then we have enjoyed a glimpse through the thick darkness of the jewelled walls of the eternal city, which needeth no candle, neither light of the sun; we have seen, I say, its brightness, and determined still to climb the mysterious way. Well, believer, at this moment, though thou canst not see thy way, yet since thou art walking by faith 'underneath are the everlasting arms.'"—Spurgeon.

In France the nnmber of Catholics is given as 39,390,000, and of Protestants as 600,000, while in Great Britain and Ireland there are 5,600,000 Catholics against 26,000,000 Protestants.

A SCHISM IN THE CHURCH.—A schism has sprung np in the Greek Orthodox Church which promises to be serious. At any rate, the Greek government, after allowing it to exist undisturbed for the last four or five years, has sent officers to take the children from its schools and to close churches, while all the clergy who have joined the movement have been ordered to retire to a monastery, where they will be subjected to severe penance. The leader of this new party is one Makrakis, who preaches about "restored Christendom," and proposes a reform within the existing Church which shall restore the conditions that prevailed in the first, second and third centuries. He stands aloof from the authority of the bishops and the synods, and is opposed to the system of fasts which prevails throughout the Greek communion. Confession is not abolished, bnt penitents confess on Sunday before the whole congregation, from which, after the ancient manner, they receive absolution. Makrakis permits a relation between the sexes which he calls "spiritnal marriages." Several Greek priests have joined him and have been given places in his schools.—Christian Union.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 1879.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

Sabbath desecration has become so alarmingly widespread, and the forms which it takes are so numerous that philanthropists and friends of morality even, to distinguish these from the Christian public, are seeing that the fact and the tendency are only and to the greatest extent evil, and are moving to apply the remedy.

In Philadelphia lately an attempt was made to open theatres on the Sabbath but, thanks to the Mayor of that city, the attempt was promptly suppressed for the time; yet for full security it is considered necessary to increase the penalties of the law of the State of Pennsylvania enacted in 1794 for the regulation of the Sabbath. The object of the legislation sought is to perfect the law that exists and so apply it to the whole State that it shall restrain, as in terms provided in the old law, "all worldly employment, or business whatever, on the Lord's day."

The Legislature of North Carolina, at its late session, passed a law of which this is the text:

"AN ACT TO PREVENT THE DESECRATION OF THE SABBATH DAY.

"Sec. 1. That no railroad company shall permit the loading or unloading of any freight car on the Sabbath day (known as Sunday) within the limits of this State.

"Sec. 2. That no railroad company shall permit any car, train of cars, or locomotive, to be run on Sunday on any road within the limits of the State, except such as may be absolutely necessary for the transportation of the U. S. mails, and except in cases of urgent necessity other than for the purpose of business and pleasure; provided, that the word Sunday as used in this act shall be construed to embrace only that part of the day between sunrise and sunset.

"Sec. 3. That any railroad company offending against either of the above sections shall be liable to indictment for a misdemeanor in each county in or through which such car, train of cars, or locomotive, shall pass, or on which such freight car shall be loaded or unloaded, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars for each offence.

"Sec. 4. That the fine so imposed shall, when collected, be paid into the public treasury of the State for the use of the public schools of the State.

"Sec. 5. This act shall be in force from and after the 20th day of March, 1879."

As long ago as 1741 a statute was enacted in North Carolina forbidding any persons from pursuing their ordinary trades or avocations on the Sabbath, and the present law merely makes further provisions, with a view to make the old law operative against railroad companies, and to enforce, on their part, Sabbath observance.

Perhaps if it had been further provided that one hundred dollars would be paid in any case for proof sufficient to convict of violation of the law, there would have been more general enforcement than is now probable, but if zeal equal to that manifested in securing the passage of the law is exhibited to secure its observance, the public moral sense will not be defied by excursion and freight trains on the Lord's Day, and the labor incidental to them. While we might refer, perhaps, with pride to the part which Presbyterians took in this matter, and to the co-operation extended by sister denominations, we are anxious that it should be recognized as in no sense a churchly movement. It is in strict consonance with the genius and spirit of our institutions in all past time, and in direct accord with the principle of government which looks to allowing all classes of men the opportunity to worship God in the manner dictated by their own consciences. There is a special propriety in the Legislature dealing with this matter as it refers to railroad companies, which are monopolies created by the State, invested with peculiar and special privileges, and amenable to no less authority than the State itself.

We heartily concur with the Southern Presbyterian in its remarks on this subject as follows:

"This is a grave topic, and we suggest that this movement needs to be conducted with great caution. There is danger of mixing the civil with the religious features of the question, and thus of seriously complicating our religious liberties. However good the motive, it would be a damaging success if the evangelical Christians of the land should bring about a species of legislation in favor of the Sabbath which might hereafter, in altered circumstances, be invoked as successfully against all the institutions of true religion.

"The State has its own sphere, and we include in that all laws which are essential to public morality and good order, and also to the protection of all classes in the exercise of their religious opinions. The outward observance of the Sabbath is unquestionably, in some of its aspects, a part of morality, and is essential to the suppression of evil-doing. And it is equally clear that no one should be allowed to interfere in any way with the most religious observance of the Sabbath by Christian people. On these grounds we imagine a great part of past legislation on this subject in our country has been based, and is so far fully justified. It is safe and cannot easily be abused."

A GOOD MAN.

We have received the tidings of the death of the Hon. William H. Battle with unfeigned regret.

His health had been declining for several months, but his family and friends have been seriously alarmed for him only within the past few weeks. On Friday, 14th inst., at noon, he quietly breathed his last, at the residence of his son, President Battle, of the University, with whom he had made his home for several years.

Judge Battle was seventy-six years old, having been born in 1802. He graduated at the University in 1820, studied law under Judge Henderson, married in 1825 Lucy M., daughter of Kemp Plummer, Esq., of Warrenton, and began his professional career first at Louisburg, removing thence to Raleigh. He was elevated to the Bench in 1840, and in '43 removed to Chapel Hill for the education of his sons, all of whom, six in number, were graduates of the University.

Two years after his removal to Chapel Hill Judge Battle was elected Professor of Law in the University, and for twenty years conducted that department with great success, many of his pupils having since attained distinction in the profession. At the close of the late civil war (in which four of his sons were engaged and two of them laid down their young lives), upon the changes of State government and in the closing of the University, Judge Battle, losing his seat on the Bench and his office as Professor, went back to the Bar, and in conjunction with two of his sons, Hon. K. P. and R. H. Battle, built up a lucrative practice in the city of Raleigh. In 1874 his admirable and excellent wife died, and when Mr. K. P. Battle accepted the Presidency of the University in 1876 the Judge returned to his old home in Chapel Hill with his son, and closed his eyes among the long-loved and familiar scenes of the institution he had so faithfully served.

The State has lost a most valuable citizen. Judge Battle was in many respects a representative North Carolinian—a man to whom we could point the rising generation as an example of the best traits that have always distinguished our best men, and made our name abroad. He was a man of great modesty and simplicity of character, with a plain and unaffected address; of unbounding integrity, single-minded devotion to duty, and unostentatious benevolence. As a Judge he wore the ermine in all its purity, and adorned his high office with the moral courage, the dignity, learning and conscientious impartiality that in his day characterized our Judiciary. Pearson, Ruffin, Nash, Badger, Swain, Gaston—these and such as these were his friends and associates.

In a quiet and wholly unobtrusive way Judge Battle was warmly patriotic and public spirited. He loved his native State, he was one of her most law-abiding citizens, and he loved to do her service. The State University, where his father and brother and sons graduated, and where his grandsons are now being educated, was especially dear to him, and it must have been one of the keenest gratifications of his life to see his son at its head, wisely and successfully guiding the institution through perils, and restoring its honor and usefulness. One of the most pleasant of the many pleasant features of the University Normal School last summer, was the punctual attendance of the Judge on the exercises, and the delighted interest he displayed. Nothing was indifferent to him that concerned the welfare of his fellow citizens.

Judge Battle was for many years a zealous, devoted and influential member of the Episcopal Church. The loss of his counsel in her councils, of his liberality, his catholic charity and his personal weight of character will be sorely felt in that communion. Such churchmen as he make the strength of the Church.

He was an excellent neighbor—discreet, hospitable and charitable—and possessed the unbounded confidence and hearty respect and good will of all classes. In his family relations he was singularly blessed, and though he had the pain of seeing five grown children, as well as his beloved wife, precede him across the river, yet these all died in faith, and his own death-bed was watched by his three remaining sons with tenderest reverence. He came to his grave fully ripe for heaven, as a shock of corn cometh in his season, lamented by friends and neighbors, by rich and poor. Funeral services were held at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, 16th inst., in the University chapel, Rev. Mr. Cheshire officiating—on the same day on which, twelve years ago, the building was draped in mourning for the funeral of Dr. James Phillips, who had also died on the 14th of March. The long procession formed by the University officers and students, and the citizens of Chapel Hill, passed through the village, the bells of the various churches tolling, and every countenance marked with the concern that befits the closing scene of a long and useful and honored life. The final service took place in Raleigh, and Judge Battle's mortal part now rests with wife and children in Oakwood Cemetery.

WHERE WE STAND.

A friend sends us an article which appeared in one of our State cotemporaries, and which refers in laudatory terms to the work of Mrs. Moon, the Quaker revivalist, saying among other things: "She is of the Quaker persuasion, but preaches in all the churches, her good work not being confined to any particular denomination."

Our cotemporary was a little hasty, we imagine, in the report. If Mrs. Moon has ever preached in a Southern Presbyterian church, we have never heard of it, and certainly would be surprised and grieved to know it. We have no quarrel with those sister churches who disagree with us, yet we stand for ourselves firmly on the apostolic injunction: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak, but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." This to us is more than volumes of argument; it is God's will unmistakably made known. We believe we stand squarely with our entire Church in direct opposition to the preaching of women.

But there is something other than unmixed good in the now-a-days revival system as laid out and worked up in other directions. We desire to speak guardedly, for it is not improbable that many from curiosity merely, do come to hear and go away blest; yet the blowing of trumpets, the laudation of individuals and the general fixing up that frequently precedes the 'getting up of a revival,' is not to our liking, as not in accord with our mind and conscience in such matters. Too much is made of man. It gives to the revivalist, so-called, too much of the glory that belongs to God alone. This is not to discourage the inviting of ministers, whom God has specially gifted, and whose labors He is oftimes specially pleased to bless, to assist in the services of our churches, but to counsel due observance of the proprieties in every case.

While on this general subject, let us refer to an abuse which otherwise we would not notice. It is the conducting of protracted services, very possibly accomplishing some good, but taking occasion before final close to hold up sister churches to unsparing ridicule, or bitter denunciation, because of difference in non-essential points of doctrine or order. No fair-minded, intelligent Christian could approve of these things it would seem, yet some are stumbled because God seems to bless the labors of those who do them. There is in fact no popular fallacy more readily seized upon, than that real or apparent good following any course of conduct is God's seal of approbation upon that conduct. Without going into the subject at large, we venture to say that the Divine blessing has never followed, as in approbation of abuse or vituperation of one society of Christians by another. To believe it would be to dishonor God. If a curse, manifesting itself in a great scandal to Christianity before the world, is not the outcome of the conduct last referred to, it is due to the restraining grace of God upon the hearts of those who will not render railing for railing.

ASHPOLE CHURCH.

Dr. D. Sinclair writes us from Red Banks, Robeson county, under date March 17th:

"The Rev. H. M. Brearly of Harmony Presbytery was on yesterday elected stated supply for Ashpole church for the ensuing year, for one-half his time. The other half of his time is retained by Reedy Creek church, Presbytery of Harmony, which he has heretofore been serving the whole of his time."

SUPPLEMENTAL HEALTH BILL.

We are not disposed to decry the North Carolina Legislature which has just adjourned. It has certainly done some things which entitle it to high commendation. One of these is the passage of the bill supplemental to the bill establishing a Board of Health for the State.

By this new bill the State Board of Health is composed of six members of the State Medical Society and three appointees of the Governor. Its duties are to collect and tabulate vital statistics as reported by the county boards, to issue bulletins on sanitary matters of a public character, and to visit localities and investigate threatened outbreaks of disease which may prove dangerous to the public health. To enable a full performance of the last named service ample powers are conferred. The members of the Board are advisers of the State in matters appertaining to the location of all public institutions. Public vaccination is also provided for and the secretary of the Board is the agent of the State for providing the vaccine supply. The chemist of the State Agricultural Station is chemist of the Board, and has charge also of legal analyses in cases of suspected poisoning throughout the State.

County boards of health are provided for to be composed of all physicians eligible to membership in the respective county medical societies, the Mayor of the county town, Chairman of Board of Commissioners, and the city or county surveyor.

A Superintendent of Health for each county in the State is to be elected by the county board of health, to receive pay for his services and be held strictly accountable for non-performance of duties. He is to be registrar of vital statistics and physician to the county institutions, and is empowered to abate all nuisances prejudicial to public health.

The appropriation by the Legislature is $200 and the necessary stationery and printing.

We feel that this is a vast stride in the right direction, and anticipate that the beneficent results will soon be so manifest that North Carolinians will point with special pride to the health system of their State, and our lawmakers regard it as an institution to be specially cherished.

To the North Carolina Medical Journal, it is proper to say, great credit is due for the energy and skill exerted in conducting this matter to its present point of attainment.

BEREAVED.

In our obituary column will be found the announcement of the death of Mrs. Maria S. Martin wife of Rev. Edward Martin, pastor of the church in St. Charles. None can grieve that the invalid has exchanged her sufferings for the immortal health of Heaven, but those whom this blessed exchange has bereaved will have the sympathy of many friends.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.

I have disposed of several copies of the Revised Book according to announcement heretofore published and have a few copies still on hand. If any person desires a copy he can have it postage free on sending me his address and fifteen cents in stamps.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

That in our last issue we should have failed to note and remark upon, so important a matter as the passage of the bill regarding the desecration of the Sabbath must have appeared singular to very many of our readers. It really seemed very strange and was quite mortifying to us, when we found the paper printed and so important a matter overlooked. We had prepared an article embodying the news, but by one of those mishaps which will occur occasionally it, and not only it but some other editorial incerbrations, were left on our hands to the great loss of our readers, of course, and great regret of ourselves.

In our column of religious news will be found note of a work of grace in Hickory, N. C. We copy from an exchange, and are glad to do so, but why—oh why! will not our brethren drop us postals on such matters?

Szegedin, which has suffered so fearfully in loss of life and property from the recent flood, is a city of Hungary, on the right bank of the Theiss river and opposite the mouth of the Maros. It stands in a marshy plain. The river is crossed by a bridge of boats, and the town is defended by an old fortress built by the Turks in the 16th century. The city contains six Roman Catholic churches, a Catholic gymnasium and a beautiful Greek church. It is connected with all parts of the country by rail and enjoys an extensive trade. The Hungarian Diet once held its sessions there. (Condensed from Appleton's Cyclopedia.) Last accounts represent the pecuniary damage by the flood to be about £1,500,000.

The Christian of London says:

"We learn that Mons. Bardoux, Minister of Public Worship and Education in France, has conferred the University degree of Officer de l' Instruction Publique upon Mr. J. Alexander, of the Crystal Palace Bible stand, in acknowledgment of the services he rendered during the recent Paris Exhibition. This decoration is one of considerable value in France, on account of the social prestige and the access to the highest court circles it gives to the possessor. It was forwarded to Mr. Alexander through Sir Philip Cauliffe Owen, British Commissioner at the Exhibition, along with a very friendly letter from that gentleman. This public and graceful recognition by the government of the representative of the Bible stand is not only a high tribute to Mr. Alexander personally but also one among the many hopeful signs for the future of France."

What a change in France within the last decade, or even half that period. May we not reasonably look forward to the time as not far distant when France will be reckoned among the Protestant nations of the earth?

Communion services are being held or will be held, shortly, all over the South. Give us the news, dear brethren, we beg of you.

The tenement-house reform movement in New York city seems to have been taken hold of in earnest. A large meeting was held lately in Cooper Institute at which the Mayor presided. A committee of nine was appointed to prosecute reform. The Christian Union say:

It includes such men as Cornelius Vanderbilt, W. W. Astor, James Gallatin, Hon. Charles P. Daly; and if, as it is safe to assume, those gentlemen have been consulted and have consented to serve, their names are a guarantee of some practical results. It was announced also at the meeting that thirteen existing tenements had been leased for the purpose of improvement by a company of ladies in the city, and that seventy thousand dollars had been offered in sums ranging from five to ten thousand dollars by some six or seven gentlemen towards the construction of a model block of tenements, to cost a million dollars.

Strangers who may happen in Wilmington over Sabbath, or on the evenings of Tuesday, Thursday or Friday of each week, will always find religious services at one or both of the Presbyterian churches in that city. A cordial invitation to attend these services is extended to all persons. We will be pleased to make similar announcements for any other Presbyterian churches that may desire it.

We prefer making no comments on the judicial investigation which is taking place, or is to take place, in Brooklyn into the modes and conduct of Dr. Talmage. He will have a full and fair trial before his Presbytery with the additional advantage, we think, of having public opinion largely in his favor.

Our contemporaries are commenting upon Archbishop Purcell's astounding failure. One asks, without saying aught good or bad against the Archbishop himself:

Had that enormous and cruel betrayal, to the extent of one-thousandth, or one ten-thousandth, part, of that six millions, been the work of any Presbyterian minister, the land would have rung with the sneers and vituperations of the secular press. Those who passed by on the other side from where he lay would have lifted their robes and walked swiftly for fear of the contamination of the odor. Why is it that Archbishop Purcell is handled so gingerly, apologized for so kindly and handsomely? Is it because Rome is a political power and must not be alienated? Is it because an evangelical minister is defenceless? Why does the Archbishop fare so much better than any Protestant minister could hope to?

There is a great deal of point in the above, so far as applied to the locality and immediate section of the writer of the above extract, but we are bound to say with regard to the secular press of the South, that a minister of any denomination would be treated with equal courtesy, and his church with equal respect. This, at least, is true, as far as our observation extends, and we think it is only fair to state it.

In this country hard as times have been we have little idea of what suffering there is in the larger cities of Europe.

The Berlin Tagblatt reports that in three months there have been 3,000 seizures in the capital for arrears of taxes; that more than double that number of Berlin tradesmen are in bankruptcy or the verge of it; that the great army of unemployed workmen have kept themselves alive, if such an existence can be called life, by clearing snow off the sidewalk; that 227 men recently applied for a vacant clerkship, worth only $3.15 per week, and that a doctor who advertised for a housekeeper received 450 applications. In Manheim the misery is frightful. Men once stalwart, roam around the streets, and search the gutters, in hope of stumbling upon something that can be converted into warmth or food.

The New York Sun says: Recently a meeting in behalf of one of our prominent gospel charities was held in a fashionable church, the addresses being by three eminent pastors. The work of this charity is a peculiar one, which, to be understood by anybody who would make a speech about it, should be carefully inspected. But it so happened that the three gentlemen depended more on their acquaintance with religious work in general than with the particular work in whose behalf they were about to speak, and so they neglected to make personal examination.

As a consequence the first speaker expressed high esteem for the conductors, but confessed ignorance of the work itself; the second was in a hurry to go home, and had little to say; the third eulogized the brother who was chiefly responsible for the work; and lastly the brother last referred to spoke and told all there was told, but the people were weary, and when the collection was taken the amount taken in was very small. We suppose no one can well mistake the lesson this should teach. But lest they should it is simply this: If you have nothing to say, say it—that is, say nothing.

On our first page will be found a poem from a new contributor to the PRESBYTERIAN. Our readers are to be congratulated. We have another poem from the same pen, and hope to soon lay before our readers some interesting articles from Dr. Crane, based on information and experience acquired by him while missionary in Northern Syria.

Some of our exchanges, we see, are giving credit to the First Presbyterian church of Richmond, Va., for having paid a debt of $14,552.77, principal and interest, thus freeing the church from all pecuniary embarrassment. Now, as that was a most extraordinary deed, accomplished at a most extraordinary time, and in a most extraordinary way—that is in a right way, the ordinary way is a wrong way—we would like the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., of which Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson is pastor, to have the credit of it; which credit is its due.

The giving of the wrong credit was purely accidental.

Congress worked all day the Sunday last before its adjournment, to make up for lost time. Yet this is called a Christian nation, and is so, for the stamp of Christianity, despite the wickedness, is yet upon it. But the religious press everywhere ought to raise its voice against such evil example in the high places of our Government.

A compromise seems to have been effected between the advocates of absolutism and the defenders of free speech in the German Parliament. The absolutists seem to have gone too far, and had to retire with little gain and not much credit. Bismarck, though the mover of the repressive resolutions, is, if reports be true, well content with the result.

Père Hyacinthe's plan of Catholic reform will hardly prove successful. As long as he lives, by dint of sheer eloquence and ardent and unaffected piety he may maintain himself, but the prospect for apostolic succession on the Loyson course is not hopeful.

"I had rather that a child of mine should learn morality from Shakspere than to learn religion from the sickly sentimentalism of religion which has come down from the swamps of mediæval superstition which would have been dried up long ago, had they not been protected by the cathedral roof of popular reverence."

This, an exchange says, was the conclusion of a sermon by Rev. M. J. Savage, Unitarian preacher, in which sermon he endeavored to show that the theatre was quite as good as the Church. It is given as a pretty fair specimen of metaphor badly mixed.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States

Will meet in the Second Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky., on the third Thursday (15th day) of May, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M. The opening sermon is to be preached by the Rev. T. E. Peck, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly.

The undersigned Committee on Commissions, will be in attendance at the Lecture Room of said church, on Wednesday, the 14th of May at 8 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of enrolling the names of Commissioners.

JOSEPH R. WILSON, Stated Clerk.
WM. BROWN, Permanent Clerk.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will meet at St. Andrew's church, Moore county, N. C., Thursday, April 24th, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The usual blanks have been forwarded to the churches; those should be accurately filled and handed in when Presbytery meets in April.

J. P. MCPHERSON,
Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Harmony stands adjourned to meet at Darlington C. H. April 9th, 1879, at 7½ o'clock P. M.

W. A. GREGG, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Wilmington will meet in the Second church Wilmington on Wednesday, 2d April, 1879, at 7½ o'clock, P. M.

JAS. M. SPRUNT, Stated Clerk.

Arrangements have been made with the Railroad and Steamboat lines to extend the usual courtesy of reduced fare.

Delegates will please report promptly at Second Presbyterian church on their arrival in the city.

The Presbytery of Red River will meet Thursday, April 3d, at 7 P. M., in Vienna, La. The Sessional and Sabbath School reports are required from each church.

CYRUS HARRINGTON, Stated Clerk.

Concord Presbytery will meet at Bethel church, on Wednesday, the 23d of April next at 11 o'clock A. M.

WM. W. PHARR,
Stated Clerk.

Delegates (both ministers and elders) who expect to attend the meeting of Orange Presbytery, which convenes at Eno church on the 23d of April, at 12 o'clock M., will please notify us of the fact, as soon as they conveniently can. If the trains continue to run, as at present, delegates coming down (i. e., from the west) will be met at Hillsboro, on the 23d at ten o'clock A. M., and those coming up the road (i. e. from the east) will be met at Hillsboro on the 22d at 7 o'clock, P. M. It will be necessary for the eastern members to start so as to reach Hillsboro on Tuesday, the day before Presbytery meets. Should any change be made in the schedule, before the 23d of April, arrangements will be made to meet the delegates from either direction, who will come on the last trains that pass Hillsboro, before the hour for meeting.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Scotch and Irish Seeds in American Soil: the Early History of the Scotch and Irish Churches, and their Relations to the Presbyterian Church of America. By Rev. J. G. Craighead, D. D. 348 pages. $1. 1879. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

Our children and the general public should know the incalculable debt of the Presbyterian Church, and this whole country, to the suffering and persecuted Scotch and Scotch-Irish Churches. Dr. Craighead has wrought out well the purpose announced in the title of this volume. After giving a clear and valuable resumé of the history of the Scotch and the Irish Churches, he follows the tide of emigration to America, especially to New England, Delaware, Virginia, the Carolinas and Pennsylvania. The chapters on "Presbyterians and Education" and "Patriotism of Presbyterians" in the Revolution, are particularly stimulating and gratifying. Presbyterians have ever been the foremost promoters of liberal education; and our republican institutions are largely due to principles of civil and religious liberty for which they bled, and which the heroic Scotch, Scotch-Irish and Huguenots brought to this land. We hope this book will be widely circulated. Every family should have a copy.

An Introduction to the Greek of the New Testament. By Geo. L. Cary, of the Meadville Theological School. 1879. Price, 75 cents. Warren F Draper, Andover, Mass.

The author states that he has used these lessons, prior to publication, with several classes in the Meadville School, with success. His design is to give persons, unacquainted with Classic Greek, but desirous of reading the New Testament in the original, all that is absolutely necessary to understand New Testament Greek. A faithful study of this "Introduction" will enable them, with the use of a good N. T. Lexicon and Grammar, to begin reading the easier portions of the New Testament. The book is capitally printed, and marks clearly case and tense endings and roots; gives brief exercises, and a compendious statement of principles, peculiarities and rules: also, paradigms, vocabulary and tabular view of noun-endings. Good scholars will find this compend useful for review.

Chambers' Cyclopædia of English Literature. A History, Critical and Biographical, of British and American Authors, with Specimens of their Writings. By Robert Chambers, LL. D. Third Edition, revised by Robert Carruthers, LL. D. In eight volumes. Vol. I., 1879. Pages 406. From American Book Exchange, 55 Beekman street, N. Y.

Chambers' Cyclopædia, originally published in 1843 in Great Britain, is a standard work, whose scope is set forth in its title. It needs no criticism as to the value of contents. This edition, carefully revised, continues the extracts and biographies to the present time.

The "American Book Exchange" offers its ACME Edition, in eight volumes, unabridged, at the following marvelously low prices, to subscribers. The whole 8 vols. complete, bound in paper for $2 50; in cloth, gilt title, $3 50; half morocco, gilt title and top, $5; all paid in advance, and books sent free. A specimen volume will be sent for examination, in paper, for 20c.; cloth, for 35c.; or morocco, 50c. This first volume is issued, and the others will follow quickly. We welcome this excellent cheap edition: a nice present for a parent to make each of his children.

Princeton Review, March, 1879. 37 Park Row, New York. $2 a year. Contents:—Religion and State, by late Prof. Taylor Lewis, LL. D., Union College. Freeman, D. C. L., England. Thiers, by E. De Pressense, France. Final Cause: M. Janet and Prof. Newcomb, by President McCosh, D. D., Princeton. Continental Painting at Paris in 1868, by Philip G. Hamerton, France. Premillenarianism, by Rev. R. M. Patterson, D. D., Philadelphia. The Islands of the Pacific, by Sir Julius Vogel, K. C. M. C., New Zealand.

Short History of German Literature. By Jas. K. Hosmer, Professor of English and German Literature, Washington University, St. Louis. 1879. Pages 591, large 12 mo. $2.25.

Popular histories of literature of other languages than the English are needed. But it requires courage to attempt to grasp the German. In 1876 twelve thousand five hundred works were published in Germany! Prof. Hosmer enters the department of Belles Lettres only. He gives a general sketch of the early literary history of the nation from its foundation in the Codex Argenteus, or Silver Bible of Ulfilas in Mœso-Gothic, in the fourth century, through the long darkness to the Swabian era, when the superb royal family of Hopenstauffen—in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries—brought literary prestige to the nation. Then the wonderful Nibelungen Lied, and the Gudrun, the German Iliad and Odyssey, mirrored the chivalry and picturesque manners of preceding ages, on land and sea. As the lights slowly rise, we see the influence of the Minnesingers and Mastersingers; of Fritsche Closener, Hroswitha and Reuchlin on history and drama; and of Luther above all. So we are brought to behold the six great lights of Modern German Poetry, of whom Goethe is chief. After them we have but lesser lights in the Romantic School, glorying in the mists of Fichté and Schelling, and utterly reactionary. Prof. H. has done his work with much judgment and research. We wish he had given more selections from German Anthology; and left out semi-apologies for Lessing's scepticism, and Goethe immoralities, and some slurs on Luther's work. Yet the "Short History" is valuable and pleasant reading.

Lippincott's Magazine," for April, is particularly good. General Strother ("Porte Crayon") takes one on a "Pilgrimage to the Shrines of Old Virginia," and pictures the old life with a loving pen and a deft pencil. Henry James, who appears for the first time in the garb of illustrations, gives us "English Vignettes," traced with a sparkling delicacy all his own. Mary Dean depicts the "Hoosiers at Home" as only one who is herself thoroughly at home among them, and has noted all their traits with eyes keenly open and bright with humor, can do. The gorgeous "Ancient Decorative Stuffs of the churches and museums of Europe are enthusiastically described by H. M. Benson. "Molière—the Life and the Legend," by J. Brander Matthews, gives us the fruit of careful research, enriched by portraits and other reproductions from old engravings. The second chapter of "My Village in the South," by Annie Porter, leads us into the intimate of domestic life in Louisiana; while another lady writer gives us a delightful glimpse of home life in Brazil. "A Bit of Old Satsuma," by Professor Griffis, should be read by all lovers of bric-a-brac; and there are other short papers, especially some sparkling gossip on "Dangerous Gir.s," which, with the serials and short stories, will be found entertaining by everybody.

We specially thank L. L. Polk, Commissioner of Agriculture, for a copy of the Hand Book of North Carolina. This book embraces Historical and Physiographical Sketches of the State with Statistical and other Information relating to its Industries, Resources and Political Condition. It is well suited for a vade mecum to any one desiring information about the Old North State, and Col. Polk deserves thanks for the manner in which he has accomplished the work. We note that Col. Polk desires full and free information of any inaccuracies there may be. It would be hardly possible to escape some inaccuracies in preparing a work of the kind, but we have neither time to examine closely, nor disposition to be carpingly critical, where there is so much to praise.

The Sunday Magazine, with its usual choice list of contents and admirable illustrations, is before us. Over 125 pages, quarto, per month, of best reading matter with representative illustrations on nearly every page. What more can we say, except that all this is for twenty-five cents a month, or $3.00 a year. Frank Leslie Publishing Co., New York.

We have from Messrs. N. Tibbals & Sons their Complete Theological Catalogue: embracing books in the various departments of Theological Literature, Exegetical, Historical, Doctrinal and Practical, classified and alphabetically arranged; to which is added Popular and Standard Works in General Literature. For sale by N. Tibbals & Sons, 37 Park Row, N. Y. Price 10 cts. in paper; 25 cts. in cloth.

Rev. W. S. Trimble—we so interpret the initials—who is supplying the Presbyterian church at La Belle, Mo., writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian of a good work there, in which he was assisted by Mr. Gallagher of the Northern Church. Special services were held, and the word was "in demonstration of the spirit and of power." "Fourteen persons were added to the Church, twelve on profession of faith, and two by letter. The church was revived, and a heart, growing faint and discouraged in what seemed a fruitless work, was greatly cheered. "Fraternal relations" of the right kind, were enjoyed by Bro. G., and myself."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

The church at Tallahassee, Fla., is vacant and wants a pastor.

Rev. J. C. Caruthers has taken charge of the church at Grenada, Miss., as pastor elect.

Rev. Dr. F. A. Ross will deliver the sermon at the next Commencement of the University of Mississippi.

Rev. Dr. Leybourn's church in Baltimore received forty-seven persons into communion on Sabbath, March 2d.

It is reported that the church at Denton, Texas, which Rev. R. S. Burwell is supplying, will probably call him to the pastorate.

Rev. A. N. Wyckoff of the Reformed Church has taken charge of the Canal street Presbyterian church of New Orleans with encouraging prospects.

Rev. James R. Baird has removed from Yorkville, S. C., to Hosch's Store, Jackson county, Ga., at which latter place he expects to establish a school.

Rev. N. Keff Smith, whom we noted a few weeks as having received a call from Third Presbyterian church of Atlanta, has taken charge of that church.

Rev. John B. Morton, pastor of New Hope church in Augusta Presbytery, has received a call from Lexington church in the same Presbytery for a part of his time. He will serve both churches.

About one hundred and twelve persons have connected themselves with (Louisville (Ky.) First Presbyterian church since Rev. E. O. Guerrant took the pastorate. Fifteen were received on Sabbath, 9th inst.

Rev. Dr. A. W. Miller of Charlotte, N. C., was to have preached the dedication sermon of Limestone Presbyterian church at Gaffney City, S. C., on Saturday last.

On 3d inst. Rev. Dr. Plumer of Columbia, S. C., and Rev. Dr. Irvine of Augusta, Ga., conducted the dedicatory services of the "Up-Town Mission Church" at Augusta, Ga.

Robert Lenox Kennedy of New York bought the lot on which stands the Presbyterian church of Pilatka, Fla., and leased it to the congregation for a term of years to enable them to erect a house of worship.

The services at Second Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky., continue. Rev. Dr. Robinson is aided by Dr. Guerrant. Rev. Mr. Van Laer has been compelled to return to his own church.

Rev. James H. Morrison returns heartfelt thanks to Rev. D. O. Davies for a gift to the church and Sunday school of Henderson, Ky., of ninety-one volumes of most excellent books of the pure literature of the church.

The trustees of Union Theological Seminary meet on April 8, and Rev. B. F. Marable will make a public address to the students on next day. Rev. Ben Helm addresses the Society of Inquiry.

Rev. T. R. Sampson writes to the Central Presbyterian from Athens, Greece, and states that he returned to Athens from Volos early in February, and that all the members of the Mission were in good health.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Petersburg, Va., is holding union meetings in the Second Presbyterian church. The Episcopalians unite with others.

Abingdon Presbytery on the 24th of February dismissed Rev. M. H. Houston to the Presbytery of Louisville. Bro. Houston's address is Taylorville, Ky. E. H. BARNETT, S. C.

First Presbyterian Church, Staunton, Va.—At the communion when Dr. Strickler assisted the pastor, Rev. Mr. Baker, twelve persons united themselves to the church by profession.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Pratt, President of Central University at Richmond, Ky., is to supply the pulpit of Rev. Dr. Skinner, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, Cincinnati, O., during the absence of Dr. S. in Florida. Dr. Skinner goes South for his health.

The prayer meetings which have been held for nine successive weeks under the management of the Young Men's Christian Association of Richmond, Va., have been discontinued. All of the churches participating have been blessed by these meetings for prayer.

The Presbyterian church at Georgetown, Ky., recently received fifteen additions by profession and one by letter. Rev. J. G. Hunter, the pastor, was assisted in the services attending the occasion by Rev. W. T. McElroy and elder J. H. Hopper.

The Presbyterian church at Frankfort, Ky., where Rev. Dr. J. L. McKee has been preaching for some weeks, has enjoyed a rich blessing. The people of God have been greatly revived and strengthened. Fifty-three persons, all but one on examination, have been received into the church and others are contemplating the step.

The following changes of postoffice addresses are noted: Rev. Edwin Cater from Hazlehurst, Miss., to Yazoo City, Miss.; Rev. D. Harrison from Rock Hill, S. C., to Chester, S. C.; Rev. N. Keff Smith from Bolivar, Tenn., to No. 151 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.; Rev. Alexander L. Hogshead from Osceola, Va., to Abingdon, Virginia.

At the regular sacramental meeting at Catlettsburg, Ky., on February 23d, there were eight persons received into communion, seven of them on profession of faith. Five were baptized. Others will probably unite soon. The church is greatly energized by the result. Rev. F. W. Lewis, pastor, was assisted by Rev. W. E. Hill of Virginia.

Rev. Edward Palmer, now in his ninety-first year, recently spent about a month in Walterboro, S. C., but has returned to his home at Barnwell C. H. The Southern Presbyterian says: "He still preaches to our little flock in that town 'the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.' We hear that he does not intend to pay his accustomed visit this spring to his two sons in the Southwest; Revs. Drs. B. M. and E. P. Palmer, but that he expects a visit to be paid to him by Dr. B. M. Palmer early in June."

The Old Commonwealth says that at the Presbyterian church of Harrisburg, Va., Rev. Dr. Bowman, pastor, services have been held nightly for near a week, and a revival of religious zeal with some accessions to the church, have been the result. Dr. Bowman has been assisted since the commencement of these services by Rev. Mr. Baker of Staunton and Rev. Dr. Graham of Winchester, both of whom preached a number of very able and instructive discourses.

The editor of the Carolina Watchman has been visiting Mocksville, N. C., and gives his readers the following account of Rowan and Davie Cluster:

The Cluster Meeting of the Presbyterian churches of Rowan and Davie held their spring session in Mr. Crawford's church, Monday and Tuesday last. The attendance was good. Dr. J. G. Ramsay was chairman. Two very able essays were read Monday afternoon. One on "The duties of church members to their officers," by Dr. Ramsay; and the other by Prof. Sterling on "Worldly Amusements." At night the Rev. J. A. Ramsay preached an interesting sermon on "Lay Evangelism." After which the Cluster met in form and proceeded to discuss the question, "Is it incumbent on all members of the church, not providentially hindered, to attend the Sabbath-school either as teachers or scholars." The Rev. J. Rumple, Rev. J. A. Ramsay, Mr. J. C. Foard, Dr. J. C. Ramsay, Maj. N. F. Hall, Prof. Sterling, and others took part in this discussion, which, not being finished at night was resumed next morning. It was decided to record an affirmative answer to the question. The Cluster spent most of the afternoon of Tuesday in discussing the question "By what means can the revival of family worship and family religion be secured?" The churches were called in regular order and nearly all had delegates present with a word to speak. The meeting, on the whole, was interesting, and it is hoped its labor will be fruitful of good to many more than those participating in its exercises.

Rev. Edwin Cater has been called to the church at Yazoo City, Miss.

The Chapel Hill Ledger says that Rev. Dr. Moses D. Hoge has been invited by the trustees to deliver the Baccalaureate sermon at the next commencement of the University of North Carolina and that he has accepted.

We learn that a pleasant work is progressing quietly in the church at Fulton, Mo., the fruit of our Synodical College. Eight persons were received last Sabbath. The pastor, Rev. W. H. Marquess, is encouraged by unusual interest, to protract the special services.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Gen. T. U. Faucette, of Granville county, and Rev. R. B. Anderson, of Morganton, have had quite an interesting meeting in the Presbyterian church at Hickory, N. C. Services begun on Friday night and continued until the following Monday night—during which time many good sermons were preached, and six members added to the church.—Piedmont Press.

At Charlotte, N. C., in connection with the Northern Presbyterian Church Biddle University for training colored men in the ministry, has received a remittance from Scotland of £1,258 which has realized $6,130.67. The Africo-American Presbyterian says: "The above fund is to be invested by the trustees of the University as a permanent fund, and the proceeds from the interest are to be applied to the support of such students as may be prosecuting their studies in Biddle University preparatory to mission work in Africa. We thank our friends in Scotland for their munificence, and the students of the United Presbyterian Theological Hall for their laudable and successful efforts in pleading this cause among the churches.

NORTHERN.

Items gleaned from exchanges:

It is announced that the attempt of St. Mark's Church, (Episcopal), Detroit, to go over to the Reformed body, which they have voted to do, will be resisted by the authorities of the diocese so far as taking the Church property is concerned.

The Congregational church in Keokuk, Iowa, Rev. Clayton Welles pastor, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary February 16th. It had when formed only nine members. It has received since that time 452, of whom 200 joined during the present pastorate of six and one-half years. About $50,000 have been raised during that time for building purposes, and $12,500 for benevolence.

The Waldensian Church has sent Sig. Tuzzo to ask help from the churches in the United States. He is now in New York City.

The Christian Intelligencer says: We are informed that a pastor up the river is to receive a legacy of $5,000 under the will of a late citizen. Another pastor, still more fortunate is to enjoy a bequest amounting to $10,000; and we have heard of a third who owns a farm that was given him by an appreciative hearer. Bishop Clark of Rhode Island recently had $5,000 left him by a friend. Rev. Dr. Lawrence and Mr. Walker, of New York City, had $10,000 each left by parishioners lately, and Dr. Houghton gets $1,000 by Mrs. Strecker's will.

The Committee of the Brooklyn Presbytery, to whom was referred the case of Dr. Talmage, brought in its report on Monday. In this Dr. Talmage's orthodoxy is endorsed while his methods are deplored as being "out of harmony" with those of Christ and his apostles, with the practice of the Christian Church and the "Directory for Worship." With reference to his methods, however, the committee takes no further action than to request that the expression of its disapproval be adopted as a minute by the Presbytery. Upon the allegation of falsehood and deceit it recommends that Dr. Talmage be cited for trial. These allegations relate to Dr. Talmage's withdrawal from the Christian at Work, and to the various transactions in his church which have already been made public, notably his action in the payment of the debt and the re-engagement of the organist. After protracted debate the report was adopted by the Presbytery and a hearing of the case set down for the following day. The committee declares that it expresses no opinion respecting Dr. Talmage's guilt or innocence, any further than to agree in thinking that there is sufficient ground to call for an ecclesiastical trial.—Christian Union.

Recently in one of the Lowell Baptist churches, the bell telephone apparatus was placed in the pulpit on Sunday, and the sermon was heard distinctly by people having connection with it in all parts of the city. The singing, both tune and words, was heard at Foxborough, fifty-five miles distance, and at Foxborough, in Boston, eighty miles away.

Mr. Moody's work in Baltimore is widespread, as many as ninety churches are interested and his success is very great.

The Union Theological Seminary of New York City has the largest number of students of any seminary in America, and with one exception—that at Liepsic, Germany—the largest in the world, 122. Nineteen States are represented and fifteen colleges. Canada sends four students and Turkey one. The entire number of students connected with this seminary from its beginning is 1882, of whom 1,359 are supposed to be still living; 70 have become foreign missionaries.

Rev. W. H. Claggett of the Presbytery of Palmyra, in connection with the Southern Church, closed a meeting at Leavenworth, Kansas, on 14th ulto. Seventy-five persons professed Christ. Sixty-eight joined the Presbyterian Church.

The Catholic Bishop of Alton, Ill., has issued a pastoral forbidding his people to read the Freeman's Journal, the Western Watchman, and the Irish World, all Catholic journals, as "subversive of the order established by Christ in his Church." The Irish World is Fenian in its tendencies, the Freeman's Journal is edited by a converted Scotchman, and the Watchman by a Catholic priest.

Rev. Dr. Washburn, the rector of Calvary (Episcopal) Church, New York, preached on Sunday morning, February 9, on "Missions," after which a collection for this object was made, and $2,500 was placed on the plate.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE LESSON OF TRIALS.

Interior:

We could name a thoughtful father who, when his son left school, told him to go now and find work for himself. That boy trudged the streets and stores and shops day by day for nearly two months—footsore, weary and well nigh utterly discouraged. He envied the carters and stevedores on the docks. Finally he secured a position, and, in announcing the joyful news, said, "I have a position now, and I'll hold it. You'll never see me on the street again." And he did hold it. And his employers will hold him. That two months was the best two months of his whole education. The hardest work, the severest application is joy compared with the trudging and bluffing which came of lack of work.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

Richmond Christian Advocate:

"Are you a member of any church, sir?" "No, not exactly a member, but I lean toward the Methodists." There are many of this sort who lean toward the churches, but who, like the class whose failings lean to virtue's side, don't go quite over. These persons are a hopeful class, notwithstanding they only lean toward the church—indeed, because they lean toward it. The men who form a belt about the church, ought to be brought within the corporation. They are susceptible; they are partially instructed in Christian thought and life; and if their conversion should not be delayed till they settle down into half and half ways, they will become useful in extending the conquests of Christ. There is reason to believe that because they are hearers of the Word, given to hospitality and liberal in contributing, they will be looked upon as in less danger than men like those upon whom the tower in Siloam fell. But it is still true "except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." So, except they repent, they shall all, like the men of Siloam, perish. Bring them to Christ!—Bring them to Christ!!

EACH OWES SOMETHING.

Christian at Work:

The member owes a duty to the Church. He is not simply and only a receiver. The idea, indeed, is too prevalent that one enters the Church simply for his own sake. If he is edified, instructed, and, above all, comforted, they think that is enough. He has gone to get these things, and he is not disappointed. But he will not get these long unless he begins to give. For he must learn that he has a work to do for his fellow-members. He is one of a brotherhood; and the duty of all connected with that brotherhood is "to consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works."

Nothing draws along with it such a glory as the Lord's day. Never has it unfolded without some witness and welcome, some song and salutation. It has been the coronation day of martyrs—the first day of saints. It has been from the first day till now the sublime day of the Church of God; still the outgoings of its mornings and evenings rejoice. Let us then remember it and keep it holy.—Dr. Hamilton.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopœdia is the work of John Kitto, D D, F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a cpmpleto and anthentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valnable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literatnre, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illnstrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best anthenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new snbscriber, or any one sending us a new snbscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopœdia. Publishers price is $5 00.

Murmur at nothing. If our ills are reparable, it is ungratefnl; if remediless, it is vain. A Christian builds his fortune on something better than stoicism; he is pleased with everything that happens, because he knows it could not happen if it did not please God; and that which pleases God must be best.—H. L. Wayland.

In Concord, N. C., on the 2nd day of March, 1879, of pneumonia, Mrs. ISABELLA McNINCH, in the 70th year of her age.

The Saviour whom she had followed through a long life was with her at the approach of death, and by His presence was she sustained and comforted. Her life was devoted to the glory of the Saviour and her death was triumphant by the power of His grace.

An affectionate mother and devoted friend, many will miss her and fondly cherish her memory.

L. McK.

In Concord, N. C., on the 11th of March, 1879, of pneumonia, Mrs. JANE BINGHAM, widow of the late Dr. L. S. Bingham.

Suddenly did the summons come, and yet it found her ready, and so sustained and cheered by the Christian hope, that she could respond "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil."

L. McK.

On March 10th, near Salem church, Moore county, N. C., Mr. JOHN DALRYMPLE, a valuable ruling elder of that church, aged about 75 years.

A further notice hereafter.

J. P. McP.

On Feb. 16th, at her residence, in Orange county, Mrs. ALICE E RAY, wife of Mr. George Ray, in the 25d year of her age. Through her protracted illness she was cheered and comforted by the Christian's hope. In the hour of death she seemed to be perfectly resigned; and asked those whom she loved to meet her in heaven.

In Robeson county, N. C., December 3d, 1878, in the 36th year of her age, Mrs. MARY E., wife of Mr. Duncan I. Livingstone.

Mary in early life "chose that good part which shall not be taken away from her."

In Richmond county, N. C, on the 3d Sabbath in November, Miss CHRISTIAN WILKINS fell asleep in Jesus, in the 88th year of her age.

She was for about 68 years a consistent and faithful member of the Presbyterian Church. She was a woman of deep-toned piety and of great energy and perseverance and possessed more than ordinary mental acuteness. For several months previous to her death, she was confined to her bed—but bore her afflictions with much Christian resignation—and anxiously looked forward for the summons which would call her to that rest which remaineth for the people of God. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

OF THE NEXT

General Assembly.

At this time I desire to make known to our Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published on a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the published report of the last Assembly—the only one at which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer—and dishonored by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee appointed over the business, their hearty assent to publish the report of the next Assembly upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from many restrictions by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method which prevented me from making my last report as complete as I desired, I hope by a plan of my own, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the Church with (what it has never enjoyed) prompt intelligence of the proceedings, and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time. G. L. WOLFE.

FOR THE FAMILY

Imitation.

BY CHARLES F. RICHARDSON.

Where shall we find a perfect life whereby
To shape our lives for all eternity?

This man is great and wise; the world reveres him,
Reveres, but cannot love his heart of stone:
And so it dares not follow, though it fears him,
But bids him walk his mountain path alone.

That man is good and gentle; all men love him.
Yet dare not ask his feeble arm for aid;
The world's best work is ever far above him,
He shrinks beneath the storm-capped mountain's shade.

Oh, loveless strength! O strengthless love! the Master
Whose life shall shall shape our lives is not as thou;
Sweet friend to peace, strong Saviour in disaster,
Our heart of hearts enfolds thine image now!

Be Christ's the fair and perfect life whereby
We shape our lives for all eternity.

The Patched Jacket.

"O dear! I don't want to go to Sunday school one bit. Please let me stay at home this once, mother," said Willie Stone, who was looking out of the window of a plain room into the quiet street.

Willie's mother looked up in surprise, and seeing the boy's troubled face asked him why he wished to stay at home, and whether he was sick.

"No, I am not sick, but I don't want to go this morning."

After much urging he told his mother that the boys had been teasing him about his old, patched clothes; that they had nicknamed him "The Patched Jacket," and as many of his schoolmates attended the same Sunday school he knew that he would be made fun of there.

His mother lovingly tried to show him that he had better do right, even if laughed at, but she knew how hard it would be for him. She was therefore both surprised and glad, when Willie's sisters had entered the room, ready to start, to see Willie pick up his hat and books and go with them. Most earnestly did she pray that she might be directed in the governing of her children, and might be able to provide for them.

Little did Mrs. Stone think that her prayer was so soon to be answered, or did Willie know that his patched jacket would be the means of securing him a situation. Just before the closing exercises of the school an active business man entered the room, who proved to be a friend of the superintendent. He was invited to address the school, and while doing so his eyes fell on Willie. Judging from the boy's clothes that he was poor he inquired about him. Learning that his mother was a widow, with a large family to provide for, he told the superintendent that he was in want of an errand boy, and should like to speak to Willie after school. Willie was much surprised on being called up after school, and still more so when Mr. Moore told him he was in search of a boy for his store. He handed Willie his card to give to his mother, and bade him ask her if he might enter his service.

Willie hastened home to tell the good news. He was at the store at the appointed hour the next morning. After a few questions asked by Mr. Moore, Willie was engaged to come the following morning. He stayed in the employ of Mr. Moore for many years, serving him faithfully as an errand boy, clerk and book keeper. Being offered a better position by another gentleman, on the advice of Mr. Moore he accepted it, and is now one of the most respected men in a large city. He has never regretted listening to the advice of his mother on that spring morning, and going to Sunday school in his old patched jacket.—S. S. Visitor.

She has Never Done Anything.

"She might have been a great woman. She might really have made a mark in the world, but she's been married all her grown life, and has six children, and so has never done anything, poor dear!" And my friend went her way to write an article on political economy.

I sat and thought of the woman who had never done anything. I knew all about her. She had had six children—four boys and two girls, exactly two years apart. One of the boys was a clergyman, one a surgeon, one a literary man of repute, one a rising artist. I had heard those men say, that when they were at school their mother supervised all their lessons, and that they always repeated them to her before breakfast every morning.

The artist had told me that she gave him his first lesson in drawing. The author, that she revised his compositions, suggested subjects, and encouraged him to persevere until he made his first trembling entrance into the literary world. The surgeon asserted that to her excellent care he owed the steady nerves without which a surgeon, whatever his capacity, is useless.

The girls are neither prudes nor flirts. They respect themselves, and teach men to respect womanhood. All that it was right that they should know of life they learned from their mother. She is their confidante. It is impossible that they should ever be anything but a credit to themselves and their future husbands. One plays magnificently: her mother taught her the rudiments of music. One recites with great feeling; she never had any instructor but her mother.

Meanwhile, this woman who had never done anything kept one servant, did all her own marketing, and all her own sewing, until the girls were old enough to help her. She cut their dresses and taught them to make their own in time. She nursed six babies as nature meant they should be nursed. Her husband never found his home untidy or his dinner bad. Every one said that her house was beautifully furnished, but few knew how much of its adornment was the work of her own hands—chairs covered, carpets laid, rugs woven, home-made flower-stands filled with the product of a few shillings' worth of seeds, which rivaled the costly production of the fashionable florist.

Meanwhile, no sanitarian ever had stricter laws as to bathing, exercise, and proper living. Health bloomed on every cheek. No one was ever bilious in that house. Nor were there comfortable rooms reserved for the calls of strangers while the household crowded into narrow quarters. Home has always been home in that woman's house. In the evenings, and without making any fuss about it, she helped her husband in his business by keeping his books, and there has never been a time when she was too busy to visit a sick friend, or take an interest in the current topics of the day, on each of which she holds decided opinions, pinning her faith to no man's sleeve.

"Never did anything! Poor dear!"

I looked after Mrs. Miggs, who could not make herself a decent cup of tea, who has never had any children, whose husband is a forlorn little man, with rumpled shirt bosoms, and no collar buttons—Mrs. Miggs, who has lived utterly for herself for all the many years of her life, and whose sole accomplishment is that of speaking fluently of momentous subjects of which we understand nothing, and I thought: Oh, Mrs. Miggs, would that you—yes, and half the speakers, writers, painters, politicians, and celebrated people generally of this world—had done half so much good in it as this one quiet woman, of whom you say:

"Poor dear! She has done nothing!"

For what is it to write the best book in the world in comparison with writing upon throbbing hearts maxims of truth and purity? Is not a living form, full of health and beauty, more exquisite than any statue of marble? And should not she whose children have no blemish of mind or body be prouder than any sculptor? Cannot one's home be as beautiful an "interior" as any hung in the gallery of art? And is not the economy of the household a part of political economy?

There are women who could not do all that this woman has done, or to whom God has not given such a field of labor. Let them take their own specialty thankfully and do their best; but when it was done, the good wife and mother has done more; and let them not seek to rob her of her meed of praise and honor.—Exchange

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dreams.

There seems no doubt that in sleep the imagination acts independently of the will and the conscience and the reason. Even passion or desire is incapable of producing a required dream; in the midst of intense grief dreams are frivolous and irrelevant, and the dearest images cannot be recalled at pleasure. The moral sense is non-existent; there is an animal fear, but no remorse; there is personal anxiety, but no responsibility. The confused multitude of images destroy the orderly succession which constitutes the category of crime; you know the numerous instances where the dreamer remembers on waking that he has gone through an almost interminable series of events, and yet it is proved by circumstances that he has only been asleep for a few moments. The image of a word will suggest by its sound a whole series of events in the most ludicrous connection. There is a story given by M. Maury in his work "Le Sommeil et les Reves," where the word "kilometre," coming up in the mind of the sleeper, sent him walking an enormous distance counting the milestones; then changing to "kilogramme," placed him in a grocer's shop, in which he was put in a balance against a number of weights; then from a jumble of sound transported him to the Island of Gilolo, of which he did not remember ever to have thought; then to a garden full of the flower Lobelia; then to Cuba with General Lopez, and lastly to a game at Loto. In the same way, when the exclusion of the senses is not complete, the lightest impression suggests some curious analogous image. Descartes mentions that the bite of a flea made him think himself wounded by a sword. Dugald Stewart mentions a dreamer with a hot bottle at his feet fancying himself going up Mount Ætna, and there may be some reader who will remember an analogous effect of sounds, especially those of music. So far there is meaning in the expression of a noted physiologist, that sleep is a short insanity, and that you should never make any decision or calculation for some time after you wake, for you may be unconsciously still under the power of some dominant image which the normal action of the senses will clear away.—Lord Houghton.

Scene in a Massachusetts Church.

In 1646 the Rev. Dr. Samuel Whiting was minister of Lynn. One Obadiah Turner kept a journal at that time, in which occurs the following:

"1646, June ye 3d: Allen Brydges hath bin chose to wake ye sleepers in meeting, and being much proud of his place must needs have a fox taile fixed to ye end of a long staff wherewith he may brush the faces of them yt will have naps in time of discourse: likewise a sharp thorne wherewith he may prick such as be most sounde. On ye laste Lord his day, as he strutted about ye meeting house, he did spy Mr. Tomlins sleeping with much comforte, his head kept steadie by being in ye corner and his hand grasping ye rail. And soe spying, Allen did quicklie thrust his staff behind Dame Ballond, and give him a grievous prick upon ye hand. Whereupon Mr. Tomlins did spring upp much above ye floor, and with terrible force strike his hand against ye wall, and also, to ye great wonder of all, prophanlie exclaim, in a loude voice, 'Cuss the woodchuck,' he dreaming, as it seemed, yt a woodchuck had seized and bit his hand. But on coming to know where he was, and ye greate scandall he had committed, he seemed much abashed, but did not speake. And I think he will not soon again go to sleepe in meeting. Ye women may sometimes sleepe, and none know it by reason of their enormous bonnets. Mr. Whiting doth pleasantlie say yt from ye pulpit he doth seem to be preaching to stacks of straw, with men jotting here and there among them."—Springfield Republican.

Pearls and Pearl Culture.

As far back as we have a history for any gems we have record of pearls; and, not even excepting the diamond, is there a jewel so often spoken of in history, sacred and profane, as this one. What are they and where are they produced? Are they capable of being multiplied by art? In view of the great commercial value of these jewels, such queries are of considerable importance. There is scarcely a country on the face of the globe where pearls have not at some period been found, though at the present day the principal fisheries are near the coast of Ceylon, Japan, Java, Sumatra, Bahrein in the Persian Gulf, and the islands in the vicinity of Panama. Of all those, however, none equal those obtained in the Persian Gulf, in color, size, purity, and that translucency which gives this gem its great value. The pearl fisheries in the last named locality are said to yield upward of $1,500,000 annually; those of Panama reach about the same figure. Pearls have also been found in various streams of the United States, and in 1858 considerable excitement was occasioned by the discovery of some large sized ones near Salem, in New Jersey. A New Jersey pearl, over an inch in diameter, found near Paterson, was sent to Paris, where it was purchased by the Empress Eugenie for 12,500 francs ($2 500).

This gem was held in great estimation by the Romans, who paid enormous prices for fine specimens. Julius Cæsar is said to have possessed one, the value of which would now be $150,000, and Pliny states that the pearls in the eardrops of Cleopatra, and which she swallowed to the health of Mark Antony, were valued at a sum that would amount to $400,000 of our money. Tavernier mentions a pearl found at Catira, on the coast of Arabia, in 1633, which was sold to the King of Persia for $280,000. The "Pereguine," found in 1574, during some of the filibustering expeditions to America and carried to Spain (where it now remains among the crown jewels), is valued at $37,500. Pope Leo X. had a pearl that was valued at $75,000, and the crown jewels of Portugal have among them a pear-shaped one, weighing about 25 carats. A close examination of the subject reduces the great pearls of the world to a very limited number; the large examples running over 20 carats weight, which are absolutely known to exist at the present day, do not number over a score.

Having spoken of the value of these jewels, we are led to consider the question, What are they, and how are they formed? According to an old and popular fancy, pearls are dewdrops transmogrified. Pliny asserts that the oysters rise to the surface in the night to feed upon the dews of heaven, which the sun's rays upon the water nourish into pearls. According to Boethius de Bovelt, "The mussels, early in the morning, in the gentle cleare and calme aire, lift up their upper shells and mouthes above the water, and these receive the fine and pleasant breath or dew of heaven; and afterwards, according to the measure and qualitie of this vitall force received, they first conceive, then swell, and finallie produce the pearle." At this very day, in the East, the belief exists that these gems are the drops of rain, which, as they fall into the sea, become pearls, and in that state are swallowed by the oyster. A stay was given to such a belief by Cardonus, who demonstrated that these shell fish have their homes upon the sea bottom, where they are firmly attached to rocks and other substances, and have therefore no power to rise. Still this fancy survived till the researches of Mr. Gray and Sir Everard Home proved that pearls are merely the internal nacreous coat of the shell, which, from some cause or other, has assumed a spherical form. Home's theory, however, that the pearl is an abortive egg of the oyster, enveloped in its own nacre, is scarcely worthy the trouble of refutation. The theory of Reaumur as to the origin of pearls is now generally held to be correct—that is, that the pearl is a concretion of the juices consequent upon a disease or rupture in the mollusk, without the introduction of any foreign matter. The pearl is simply carbonate of lime—rather harder than calcspar, of which it has precisely the same chemical composition, but with the addition of films of animal membrane between the many layers of mineral matters which go to form it. It is this animal matter which, when dry, gives the pearl its hardness.—Scientific American.

A Little Every Day.

A little helpfulness every day. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense true living. It is not in great deeds that the only blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, in the neighbor's house, on the playground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

A little look into the Bible every day. One chapter a day. What a treasure of Bible knowledge one may acquire in ten years! Every day a verse committed to memory. What a volume in the mind at the end of twenty-five years!

A little knowledge every day. One fact in a day. How small a fact is one fact! Only one! Ten years pass by. Three thousand and six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

Penalties of Enthusiasm.

On one of his midnight excursions Dick was taken for a poacher. It may be mentioned that the river Thurso is one of the best salmon rivers in Scotland. Indeed, in early spring there is no river that comes up to it. Sir John Sinclair boasted that on one occasion 2,500 Salmon had been caught at one haul—a draught that has never been exceeded. The price paid by the salmon fishers is so high—at present £20 per rod monthly—that the river is carefully watched to prevent poaching. One night a gentleman in charge of the river went out to see that the keepers were doing their duty, and also to detect the poachers if he could. He went to a particular spot, where there were evident traces of poaching. The river was then in good poaching order. Just at the break of day, an hour or more before sunrise, the watcher saw the figure of a man on the horizon some hundred yards distant. He shrank down and crept forward, watching the man's movements in the gray dawn of morn. He was seen close to the river's side, prowling up and down the banks. Surely this must be a poacher. The man moved on. When he appeared on some high bank, the watcher hid himself so that he might not be seen between him and the horizon. He crawled forward on all-fours, stalking the poacher as he would a deer. At last, after two hours' stalking and dodging, the man suddenly disappeared in some low crevice in the rocks, just below Dirlotbridge. The sun was just rising; the watcher saw him crouching down, as if hiding something amongst the ferns. Of course it must be a salmon! With beating heart, he suddenly rushed up to the man and shouted, "Now I have caught you poaching!" The man's back was towards him. He was intently gazing on some object before him. He turned round in a composed manner and said, "No, sir, I am not poaching; I am only gathering some specimens of plants." He then opened his handkerchief, which contained some herbs, plants and flowers. The watcher was disappointed and disgusted. He had been crawling for two hours on his hands and knees, coming up with his man and finding in his possession, not a salmon, but a lot of things which, in his estimation, were worse than useless. Dick was then sixteen miles from Thurso. He had left home at midnight in search of his favorite botanical specimens. Some of these were so minute and delicate that they could only be seen at sun dawn. It was only at break of day that they unfolded their delicate tints, spread their leaves and put forth their lovely blossoms to the rising sun—perhaps revealed to the perfervid botanist by the glistening of a dew drop. Thus Dick was rewarded, but not the salmon watcher who had stalked him.—Smile's "Robert Dick, of Thurso."

SECULAR NEWS.

The North Carolina Coast Canal Company measure has passed the House of Representatives of the N. C. Legislature. It is to provide an inland water communication from the navigable waters of Virginia to Cape Fear, free from the dangers of Hatteras and the coast of this State. The stock to be $1,000,000, and the charter to be for ninety years. The bill passed both its readings.

Bill to incorporate the town of Quhelo, Robeson county, passed the N. C. Legislature. This will change the name of Shoe Heel.

LONDON, March 12.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Szegedin this (Wednesday) morning at 8 o'clock says: "After a fearful night of anxiety all efforts are useless. The water broke through with immense force at 3 o'clock, carrying away a part of the railway station embankment and the rolling stock, and within a few hours the town was many feet deep in water. Terrible suffering is commencing. Shrieks and cries from thousands are heard. Houses are crashing by the score, and in many cases carrying their inmates with them. There is no gas, the works being fifteen feet in water. I fear we shall run short of food. One boat was just going to save a large house filled with people, when a fearful crash carried with the whole living freight. The scene is simply heartrending. Over eighty thousand people are out of house and home. Hundreds are drowning, and the water is still rapidly rising.

This is most true, and all history bears testimony to it that men may second fortune, but they cannot thwart her; they may weave her web; but they cannot break it.—Machiavelli.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S CELEBRATED LIVER PILLS, FOR THE CURE OF Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint, DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

MINISTERS IN THE RALEIGH CHURCH.

Turning back and reviewing the history of the Church of Raleigh, we find the following names of ministers, who served the church for a greater or less time, viz.: Revs. Messrs. William Loftwitch Turner, William McPheeters, Benjamin H. Rice, Thomas P. Hunt, N. H. Harding, —— Apthorp, Michael Osborn, Drury Lacy, J. M. Atkinson, C. R. Vaughan and John S. Watkins. Messrs. Atkinson, Vaughan and Watkins are still in the midst of their labors, and the record of the lives of the others is either written elsewhere or is inaccessible to the writer. But there are two, one gone to his rest, and the other still remaining with us, whose histories it will be useful to have sketched for the eyes of North Carolina Presbyterians. I mean Rev. William McPheeters, D. D., and Rev. Drury Lacy, D. D., Prominent among the ministers and teachers of North Carolina was

REV. WILLIAM M'PHEETERS, D. D.

His ancestors removed from the North of Ireland to Pennsylvania, and thence to Virginia, where William was born in Augusta county, September 28, 1778. His classical course was begun in Staunton, and his education was finished in Liberty Hall Academy, (now Washington and Lee University), Lexington, Virginia. He undertook the study of medicine, but soon abandoned it, and began his theological studies under the Rev. Samuel Brown, the minister of New Providence Church. He was licensed by Lexington Presbytery, April 19, 1802. After licensure he visited Kentucky and Ohio. He taught and preached a short sime in Danville, Kentucky, and afterwards preached at New Libanon and Windy Cove, in Virginia. In the year 1806, April 15th, he received a call to Bethel Church, and a few days afterwards was ordained to the full work of the ministry. Here he remained for about three years, preaching at Bethel Church, and residing in Greenville and teaching a classical school.

It was in 1809, that he was invited to take charge of the Raleigh Academy and become the "pastor of the city." At that time there were no organized churches in the city, and the inhabitants worshipped together in the hall of the House of Commons.

For thirteen years, Mr. McPheeters continued to teach the Academy, and for two years longer was preaching, either to the community in general or to the Presbyterial congregation in particular. In 1816, the Presbyterian church of Raleigh was organized —the other churches having withdrawn and organized churches already. In 1828, he declined the office of Pastor, then tendered to him, but seems to have resided in Raleigh, and preached occasionally until 1836. At the latter date he took charge of the female school in the city of Fayetteville, but remained there but one year. For three years after this he served as agent of the Presbyterian Board of Domestic Missions. In 1840, Dr. McPheeters was elected to the presidency of Davidson College, but in consequence of ill-health he felt constrained to decline accepting the office. On the morning of the 7th of November, 1842, he breathed his last amidst the affectionate attentions of his family.

Dr. McPheeters was for many years a trustee of the University of North Carolina, and the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred by that institution. He was a well-balanced and cultured man, no intellectual features so prominent as to eclipse the others. Many pleasant instances of his wit and humor were remembered by his cotemporaries. He was ready at repartee, and could rebuke an offender in a most unanswerable manner. One day while conversing with Gov. Swain, a distinguished gentleman came up, and entering into the conversation, introduced the name of the Deity in a manner savoring of irreverence. Without a change of tone or manner, Dr. McPheeters remarked: "I have known our friend, Mr. B., for many years, but have never been able to teach him to speak properly. He always addresses me as if he were just up from the regions below." Mr. B. bore the reproof awkwardly enough, but still was compelled to submit in silence to this merited castigation.

Upon another occasion, a ministerial brother of a somewhat censorious temperament, while looking at some gay equipages belonging to members of another denomination, said to Dr. McPheeters, "They will hardly get to heaven in coaches." "I don't know," replied the Doctor quietly; "we read that Elijah went up in a chariot."

Dr. McPheeters was several times a commissioner to the General Assembly, and never failed to command the respect of that body. Gov. Swain's opinion of him was that he had few equals as a presbyter in church judicatories, and, within the bounds of his acquaintance, no superiors. (Authorities, Dr. Lacy and Gov. Swain in Sprague's Annals.)

The only other minister of the Raleigh Church, whose life and labors I venture to sketch, is

REV. DRURY LACY, D. D.

Drury Lacy, the youngest son of Rev. Drury Lacy, D. D., and Anne Smith Lacy, was born in Prince Edward county, Virginia, August 3, 1802, about three miles north-east of Hampden Sidney College. He was educated, in his boyhood, at his father's residence, where a classical school was for a long time kept up by his father, after he resigned his office in college, and afterwards by his eldest brother, Rev. William S. Lacy. He entered the Sophomore Class of Washington College, and afterwards the Junior Class of Hampden Sidney from which he was graduated in 1820. He began teaching school, and settling at the old homestead, he restored the classical school of his father and brother to a respectable standing among similar institutions. In 1824 he was married the first time. In 1828 he ceased teaching and began a course of theological study at Union Seminary, three miles distant, walking there and home each day.

He was licensed by Hanover Presbytery, in session at Cub Creek Church, Charlotte county, Virginia., April, 1831, and had assigned to him as a field of labor the county of Amelia and part of Powhatan. He preached at a number of points in these counties, and raised most of the funds to build three decent churches—one in Amelia near its centre, called Mt. Zion; one in the eastern part of the county, called Namozene, and one in Powhatan, at the village of Genito. He was ordained by East Hanover Presbytery, (Hanover having been divided into East and West since his licensure), in April, 1833, at Genito village.

In the summer of this same year (1833) he was invited to Newbern, North Carolina, which he visited, and in due time was called to take charge of the church. He accepted this call and began work there the first of January, 1834, and was installed pastor by Orange Presbytery at its regular sessions in Newbern in April of that year. This relation continued until December, 1836. He received a call to become pastor of the Raleigh church in the autumn of that year, and, constrained by ill-health at Newbern, accepted the call and entered on his duties at Raleigh, January 1st, 1837. He was installed pastor in November of that year. After tearing himself away from Newbern, where his ministry had been blessed in adding to the church, and in the increase of interest in the Bible class and Sabbath-school, the prospect at Raleigh was appalling. The church was small, embracing only thirty-nine members, the attendance meagre and irregular, and withal a most distressing case of discipline, required immediate attention. All this was discouraging. For nearly all the first year, the church was in such a dilapidated condition to be unfit for use, and public worship was held in the Session House, which was large enough to contain the congregation. By degrees light began to shine; the congregation increased, Sunday-schools and Bible classes were organized, the church was repaired and made comfortable and decent, communion seasons were made quarterly instead of semi-annual, and now and then additions were made on profession of faith.

There were two seasons of special interest during his ministry there, when large numbers were added. One of these lasted from December, 1841, till May, 1842; five months without any apparent abatement, deep, silent, solemn, without machinery, without even an inquiry meeting. The pastor saw each one alone, at his own house. The fruits of this outpouring were forty-two additions to the church. It was a glorious sight. Several ministers and ruling elders were the result of that ingathering. Dr. Lacy's ministry here extended over eighteen years and six months, and it is thought that about two hundred were added to the church in that time, on an average of over ten per annum. The church had thirty-nine members at his accession, and there were one hundred and sixteen, when he left.

On the 24th of January, 1855, Dr. Lacy was unanimously elected President of Davidson College. The next month, Maxwell Chambers, of Salisbury, died, leaving the college a legacy amounting to $250,000. In April, Dr. Lacy accepted the Presidency, and entered upon his work, urged on by the advice of his friends, but under the protest of his church, and almost against his own judgment. It was his lot to preside over the destinies of the college, at a period, when, under the influence of a bountiful endowment, the college was expanding, enlarging its corps of professors, and raising its standard of scholarship. Under him the old order of things died out, and the new regime was fully inaugurated. He labored in this new field with all his might, but his strength was taxed, and his feelings often painfully affected by the new order of difficulties and trials that surrounded him. In the six years of his administration seventy-eight students and ten villagers were added to the church, eighty-eight in all, on an average of nearly fifteen annually, a larger proportion than in his former church.

On the 31st of January, 1860, Dr. Lacy tendered his resignation of the presidency, to take effect in July. After this, Dr. Lacy returned to Raleigh, and with his wife opened a female school. At the opening of Peace Institute, in 1872, Dr. Lacy's school and its teachers were incorporated in the new institute. Here in the 77th year of his age, this venerable servant of Christ spends his time in reading, writing and receiving the visits of his kindred and friends.

THE BIBLE A TEST OF MORAL CHARACTER

MR. EDITOR—The following notes and remarks were taken down whilst and after reading some very hard theology. If the style is more curt and less attractive than usual it is still hoped that the thoughts presented may be read and applied by each one with a spirit of self-application. If so, the writer will be fully satisfied:

The Bible is the Statute Book of a moral kingdom, and contains an exhibition of the character and government of God. It presents the Supreme Being, an omnipotent, wise and holy Sovereign, sitting on the throne. Man is his subject, placed in circumstances the most favorable to render a cheerful and prompt obedience. Here he is to pass a brief probation, and then to enter on a state of endless retribution. In this government there is no change. Individual rights are inviolably preserved. The innocent never suffer and the guilty escape punishment. Here is no injustice, no act that is not dictated by the highest reason. The happiness of the subject and the glory of the sovereign are inseparably connected.

With such a government no reasonable subject can find fault. Separate from human action, there is not a rational being in the world that will complain of it. Even lost spirits would eulogize it did they not feel the weight of its tremendous power.

But no sooner is what is thus beautiful in theory brought to bear on the conscience and the heart than it fills the world with rebellion. All ages, characters and ranks break out into open revolt. In the abstract no one can find any fault with it, but in the application it is insufferable.. Human nature will not submit to it.

Here, then, comes up the test—the Bible as revealing the character and government of God. Every one busies himself to find where lies the grand difficulty—how a system that appears so beautiful in theory should seem nothing but injustice and oppression in practice.

One, disowning revelation altogether, turns over the volume of Nature, and inspects carefully every page. He discovers that there has been an "eternal succession," or that the world is the offspring of "chance," or the result of "evolution," going on millions of years. Consequently there is, and can be, no "first cause."

Another, admitting that there is a God, reads once the Statute Book, but finds it full of contradictions and absurdities. He cannot imagine how the prophets could foretell future events, or Joshua stop the sun by a word, or Moses pass through the Red Sea on dry land, while Pharoah and his hosts were swallowed up and drowned. Or he cannot find room enough in the Ark to contain all the animals, nor water enough anywhere to drown the world. Consequently the Bible is a deception. There is a God, but He takes no cognizance of human actions—a King, but no moral government.

A third, admitting the Bible to be from God, reads over the laws it contains, and at first is satisfied with them. His heart approves them all. But he comes to the penal code, and here he finds a difficulty. To this section his heart will not submit. What! man denounced as a rebel, and threatened with eternal punishment! It is inconsistent with divine goodness; it is unreasonable and cruel; it is the doctrine of devils! Consequently Sheol is the grave and Gehenna the valley of Hinnom. "The worm that never dies" lived but thirty years, and "the fire that is never quenched" went out eighteen centuries ago.

This granted, or, in other words, man's accountability destroyed, and justice struck from the constellation of divine attributes, and his heart does not rebel against the wreck that remains, it perfectly accords with what he would have the divine government to be. Therefore this must be what the Bible teaches.

Another reads the sacred volume, and he does not object to a moral government, nor to penal sanctions. But he finds the great difficulty at another point: Three cannot be one, nor one three. This, he avers, contradicts both reason and philosophy, though the subject itself may be beyond the reach of all analogy and philosophical investigation. But why does he stop to cavil at a doctrine which angels round the throne do not understand? The reason is obvious. Admit this as a truth of revelation, and what follows? The atonement, man's entire depravity, the necessity of a change of heart, and salvation by grace—the very doctrine which his soul abhors. Strike out these doctrines from the Book of God, and he would not care whether three made one or forty.

Thus does every man assume his own feelings as the standard of rectitude, and according to them he modifies the divine government; or, rather, each one makes a government to suit himself. One will have it that there is no God, i. e., he does not want any such being to exist in the universe. Another has no objection to a God IF he does not assume the character of a moral governor. Another permits even the existence of moral law, but they must be without penal sanction. To any other than these his heart will not submit. Another cannot bear the thought of human depravity. Doctrines that even approach it he views with suspicion. He lays hold on fallen man and elevates him to the neighborhood of angels, dresses him out in the robes of innocence, and then talks of his purity and divinity.

But there is a great mistake in this mode of investigation. The divine government is what it appears to be. It is not liberty at a distance, and despotism at hand. It is not harmonious and beautiful in theory, and all that is oppressive and vile in application. "The law is holy, and the commandment is holy, just and good."

But the grand difficulty lies in the heart. That is the source of all these contradictory creeds and discordant opinions, which now deluge the moral world. It is not because the Bible is not a plain book, and the divine laws reasonable, but because man is a wilful rebel. The sun is all right but the dial is wrong. It has never been adjusted to the pole. Let a man look into his heart, and he will see the reason why the government of God produces such restiveness, murmuring and rebellion. He who does this finds no occasion to blot out or modify what the Bible reveals. It is just what it ought to be. It honors God—it meets the wants of man, and promotes the happiness of the universe.

JESUS IS OUR KING.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

"Mr. Dickson's theme forever was, Jesus is my King."—Southern Presbyterian.

Right onward be your watchword
Ye leaders of the host;
Bear on His blood-stained banner,
Your talisman and boast.
And forth from every conflict
Its folds in triumph bring,
For Jesus is our captain,
For Jesus is our King.

The day of toil is pending,
The night of ease is past,
The tramp of marching armies,
The trumpet's pealing blast,
Are calling to the onset,
And let the summons ring
Till all the world shall hear it
For Jesus is our King.

Around your Captain rally,
And bear with Him the brunt;
Behold Him beckon onward,
Behold him at the front:
Let not your courage falter,
But to the combat spring,
The battle must not waver
For Jesus is our King!

Read well your marching orders,
Go ye to all the world,
And wide o'er every nation
His banner be unfurled;
Nor stay till every creature
Shall to His standard cling,
And join the glad hosanna
To Jesus as our King.

This war will not be always,
The time is near at hand,
When ye shall doff your armor,
And go at His command:
When militant no longer,
But 'neath His potent wing
His Church shall be triumphant,
For Jesus is our King.

The King Himself in glory,
Upon the throne of light,
By angel hosts escorted,
Shall yet return in might,
And all His chosen gather
Their victories to sing
Within the courts of heaven,
For Jesus is our King.

THE AVERAGE SALARY IN THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The article signed "C." and headed "We are in Danger," in the PRESBYTERIAN of March 12th, is in danger itself of misleading the reader, and of producing an impression abroad as to the honesty of our churches and the support of the ministry much below the warrant of fact. Unintentionally of course. "C." is not alone in error. Our genial brother, usually exact in his statements, the Synod's Agent of Sustentation set the example of a fall into the same error, in that part of his report which refers to ministerial support as made by him at the last meeting of Synod. The wide discrepancy as alleged, between the salary (average) promised, and that which is paid is indeed painful, and "alarming" also, if true. But is it true? Let us see. Take up Orange Presbytery for example, as it is first named.

The Presbyterial Agent says $850 is the average salary promised. He ought to know, and does know; so we suffer his figures to pass unchallenged. Next, the tables in the minutes of the General Assembly, show the amount of actually paid salaries. Presuming these are entirely correct the total footing is $15,160. Now, by what number shall we divide this amount to get at the average salary paid? Orange Presbytery reports 30 ministers on its roll. If we divide by 30 we have the average given us by "C." and before him, by Bro. Hill, $505. But would this be a correct representation of the average salary paid? Among these 30 ministers in Orange there are four marked W. C. unemployed by any of the churches in the Presbytery and getting no salary from them. Ought they to be counted? We find also three other ministers without charge in the same sense i. e. not settled over churches on a salary, but teaching or acting as Agents for others. Ought these to be counted? One other minister is laboring in another Presbytery though his name is still on the roll of Orange. Must he be counted? And shall we count Mr. Primrose, the Evangelist, unless his salary is added to the column for salaries? And there is Mr. J. whose name should not be counted, because there is no report of salary paid from either of his churches not because more has been paid him, as we know, but through some unaccounted omission on the part of these churches to send up the usual reports. Well, here are already ten names to be stricken from the roll, if you are to get at a fair estimate of the average salary paid in Orange last year. But we will not take off eight only in order to balance with churches which paid salaries to ministers who did not belong to the Presbytery, or to licentiates. Divide $15,160 by 22 and we have $699 or say $700 for the average of salaries actually paid in this Presbytery. Nearly $200 more than we are required to believe it is. By a similar equitable reduction of the divisors much larger and much more correct quotients will be obtained for the other Presbyteries. About $700 for Concord, Fayetteville, and Mecklenburg, about $600, and $900 for Wilmington. About $700 in the Synod paid, against $782 promised.

We are not defending the delinquencies of churches and of church members in this matter of prompt and full payment to the last cent of the amount promised their ministers. There is wide margin here for lamentation and shame. Only, it is simple justice to the Church at large to be exceedingly careful in our statements with regard to matters which involve her integrity and good name as nearly as this does.

ALMS.

MR. EDITOR—There are two things on which we need a revelation: first, our duty; second, the manner of performing it. In giving alms all have the needed instruction. Nature itself seems to teach by plain and necessary inference this duty. It is very plain that God has made all things for himself; that in and through them he should show forth his declarative glory to an intelligent universe. It is equally plain that God has not made anything entirely and exclusively for itself. The different parts of inanimate nature are linked together by invisible but indissoluble ties, showing their relation to and dependence upon each other. When we come to animated nature, as we ascend the scale of being we find this truth illustrated and established. When we come to man, the lord of creation in this lower world, we find that they are united by so many ties and bound by so many cords, that they have it in the power of their hand to do much for or against each other. They may bear each other's burdens and help each other's faith. Or, one sinner may destroy much good and do much evil. The light of nature would seem to teach that men should give alms. This duty is made very plain in the Bible. The law of Moses required the Jews to give the tenth of all their increase for charitable purposes. But in order that the largest liberty might be enjoyed, and that they might have the most abundant room for the exercise of their benevolent feelings, there were the thank offering, and the free-will offering, where the amount to be given was left to each one's conscience in the sight of God. Under the Gospel this duty is enjoined by commands and encouraged by promises. Our Saviour says, "Give and it shall be given unto you good measure, pressed down and running over;" "Give alms of such things as you have;" "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will He pay him again." The duty of giving alms is made very plain in the Bible. The manner of performing this duty is also clearly understood. This duty must be done cheerfully—not grudgingly or of necessity—for the Lord loveth the cheerful giver. This must be done liberally, for the apostle says "Let each one lay by him on the first day of the week as the Lord has justified him, so that to whom much is given from the same much will be required, to whom little is given from the same little will be required." Alms are to be done, not for display, not to be seen of men, but for the glory of God: "Take heed that ye do not your alms to be seen of men, otherwise ye have no reward of your father which is in heaven; but do them in secret, and your father who sees them in secret shall reward you openly." W. W. P.

A SAILOR'S DEATH GRIP.

A sea captain related, at a prayer-meeting in Boston, a thrilling incident in his own experience: "A few years ago," said he, "I was sailing by the Island of Cuba, when the cry ran through the ship, 'Man overboard!' It was impossible to put up the helm of the ship, but I instantly seized a rope and threw it over the ship's stern, crying out to the man to seize it for his life. The sailor caught the rope just as the ship was passing. I immediately took another rope, and making a slip-nose of it, attached it to the other, and slid it down to the struggling sailor, and directed him to pass it over his shoulders and under his arms, and he would be drawn on board. He was rescued, but he had grasped that rope with such firmness, with such a death grip, that it took hours before his hold relaxed and his hand could be separated from it. With such eagerness, indeed, had he clutched the object that was to save him, that the strands of the rope became imbedded in the flesh of his hands." This illustrates the fact that God has let down from heaven a rope to every sinner on earth. Every strand is a precious promise, and we ought to be so intensely eager to secure these promises as to lay hold on them as for our lives, and grasp them with tenacious grip.

TUSKALOOSA SEMINARY.

The following letter was first published in the Christian Intelligencer:

TUSKALOOSA, ALA., Feb. 6, 1879.

Rev. B. T. Lacy, D.D.:

MY DEAR BROTHER—I wish to suggest a few points in regard to the work of training a colored ministry, which you might use in some quarters in helping forward this good cause. I have always looking upon it as a part of the foreign missionary cause, so dear to the hearts of all God's people. The objects of our efforts dwell in our own land, but, like the American Indians, they are of a race foreign to ourselves, and have such marked peculiarities as to need particular treatment and a particular class of ministers. All the arguments, and they are many and strong, for raising up a native ministry in each heathen land we undertake to evangelize, apply with full force to the case of the colored people in America, and yet they have very few ministers of their own race capable of instructing them. Very many, who control immense congregations, are the personifications of ignorance and superstition. Then, as a general thing, they refuse to remain under the guidance of white ministers, and greatly prefer their own colored preachers. It is an encouraging fact, however, that they have begun to see the incompetency of those they now they have, and the desire for an educated ministry is growing every day. There is a disposition among them to look to Presbyterians for a sound and thorough education. We now have five Methodists in our Institute, and could have many more if they had the means of paying their board. Already our institution has borne valuable fruit. One student from near Memphis left us last summer to engage in his work. He proved very acceptable and useful. We had pleasing testimony that he was greatly benefited by the two years of instruction he enjoyed here, but the master called him suddenly away. He died in the midst of his work, and of hopeful prospects of usefulness.

A second, who was here about two years, has charge of a large and flourishing church at Greensboro, Ala., forty miles south-east of this place. He was at first ignorant and a blunderer, but is now a good and useful man. We were anxious to keep him longer in the institute, but his conference sent him to Greensboro. We have reason to believe that his fitness to preach was greatly increased while here, and he cherishes a very high regard for our school.

A third is at Eutaw, thirty-five miles south of us, in charge of a large church, and also of a large school. He bears a fine character, is very popular, and our brethren there tell us he is doing good.

A fourth has charge of an important church at Livingston, sixty miles south, and is doing a good work. He made decided improvement when here, and tries to induce other students to come to us. The pastors of four colored Methodist churches in and near our city, and at this time connected with the institute, are diligent and delighted. Thus you see that with all the disadvantage of short and irregular attendance, our labors here have accomplished no small amount of good. Our view is, that while it is desirable to give them all a full course, even a partial one is a great help. Many are irregular in attendance for want of means. They are compelled to stop and suspend their studies for a while and teach school, or engage in some work that will furnish the means to enable them to return to the school. One of our most prominent and promising students left us two weeks ago for this purpose.

I have given you these facts as being worth more than all the theoretical arguments we could use. I think that the Church is getting more and more to see that this is the most practicable and the most potent means of evangelizing this people. One fact more. Of the eighteen who have been connected with our school, and remained with us for any length of time, we have not had one bad case. I do trust God will give you access to the hearts of those who love Him, and who feel an interest in this needy people. The collections from our churches have been meagre thus far. We are obliged to aid some of our students out of the general fund for current expenses. One who came with the promise of support by his Presbytery is thrown on our hands, so that we have to husband our slender resources very carefully.

Our new Professor, Dr. Kerr, is getting on pleasantly in his work. I was in the school to-day. The students appear interested and diligent. They say the Professor gives them enough to do, and they feel that they are improving. I hope you are meeting with more encouragement—enough, at least, to warrant your continuance in the work. The times are unpropitious, but we hope for an improvement. We must work and wait and look to God for His blessing.

Yours very truly in Christ,
C. A STILLMAN.

P. S.—The two additional boxes of books have been received in good order, opened, and placed on the shelves of our library, to which they are a valuable addition. I wish you to express to the generous donors our sincere thanks for them. C. A. S.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Rev. W. Holland, a Primitive Methodist clergyman, having received orders from the Spanish governor to quit the island of Fernando Po within forty-eight hours, the Primitive Methodist Society of London has appealed to the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to obtain redress if possible. The Secretary promises to do all in his power.

Dr. Fairebairn of Airedale College is giving a course of lectures on the "Science of Religion."

The Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow has come to a decision condemning the running of tramway cars on Sunday. This indicates views in direct opposition to those of the United Presbytery on the same question.

There is great complaint in Great Britain now over the distraining for tithes which seems to have received fresh impetus of late. At Hornbury, where tithes had not been demanded for ten or twelve years, the Vicar of Wakefield made a demand on a well-to-do farmer, a Wesleyan. The claim was resisted and "one easy chair in leather" was seized and sold by auction. Opposition in strength is organizing. Welsh Nonconformists at Chester resisted action for distraint brought by Rev. T. L. Hope against the keeper of the Primitive Methodist Chapel. A clock and chiffonniere were sold by auction in the case. For twenty years the Primitive Methodists of Chester have not paid tithes. These things will certainly hasten disestablishment.

Five of the nine Cabinet Ministers of France are Protestants. This, so far as it goes, carries a favorable outlook for the Protestant faith in that country; but then it must be remembered that there are but 600,000 Protestants out of a population of whom 30,000,000 are Roman Catholics, or about 1.60 per cent. It is certainly a significant fact that with so small a portion of the French Protestants—though they are far from being thoroughgoing Romanists—France should select the most of her counsellors from those professing the Protestant faith.

The will of Mr. Henry Gardner of Hyde Park, who died in January last, has been proved. He made the following bequests: £10,000, free of legacy duty, to the School for Indigent Blind, St. George's Fields; £10,000 to the Association for Promoting the General Welfare of the Blind, 125 Euston-road; and £10,000 to the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read, Upper Avenue-road, Regent's-park. A sum of £300,000, free of legacy duty, is directed to be set apart and to be applied for the benefit of the blind persons in England and Wales, and the executors and executrix, together with the Bishop of London, are appointed a committee for its management.

The anniversary meeting of Mildway Conference of Second Adventists was held this month and was a notable affair. Rev. Horatius Bonar addressed the meeting on "The duty of taking heed to the more sure word of prophecy," and was followed by Rev. A. Fonsset, M. A., on the same theme. These exercises were appropriately accompanied and varied with prayer and praise. Leaders, clerical and lay, from every section of the Christian Church are said to have been present.

The Baptists have 36,776 members and 148 churches. Last year they numbered 35,210.

Mr. Rassam has discovered a cylinder of Sennacherib dated B. C. 700. It will probably help to decide the exact year of Sennacherib's expedition against Hezekiah.

Three thousand persons in the south of France, calling themselves "Catholic Free Thinkers," want to break from Rome and call Protestant pastors.

Recent correspondence from Zanzibar reports the murder in the Unyamwesi country of Mr. Penrose of the English Church Missionary Society, together with sixty-three attendants. It is also announced that Mr. Thompson of the London Missionary Society has died at Ujiji of sunstroke.

The Presbyterian General Assembly of Victoria, Australia, reports 15,000 members and 62,000 attendants at public worship.

An item of special interest has just come to hand from the city of Sapporo, in the northern island Yezo. It will be remembered that, in this city, President Clark, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, established an agricultural institution under the direction of the Japanese government. His account at the time of the moral and religious impressions produced upon the students was of striking interest. At the request of President Clark, a Methodist missionary from Hakodote has visited Sapporo and baptized twenty-two of the students and expects soon to organize a vigorous church there.

In London, England, the Sunday schools number 841, with 19,861 teachers and 230,084 scholars.

£80,000 is now the amount of the Wesleyan Thanksgiving Fund.

MISCELLANY.

The Empress of Austria has arrived in Ireland.

In Boston it is estimated there are eight miles frontage of grog shops; in New York city thirty miles.

The Protestant minister's wife at Cermans, in Spain, was recently attacked with knives and stones. She saved her life by crawling under some benches in the chapel.

One of the oddest transformations has lately taken place in the London newspaper world is seen in the case of Mayfair, which has become an organ of the Ritualistic party.

The gas wells of East Liverpool, Ohio, it is said, furnish a continual supply of light and heat to the town, and as the gas costs nothing the street lamps are never extinguished. It is used almost exclusively for fuel, being conducted into the gates and stoves by pipes. For twenty years this has been going on, and there are no indications that the supply of gas is giving out.

The United States sends 460 missionaries to foreign lands, Germany more than 500, and Great Britain 1,000.

The $10,000 missionary steamboat for the navigation of the Congo River will soon be afloat on that stream, to the delight of the Africans, most of whom never saw any such missionary machinery.

DEATH OF THE OLDEST MINISTER IN THE WORLD.—There died last Monday, at Elbust, in Shetland, the Rev. Dr. Ingram, Free Church minister. He was in the 104th year of his age. Four generations of the Ingrams live in one house in Scotland, the deceased centennarian's eldest son, himself an old man, being also a Free Church Minister. Up till a short time ago Dr. Ingram was well, and able to move about, but deaf. Travellers came long distances to see the old man, and occasionally a stranger would go up to a hale old gentleman on the road and inquire where Dr. Ingram was to be seen. "I am Dr. Ingram," was the prompt reply, to the astonishment of the inquirer. He was ordained in 1803. When he settled in Unst, the Shetland Isles were noted for drunkenness and a low state of morality. He at once became a teetotaller, never tasted strong drink, and by the power of his example and influence he undoubtedly brought about great improvement among the people.—Christian Signal.

The American missionaries of the Foo Chow Methodist mission, China, are soon to leave the coast and go into the interior, the native members of the Conference being fully able to carry on the work.

In 7,000 church-yards of England Dissenters are excluded from burial unless by an Episcopal minister. And yet all denominations are taxed to keep up the establishment.

The Presbyterians of Canada have gone into the work of evangelizing the Roman Catholics of their Dominion with great earnestness. It is stated that there are now twenty-one French Presbyterian ministers in charge of French congregations in Canada, with elders, deacons, communion rolls, and all other features of a Presbyterian Church.

The Baptist Missionary Union supports two colleges, one in Burmah and one in India, for the higher culture of Christian young men; and two theological seminaries for training a native ministry, besides a mission-school for each missionary to fit the native helpers for their work.

NEARER VIEWS OF GOD.

Humility and repentance are the result of large acquaintance with God. Job said: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee." It expresses two kinds of knowledge—the one speculative, the other practical. He had formerly a distant and vague acquaintance with God, without contemplating him by that faith "which seeth him who is invisible." He now has an intimate, a deep and practical sense of God, very different from the mere vague conceptions he had when he only heard of him; that knowledge which is practical, deep, intimate, and profound. The two effects were humility and repentance. Humility is produced by the sight of his greatness, repentance by a knowledge of his purity. It is the union of these that forms the idea of God.—Dr. Robert Hall.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1879.

PRESBYTERIAL OVERSIGHT.

By our constitution each Presbytery is charged with the oversight of its churches, and of their work for the Master. No pastor can be installed nor can one leave his charge or be dismissed by his people without the consent of Presbytery. Church records and sessional reports are required at short and regular intervals in order that the higher court may examine and learn the character of the work done by those whose records and reports are under review. Presbytery reports to Synod, "We have ten, twenty, or a hundred churches under our care."

These facts show that Presbytery is charged with pastoral responsibility and is endued with pastoral authority in the case of every one of its churches. The extent of its authority may be determined by a fair and full interpretation of our constitution and the extent of authority will also define the limit of reponsibility. A brief examination will show that both are very large. Two provisions mentioned in the Book of Government will suffice. The Presbytery has power "to visit particular churches for the purpose of inquiring into their state and redressing the evils that may have arisen in them—and in general to order whatever pertains to the spiritual welfare of the churches under their care." Here is large and high authority, and with it responsibility enough to appal the most careless. The truth is that our Presbyteries have powers so large and so vital, that it is almost vain to expect activity and impulse and healthy growth where those powers are left to rust in disuse, or to be covered with the rubbish of bad precedents, of immemorial neglect, and of customs which are suited to a congregational rather than a Presbyterial form of church polity. It is in vain to expect the Presbyterian Church to prosper if the Presbyteries neglect their work—that is—if they demit their authority, and for any reason leave the control and oversight of the churches. Congregational churches may prosper because they have power to act in all things for themselves. Presbyterian churches neglected by Presbytery and restrained in action by want of Presbyterial authority must, ordinarily, languish and decline. Other causes may interpose, and the effect of the neglect may be prevented by them, but decay and loss are the result of the failure of Presbytery whenever that failure is left unhindered, to work out its own tendency.

There are some who say that there has been a relative decline going on among us for many years, and that while we have gained in numbers we have not gained as others have whose opportunities in the outset were not better than ours. It is a plain case that our progress has not kept pace with that of some other churches. And this may in part explain it. Our Presbyteries may perhaps have failed to use their pastoral office as they might. But shall we not plainly speak the truth? For two generations a semi-congregational spirit has been prevalent among us. The churches have been left to themselves; the Presbytery never interfering unless called in by the Church. A late effort at closer and more authoritative dealing by one of our Presbyteries was considered so strange and suspicious by many, that after a trial it was dropped with the conviction among its friends that the Church had been left to itself too long, and that now the lines of authority must be occupied only by degrees, and the Church must be trained and educated in the true and vital pinciples of Presbyterian Church Government. The fault of this lies with the Presbyteries. If they had not neglected much of what ought to be considered their proper pastoral work, this state of things could never have existed. This is said with great respect and indeed with profound reverence for our constituted authorities. But we love and reverence still more profoundly our Presbyterian Church and the cause of Christ committed to her hands.

And not lightly, but candidly and sadly, we say, again, our Presbyteries have failed habitually and for years to meet their pastoral responsibilities and the Church has suffered.

We are not seeking to lay the blame of this default upon other shoulders. We take to ourselves our own appropriate share. But write for a purpose. We desire to fix the attention of our brethren upon this important matter and to enlist them in the work of remedy. We would put forward and press the question "Is there anything that we can do to make our Church more efficient and aggressive?" And if the thought of the Church can be turned to these questions of practical and present importance, our aim will be fully accomplished.

We will endeavor to suggest in a general way some points in which Presbyterial care and authority seem to be needed.

1. We have said that every church is under the pastoral care of Presbytery. Does it receive that care? When a pastor is installed over one of our congregations, does not the Presbytery thenceforward leave the care of that congregation—not mainly but—wholly to that pastor and the session of the church? Would it not be more in accordance with the true state of things for the Presbytery to report to Synod, "We have so many churches under the care of—not of the Presbytery,—but of the pastors and sessions of the different congregations respectively?"

But, it may be urged, the Presbytery does discharge its pastoral duty by the hands of the pastors and sessions of churches.

This is granted in part. But, suppose the pastor preaches heresy. Suppose he is unfaithful, and the session inefficient. Has the Presbytery nothing to do in the premises? And is it not a part of its duty to know well and minutely what is the condition of affairs in its churches? So that if there be evils to be redressed, the remedy may be promptly and wisely applied? Is it not certain that the work of Presbyterial oversight does not cease with the installation of a pastor?

2. Vacant churches need even more care—especially those which are isolated and feeble. They ought to be aided with counsel and suggestion, as well as with money—in securing the ministry of the word. Unemployed or partly employed ministers ought to be fully employed; the undeveloped capacity for church work of our ruling elders ought to be developed and employed. All these things require the full wisdom and authority of the Presbytery, and of course require the closest possible oversight, attention and care.

3. There are duties from the churches to their pastors as well as from the pastors to their churches. The Presbytery having full authority in the premises, ought to see that these duties are not neglected.

4. Churches ought to be grouped and arranged in pastorates in such in a way as to make the smallest possible demand for aid upon the Sustentation Fund, so that larger benefits may be secured from that which is now given, and so that larger amounts may come into the Committee's hands.

All these things call for patient attention, cautious and conscientious oversight and care. If ever there was a time for merely formal working in ruts and routine paths that time is past. And now every motive of duty calls our Presbyteries to vigorous, watchful and persistent action.

In order to reach this end, it seems to us that one of our customs must be given up. Our Presbyteries ordinarily meet on Wednesday night in town or village. And it is understood from the beginning that the sessions must not extend over the coming Sabbath. And this thought exerts an influence in many ways upon the quality and extent of the work that is done. Discussion and deliberation are often repressed, and interest in important matters is put away and suffered to cool rather than pass the limit of time assigned by immemorial custom. If our Presbyteries intend to do their work fully and faithfully, they will need first of all to take time enough for its performance.

This matter seems to us to be of more pressing importance than any other that is now demanding the attention of the Church. The needs of the present and the needs and hopes of the future urge this duty upon every Presbytery within our bounds.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The Church may well rejoice to know that this noble institution is training a goodly band of young men for the Gospel ministry. (See notice of catalogue in book column.) While there is such financial depression everywhere, and so much said about an over-supply of ministers and the greedy applicants by scores for any vacant pastorate, that in some quarters candidates are diminishing, young men are being "scared" away from considering the question,—"why should we not preach the Gospel.'—it is gratifying that in Union Seminary the Junior or entering class is the largest of the three. We have not enough active, working, faithful, acceptable ministers. Abundant work in white fields awaits many more servants and pious laborers. True, there are not large salaries and soft births, ready for young or old theologians, where they may lie and enjoy their 'otium cum dignitate.' Good soldiers of Christ must endure hardness for the Master. But there is work to be done and there is support for the worker. We must learn to thank God for our manna given day by day, and roll on Him our care for the future.

Large accessions are annually needed to fill the depletion in the ranks of the ministry from deaths and disabilities arising from the infirmities of age, and sickness.

Two of the Professorships,—namely, that of Theology, filled so worthily by Dr. Dabney, and that of Ecclesiastical History and Polity by Dr. Peck—are not endowed. They ont to be, that this Seminary might be more thoroughly equipped for its great work. As we read of large sums just given to many worthy literary and benevolent institutions, we can but pray that God would put the good thought into the hearts of some of His children, whom He has entrusted with wealth, to endow these chairs amply for His glory, and as a thank offering for unmerited but continued Divine favor. We took occasion not long ago, to press our Christians to duty of remembering God's claims, when they were devising their property. Too many forgot God entirely then.

It is proposed to prepare a general catalogue of the Seminary. Prof. B. M. Smith requests each Alumnus to send him at once the date of his graduation or leaving the Seminary; time and place of Licensure, Ordination, and Installation, and by what Presbytery; and changes in his field of labor, and title and time of publication of any works of which he is the author.

ROME'S INFLUENCE.

But a week or two since a Presbyterian minister in Nashville, Tenn., preached a sermon enjoining honesty upon the State as upon individuals, and the Legislature went out of the way to consider the matter and pass a vote of censure, which, however, they soon reconsidered and expunged.

Here is another case of legislative action, that of Illinois. We give the account from a correspondent of the Presbyterian:
